Admission —A Plaintiff may rely on the admissions of Defendant as to his title in proof of his claim just as much as on any other evidence, and if a Defendant goes into the witness-box and admits his title there is no further onus upon him to prove it, at least as against such Defendant. An erroneous statement made without knowledge in an affidavit filed as a matter of routine by a person whose authority to make it was not proved, could not bind a party to a proceeding, nor affect the character of a sale held in such proceeding under the provisions of sec. 124, Act I.B.C. of 1879, so as to confer upon the auction-purchaser a right which he could not obtain by the sale itself. Janardan Singh v. Adoption — Limitation Act (IV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 118 — Suit by reversioner to recover possession on death of female owner from person alleged to have been adopted by her — Mahomedan law, adoption if permitted by—Family custom against alienation by female who has got property by gift from sonless father—What evidence relevant —Omission to bring within the period prescribed by Art. 118 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (of 1877), a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid or never in fact took place is no bar to a suit by the reversioner for recovery of possession upon the death of the female limited owner. Thakur Tribhuvan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshwar Bakhsh Singh , I. R. 33 I. A. 156; s. c. 10 C. W. N. 1095-1906, followed. Under the general Mahomedan Law an adoption cannot be made and if made will not carry with it any right of inheritance. Held , on the evidence, that the alleged family custom, viz., that a female could take only a life interest in property which had come to her by gift from her sonless father and had no power to alienate it by a gift in her life time was not only not proved but disproved in this case. Evidence of a custom limiting the right of a widow in her deceased husband's property was not evidence from which the custom alleged could be inferred. Nor was evidence that a Muhammedan father had been prevented by some local custom from giving the bulk of his property to one of his sons, evidence which had any bearing on the issue as to the existence of the alleged custom. MUHAMMAD UMAR KHAN v. Adverse possession — Quere :—Whether adverse possession against the mortgage for the statutory period operates to extinguish the rights of the mortgagee under a properly executed mortgage. NANDA KUMAR DEY v. AJODHYA SAHU ...	351

Adverse possession—contd.

— Co sharers—Possession by one tenant in common when adverse to others—Non-participation for a long time, effect of. In order to establish adverse possession by one tenant in common against his co-tenants, there must be exclusion or ouster and the possession subsequent to that must be for the statutory period. Mere non-participation of rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to exclusion but such non-participation or non-possession may in the circumstances of a particular case amount to an adverse possession. What the circumstances may be which may have to be considered in determining the question of ouster, discussed. AYENUNUSSA BIBI v. SHEIKH ISHAK ...	849

Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 2, 47, Or. XXI, r. 66—Interlocutory order in execution when appealable as decree—Order determining value of property to be sold in execution Every order passed in execution proceeding is not appealable. The order to be appealable as a decree must conclusively determine the rights of the parties. Bhary Lal Pandit v. Kedur Nath Mullick, I. L. R. 18 Cal. 469 (1891), applied. No appeal lies against an order by which the value of property directed to be sold under a decree has been assessed at a certain figure according to the statement of the decree-holder. Singani Achi v. Subrahmanya Ayyar, I. L. R. 27 Mad. 259 (1903), approved; Singani Naicker v. Ratnasuni Naicker, I. L. R. 23 Mad. 568 (1900); Ganga Prosad v. Raj Coomor Singh, I. L. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 115, 104, sub sec. (2, 15), Or. 21, r. 90, Or. 43, r. 1, cl. (j)—Sale in execution, application to set aside on ground of fraud before new Code came into force—Order passed since if open to second appeal—General Clauses Act (IX of 1897), sec. 6, cl. On the 12th June 1909, the application was again dismissed but on appeal the order was set aside and the case once more remanded on 29th January 1910. Held—That a second appeal against the order of remand did not lie under the new Code [Act V of 1908, Or. 21, r. 90 and sec. 101, sub-sec. (2) read with Or. 43, r. 1, cl. (j)], which applied to the case. The right of second appeal which the judgment-debtor would have by reason of repealed provisions of the old Code relating to appeals continuing to govern pending cases, had sec. 6, cl. (c) of the General Clauses Act of 1897 alone applied, must be held to have been taken away by the express terms of sec. 154 of the new Code. The words "present right of appeal" means only a right existing on the 1st of January 1909 to appeal against a particular order passed under the former Code and subsisting on that date. The Colonial Sugar Refining Company, Limited v. Irving, [1905 A. C. 369; Horseley Local Board v. Montreux Investment Building Society, 21 Q. B. D. 1 (1889), referred to. Where the lower Appellate Court had held that the application was not time-barred as the applicant was a minor, overlooking the fact that when the sale took place the father of the Applicant was alive so that limitation had already begun running against him: Held—That the fact that the lower Appellate Court overlooked the applicability of sec. 9 of the Limitation Act to the case was not sufficient to justify interference in revision by the High Court. BENOD BIHARI BHADRA v. The reference was heard and dismissed by a Bench of two Judges of that Court. Held—That no appeal lay from that decision to the Privy Council. Sec. 53 of the Land Acquisition Act makes the Code of Civil Procedure applicable only to proceedings before the Court of Reference, and sec. 54, to proceedings in the course of an appeal to the High Court—a special and limited appeal given by the Act from the award of the Court of Reference. The force of sec. 54 is exhausted when the appeal to the High Court is heard, and no further right of appeal is given by the Act. A claimant in Land Acquisition proceedings does not, once he is admitted to the High Court, acquire all the rights of an ordinary suitor, including the right to carry an award made in an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to the Privy Council, as if it were a decree of the High Court made in the course of its ordinary jurisdiction. An appeal does not exist in the nature of things. A right of appeal from any decision of any tribunal must be given by excitement. Sandhu Charity Trustees v. The special and stringent provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to sales is part of a public policy intended for the benefit of all parties concerned. If the landlord wants special results to follow from it under the Act, he must proceed strictly in accordance with its provisions. Where a mortgagee of a tenure gets a decree and purchases the mortgaged tenure at a sale in execution of his mortgage decree, and the tenure is subsequently sold again in execution of a rent-decree against the original tenant, it is open to the mortgagor to fall back on his mortgage as a shield against the purchaser under the rent-sale, when that sale is not free from incumbrances. Akhoy Kumar v. Sub-sec. (8) of sec. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplates a suit which culminates not in a decree but in an order of a limited kind, an order restraining payment out of the money. Turip Mollah, 9 C. L. J. 490 (1909), referred to, Somir Jama v. Mohabharat Baktu, 16 C. W. N. 777 (910, approved). The existence of such a "protected interest" as a right of occupancy is a matter specially within the knowledge of the person claiming it and the onus under sec. 166, Evidence Act, is on him. The proposition that as soon as there is conflict of evidence, the question of onus disappears presupposes not only the existence of evidence on both sides but also consideration of both by the Court, so that where the Court of Appeal below dismissed the Plaintiff's suit on the ground of his failure to discharge an onus wrongly placed on him and ignoring altogether the evidence adduced by the Defendant, the High Court on second appeal interfered. *HARI MONI DEBI v. If therefore an amount shorter than the amount payable was deposited within the prescribed period and the balance paid out of time under an order of the Court the sale could not be set aside. In calculating the amount which the judgment-debtor must deposit, 5 per cent on the purchase-money (even where the purchaser is the decree-holder himself) and costs must be included, but the judgment debtor is not liable to deposit the costs of taking a copy of the decree or of the stamp on the vakalatnama or the poundage-fee. The amount deposited within the prescribed time in this case being sufficient to cover the amount payable after excluding the cost of taking a copy of the decree, of the stamp on the vakalatnama and the poundage-fee, the order of the first Court rejecting an application to have the sale set aside was reversed. A copy of the decree of which execution is sought is not necessary for an application for execution. The authority of a pleader in a case does not terminate with the decree but extends to execution proceedings. A fresh vakalatnama is not therefore necessary for the purposes of execution proceedings. Where the judgment-debtors appealed against an order in execution, treating it as one under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with sec. 47, C. P. C., it was not open to them on second appeal by the decree-holders to urge that such appeal did not lie. Bindeswari Charan Singh v. Lakpat Nath Singh, 15 C. W. Burmese Law—Burmese Law—Marriage—Special ceremonies, if essential—Mutual consent—Consent—Reputation—Marriage with wife's sister—Polygamy. In Burma polygamy is undoubtedly lawful and it is not unlawful to marry the sister of a living wife, though such a marriage is not considered quite respectable, while marriage with a deceased wife's sister is looked upon as proper and even laudable. The law relating to marriage in Burma is extremely lax. No ceremony of any kind is essential. Mutual consent is all that is required. In the absence of direct proof, consent may be inferred from the conduct of the parties or established by reputation. But when proof of marriage depends wholly or mainly on reputation the circumstances of the case must be scrutinised with some caution because the same word which is used to describe a woman lawfully married is applied by the Burmese to a woman living with a man on less honourable terms. *MI ME v. The omission of a statutory officer to perform the public duties as to the settlement of election roll in the manner provided by the Act amounts to doing or forbearing to do something not consonant to right and justice and it is within the jurisdiction of the High Court to issue an order in the form of a mandamus on the officer under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. *In re MR.  Where in a suit to enforce a mortgage, after arguments had been heard and judgment reserved, it appeared from the evidence of the witnesses of the mortgage deed that they were not present at the execution but had put their names on the document at the acknowledgment of the mortgagors, and the Court framed a supplemental issue as to whether the deed had been properly attested: Held—That the Court was empowered to frame and try the additional issue under sec. 149 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Held, further, that apart from that section, every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognisance of questions which cut at the root of the subject matter of controversy between the parties. Whilst the first part of sec. 149 of Act XIV of 1882 leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit, the latter part makes it im-

 The expression "a decree for money against several persons" sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 means a personal decree for payment of money against two or more Defendants jointly. A mortgage decree, even though it may direct the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal amount, is not a "decree for money" within the meaning of that section, and one of the judgment-debtors having obtained an assignment of such a decree may proceed to execute the decree by putting the mortgaged property to sale. Where, however, one of the judgment-debtors had paid off the decree before taking an assignment, although the payments were not certified, there was nothing to pass under the assignment, and the only remedy of the judgment-debtor against his co-judgment-debtor was by a suit for contribution.

 an application for execution of a decree for money, the judgment-debtors having raised objections, the dispute was referred by the executing Court to an arbitrator before whom the judgment-debtor withdrew his objections and the decree-holder consented to have the decretal amount paid in certain instalments.
 The arbitrator purported to embody these terms in an award and the Court subsequently passed a modified decree in terms thereof.
 The decree-holder having applied for execution of this decree more than 12 years after the original decree was passed in his favour, the judgment-debtor objected inter alia that the application was time-barred, that the agreement embodied in the award and the decree based thereon were void under sec. 257A and that this decree was not in compliance with sec. 210 of the Code and was otherwise ultra

 CHATTERJEE, J., agreeing with FRUNON, J., (COXE, J., contra)—That assuming that the proceeding referring the matter to arbitration was altogether null and ultra vires, the arbitration might be treated as a private arbitration, so that the award would be one under sec. 525 and the decree under sec. 526 which it was not open to the parties to challenge or dispute. Per CHATTERJEE, J.—The executing Court had inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the dispute, and any ir-decree having been waived, the party waived, the party waiving such irregularities cannot be allowed to deny its validity. NAGENDRA

—Arbitration—Award going beyond terms of reference, if valid—Party benefited if may repudiate award—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882, sec. 526—Acceptance of award in part, if permissible] The Plaintiff's right of passage along a pathway across the Defendant's land being disputed by the latter, the question of its existence was referred to an arbitrator who found that the pathway did in fact exist as alleged, but he laid out a new pathway in lieu of it, holding that if the thoroughfare was allowed to continue great inconvenience would be caused to the Defendant: Held—That although an arbitrator is allowed greater latitude than Courts of law in departing from rules of practice which Courts have adopted for general convenience, and an arbitrator's award is not open to review on the merits upon grounds of error of law as well as of facts, an arbitrator cannot go beyond the precise questions submitted. But even though the arbitrator may have exceeded his authority, it is not open to the party benefited by the award to take exception to it on that ground, and the Defendant therefore was bound by the award in this case. In a proceeding under sec. 526, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), it is not competent to the Court to direct the award to be filed in part. If the award is bad in part, the Court should refuse the application to file it altogether. NARSINGH NARAYAN SINGH, v. AJUDHYA PRASAD SINGH ... 256

Where the Court of first appeal found on its construction of the wajib-ul-arz and other documentary evidence that the Plaintiffs were the owners of the lands in suit, and the High Court on second appeal, on their construction of the wajib-ul-arz and other documents in the suit, held that the Plaintiffs were not the owners: Held—That the Court of first appeal having misconstrued the wajib-ul-arz the High Court in second appeal was not bound to accept as correct its finding based upon such misconstruction. The wajib-ul-arz is cogent evidence of the rights as they existed when it was made of those holding proprietary or other rights of property within the mouzah. The Government by applying the Chaukidari Act to the mouzah did not alter and could not have altered proprietary rights in the mouzah or any

That it would be to misconstrue entirely the provisions of sec. 596 of Act XIV of 1882 as to concurrent findings of fact if the Judges of India were to have impliedly the duty laid upon them of making their narrative of the circumstances minutely and completely exhaustive, under the penalty that if they failed to do so, the absence from their mind of elementary considerations might be presumed *MIRZA SAJJAD HUSAIN v. governed by the ordinary Mitakshara law. The Defendant's father resisted the suit on the plea that the property had descended to him alone under a custom of primogeniture. Plaintiff obtained a decree in that suit, the plea of Defendant's father regarding the custom of primogeniture being rejected. In a second suit by the Plaintiff for partition of the properties, Defendant who was no party in the former suit, took up the same plea of primogeniture, he being the eldest son of his father: Held—That the Defendant was barred by the rule of res judicata from taking up the same defence. That under sec. 11, Civil Procedure Code, what had to be considered was what the Defendant himself claimed and as, according to his case, he was claiming through his father he was bound by that decision; and the fact that according to the Plaintiff's case the Defendant as a coparcener of his father did not derive his right through his father was no answer to the plea of res judicata. MOWAR KALI CHEN SINGH v. Where it appeared that the original mortgage debt sued upon had trebled and no interest whatever had been paid to the mortgagees and that on the other hand the mortgagees had been compelled to advance money to pay the Government revenue on the mortgaged properties in order to save them from sale for arrears and that to recover the sums so advanced they had been compelled to bring another suit: Held—That it was a fit case for the appointment of a Receiver. As a general rule the right to propose a person for appointment as Receiver belongs to the party interested in obtaining the appointment and effect will be given to his nomination. But if the Court appoints to Receiver at the instance of a mortgagee—the mortgagee not having, without the assistance of the Court, power to appoint a Receiver—then the Court exercises its discretion as to who shall be appointed Receiver and appoints the Receiver whom, having regard to the interest of both mortgagee and mortgagor, the Court considers the best person. THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY COMPANY, LIMITED v. The allowance was further declared to be a first charge upon a specified share of the estate so far as the subsisting mortgages executed by the vendor would allow: Held—That the allowance payable as annuity could not be regarded as a debt or even as a portion of the consideration for the conveyance, payment of which was deferred, and no instalment of such allowance could be attached under r. 46 of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code until it should have actually fallen due. XLI, r. 22, sub r (1) of the Civil Procedure Code is comprehensive enough to admit of a cross-objection being preferred by one Respondent against another. As a general rule, the right of any Respondent to urge a cross-objection should be limited to his urging it only against the Appellant, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one Respondent may urge a cross objection as against another Respondent; but as to this no exhaustive rule can be formulated and the entertainment of cross-objections against co-Respondents cannot be limited to those cases only where the appeal opens up questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be reopened as between the co Respondents. The true test ought to be whether for the ends of justice it is necessary upon the appeal of one party that the matter should be re-opened so far only as he is concerned or whether the whole case should be reviewed and some of the Respondents allowed to urge a cross-objection against their co Respondents. *JADUNANDAN PRASAD SINGH v. H conveyed certain shares of his property to his two wives and five minor children having previously procured the appointment of P. as the guardian of his minor children in order that the children by their guardian might accept the benefits which he intended to confer upon them. Subsequently he procured the registration of a limited Company to which in return for shares were transferred so much of the property as was retained by H. and the undivided shares thereof which had been conveyed to his wives and his minor children. His adult son and executor E., in 1902, commenced a suit for a declaration that the conveyances by H. to his wives and minor children and the deed of transfer in favour of the Company were invalid. The validity of the conveyances was established in that suit, but the validity of the incorporation of the Company was not expressly determined. In a subsequent suit by the same Plaintiff for a declaration that the Company had not been duly incorporated and that the property conveyed to the Company should be transferred to the persons entitled to the same, it appeared that all the facts on which the later suit was based were known to the Plaintiff and were stated at length in the proceedings in the previous suit and no further evidence would have been needed and nothing was wanting but the addition of an issue on the point. Held —That the point ought to have been raised in that suit, and the present suit was therefore barred by sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Kameshwar Pershad v. The Raja of Tipperah granted sanad chitis to certain tenants permitting the tenant to construct embankments to a silted up tank and to re-excavate the tank, but no rent was reserved for the tank. The tenants acting upon that sanad spent money in re-excavating the tank. Held—That in the circumstances and having regard to a long course of conduct implying the rent-free character of the tank the Raja was estopped from revoking the license granted and from asserting that the subject-matter of the grant should come under a new liability. Ramsden v. Dyson, 1 E. & L. App. 129 (170) (1866); Ahmad Yar Khan v. The Secretary of State, 1 L. R. 28 Cal. 693 (1911); Plimmer v. The Mayor, etc., of Wellington, L. R. 9 A. As the right of assessing rent on the land had not yet accrued, and as the tenants in this case had not asserted a title adverse to the proprietary right of the Raja, the suit was not barred by limitation under Art. 130, Sch. I of the Limitation Act. Beni Pershad v. Dudhnaich, 1 L. R. 27 Cal. 156 (166) (1869); Ishun Chandra v. Ram Ranjan, 2 C. L. J. 125 (1905); Bir Chandra v. Raj Mohan, 1 L. In such view the sanad could not be understood as implying that the Raja intended anything other than the grant of land for the re-excavation of ancient tanks or that he intended that rent should be assessed thereon. "We authorise you to raise a loan of 11 lakhs (or less, if so required) to clear all our present debts on mortgage of our entire estate at an interest of 7 per cent. per annum within the period of one month. We agree to pay you a commission of 5 per cent. on such amount as may be advanced by the capitalist to us" The Defendants did not state what the value of the security was, but the Plaintiffs on their own responsibility represented to the capitalist whom they found that the value of the property would be not less than 20 lakhs, and the capitalist insisted upon satisfactory proof that there was that margin of security before he would agree to make the advance. The negotiation with the capitalist having for this reason fallen through, the Plaintiffs sued for recovery of the stipulated commission: Held—That upon a construction of the contract that the stipulation was not merely to find a capitalist ready and willing to advance the money but also to procure funds for the satisfaction of the debts of the Defendants. That even assuming that the Plaintiffs undertook only to find a person ready and willing to advance the money, they had not done so, as the capitalist whom they found imposed a condition as to the margin of security never proposed or accepted by the borrowers, and at no stage of the negotiations was he ready to accept the estate as it stood as security for the loan, i.e., to advance the funds on the terms prescribed by the principle. Held also—That time was, in the circumstances, of the essence of the contract, and no case had been made out of an extension of time by continuation of bona fide negotiations for completion. Quere—Whether an implied contract, to pay the agent a quantum meruit for his services could be presumed when there was an express contract upon which the Plaintiff's case failed. Held, that no such case having been made by the Plaintiffs, and no evidence given to show upon what scale remuneration could be calculated quantum meruit no relief could be granted on that basis. Quere—Whether the technical meaning ascribed to the expression "to raise a loan" in English cases, implying that the agent who is engaged "to raise a loan," discharges his duty as soon as he finds a creditor who is able and willing to advance money, should be imported in the interpretation of contracts in this country. Held—That where the remuneration of an agent is payable upon the performance by him of a definite under-

V. advanced the money to D. upon B. signing a guarantee to this effect: "In consideration of your having at my request acceded to the proposal of D. to advance to him a sum of Rs. 1½ lacs I hereby bind myself to you to procure a loan within two weeks of Rs. 11 lacs as the first mortgage of the Mills, and to pay you thereout the sum of Rs. 1½ lac agreed to be advanced by you to the Mills." Held—That by this document, B. gave a substantial undertaking that a loan should be procured and out of the loan the sum of Rs. 1½ lac was to be paid to V., and not merely a conditional undertaking that B. would procure the lending of 11 lacs if a first mortgage of the Mills was given and pay thereout Rs. 1½ lacs to V. VISSANJI, SONS, AND COMPANY v. If we fail to do so interest and compound interest shall at the end of every six months be added to the principal and we shall go on paying interest therein at the aforesaid rate until the time of repayment": Held—That, upon a true construction of this bond, the stipulation was that interest should be paid at the rate of Re. 1-9 per cent per month. INDRO DEB DAS v. geniture if may attach to grant of jaghir—Inam and saranjam, distinction in meaning.]

Contemporanea expositio as a guide to the interpretation of documents is often accompanied with danger and great care must be taken in its application. Where the question was as to the extent of properties granted as an appanage to the title of Raja conferred on the grantees by a Government sanad and described therein as "lands attached to Deur," a village in the District of Satara in the Bombay Presidency, and the literal construction confining the grant to the single village mentioned was adopted by neither party, but whilst one party sought to confine it to the properties within the Satara District which would be worth about Rs. 3,000 per annum, the other contended that it covered all the properties within the Bombay Presidency, which yielded a total revenue of Rs. 12,000 a year. Held—That the sanad being a document of a general and informal character and admittedly capable of a variety of constructions, the ambiguity covering the geographical as well as the pecuniary extent of the grant, it was legitimate to consider what was the footing upon which the grantors, viz., the Government and its successors and officials, from the date of the grant and for a long period of time proceeded. Held—That the grant included all the properties in the Bombay Presidency, and the whole of those properties were impartible as an appanage to the title of Raja. Grants of jaghir are personal and not heritable. Being personal and temporary they are necessarily impartible. A custom of succession by primogeniture alleged in respect of a jaghir would not be a subject for proof because such a custom would be radically inconsistent with the personal and non-transmissible character of a grant in jaghir. Held—That the distinction between saranjam and inam drawn by the High Court confining the term saranjam to lands of Satara, was not well-founded. SIRIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAO SAHEB v. In the beginning of 1903, B. S., the latter transferred his share to a stranger. Thereafter the landlord sued Defendant No. 2, who was the sole recorded tenant, for arrears of rent for the years 1907 and 1908 and had the tenure sold. The sale was set aside under sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, (1832), upon the application of the Plaintiff who deposited the whole amount with the statutory compensation to the purchaser. Subsequently he sued for recovery of two-sevenths of the sum deposited from the Defendant No. 1 without making the latter's vendee a party or asking any relief from him. Held—That the Defendant as the recorded tenant was "bound by law" to pay the amount of the decree passed against him, within the meaning of sec. 69, Contract Act, and the Plaintiff as a person interested in the payment of the debt within that section was entitled to be reimbursed by the Defendant No. 1; and the fact that he had transferred his share before the arrears for 1908 accrued due was no defence against the portion of the claim which related to that year. Held further—That the fact that at the date of the institution of the suit the Defendant No. 1 had no interest in the tenure did not put the case outside the scope of Art. 41 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and the provisions of sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, restricting the right of second appeal, did not apply to it. Co-sharer—Co sharer landlord, if may sue for his share of rent when no separate collection—Suit for apportionment, if lies—Prayer for apportionment in rent suit, if entertainable—Parties—Decree for entire rent in favour of all co-sharers when may be made. A co-sharer landlord can maintain a suit for his share of the rent separately if there is an arrangement for separate collection without a division of the lands amongst the co-sharers. The case of Raj Narain Mitter v. Ekadasi Bag, 1 L. R. 27 Cal. 479 (1879), does not lay down that there must be a division of the lands before a co-sharer can maintain a separate suit for his share of the rent. A sale of a share in an estate which has been let out in its entirety to a tenant does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of rent, but if the purchaser desires such severance or apportionment, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect and then if an amicable apportionment cannot be made by arrangement between all the parties concerned the purchaser may bring a suit against the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned making all the co-sharers parties to the suit. Such an apportionment can be asked and effected in the rent suit itself. But where in such a suit the Plaintiff did not ask for an apportionment, though he made all his co-sharers parties, the Plaintiff was entitled to ask for a decree for the entire rent in favour		Court-fee, decree against husband in favour of Government for payment of. Where three persons were found to have acted in concert in having a man arrested with that object, the fact that two of them did not believe the story upon which the charge against the son was based to be true whilst the third believed in its truth was no ground for the exemption of the latter from liability for damages resulting to the father from the conspiracy, for the motive of one conspirator may be different from that of the others. The standard of proof of a conspiracy in a suit for damages resulting therefrom is not in India the same as if the Defendants were being tried on a criminal charge. In the goods of (Gopessur Dutt, Unreported, relied on. A suit for damages resulting from a conspiracy which would be indictable at Common Law lies in British India according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and the Indian Penal Code, by providing for only one form of criminal conspiracy, viz., to wage war against the King, cannot be considered to have taken away this civil remedy either expressly or by necessary implication. Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, followed. A suit brought on a conspiracy must be kept strictly to the cause of action that has been set out in the plaint. If a conspiracy is, as in this case, indictable at Common Law, it gives rise to civil liability if damage has been occasioned by it to the Plaintiff. The present suit being based on two causes of action, viz, 1) to recover the damage occasioned to the Plaintiff as the result of an actionable conspiracy; and 2) to recover damages for malicious prosecution against the Defendants as joint tortfeasors, Held—That the suit though instituted beyond the period of limitation provided for suits for compensation for malicious prosecution was, in regard to the first mentioned cause of action, not barred by limitation, as it was brought within the period provided by Art. 36 or Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, the former article being applicable to the matter; and if it did not apply the latter being applicable. Damage to a substantial amount should be proved by the Plaintiff in order to establish a cause of action for conspiracy, though if substantial damage is proved the damages awarded need not be limited to the precise amount proved. Held—That the Plaintiff should recover the amount he had to spend owing to his arrest, such damage not being too remote. A public officer sued in respect of an act done in bad faith is not entitled to notice under sec. 80, Civil Procedure Code. Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson, I. L. R. 7 Cal. 499 (1881); Raghubans v. Phool Kumari, I. L. R. 32 Cal. 1180 (1905); Muhammad v. Panna, I. L. R. 26 All. 220 (1903), relied on. It is not the law that every person in a joint Hindu family should, merely on the ground that a bomb is found in the joint family residence, be liable to be imprisoned and tried for an offence under the Explosive Substances Act (sec. 5). If the article is found in a portion of the house of which one member of the family has the exclusive use, such member must prima facie be held responsible for anything that is found there. But if the article is found in a portion of the house of which all the members of the family have use then prima facie the kurtu of the family is responsible. But in either case it is only a presumption which may be rebutted and if the Police act on the information, which they believe, showing that the article found in a house is in the exclusive possession of one member of the family and the article is found in a portion of the joint family residence of which all the members of the family have the use, then the head of the family is not liable to arrest merely on the ground that the article is found in a portion of the house to which all the family can resort. *Queen-Empress v. force as the Statute and it is not open to any person to set aside the provisions of such Rules. A careful and accurate record of the first information has always been considered as a matter of the highest importance by the Courts in India, the object of the first information being to show what was the manner in which the occurrence was related when the case was first started. Emperor v. Kumpu Kuki, 11 C. W. N. 554 (1902), referred to. As the first information can be used in evidence under secs. 157 and 158 of the Evidence Act to corroborate or impeach the testimony of the person lodging the first information such a document becomes valueless if drawn up by some person other than the proper informant. As the first information in this case which related to a charge of criminal conspiracy at Mirdapore was drawn up by a police-officer employed in the Criminal Investigation Department in Calcutta and settled by an attorney, held, that it was of no value. The object of recording "case diaries," under sec. 172, Cr. P. C., is to enable Courts to check the method of investigation by the Police, and this object was defeated in this case as the provisions of the law for recording "case diaries" from day to day had been deliberately disobeyed by the Police during the most important period of the investigation. *Queen-Empress v. —, Malicious abuse of civil process, if and when actionable—Decree, invalid execution under erroneous belief in its validity—Trespass, actionable without proof of malice and want of reasonable cause—Want of reasonable and probable cause, if question of law—Second appeal—Damages for trespass—Principle of assessment—Exemplary and nominal damages—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), if creates rights to sue. Where there has been arrest of person or seizure of property in consequence of a civil action which is unfounded, vexatious and malicious, an action for damages may lie against the Plaintiff. Whether there was reasonable or probable cause is a mixed question of fact and law and the High Court in second appeal though bound to accept the facts found is entitled to examine whether the inference drawn from those facts is legitimate. If a litigant executes any form of legal process which is invalid for want of jurisdiction, irregularity or any other reason, and in so doing he commits any act in the nature of trespass to person or property, he is liable therefor in an action of trespass; it is not necessary to prove any malice or want of reasonable or probable cause. Where therefore the Defendant had obtained an attachment of the property of the Plaintiff under an erroneous impression that he had a decree capable of execution, the Defendant was liable to be sued by the Plaintiff for damages for trespass. Clissold v. Cratchley, [1910] 2 K. B. 244, followed. Where land with standing crop on it was attached by the Defendant in execution of a decree which he erroneously believed he held against the Defendant, but the Plaintiff did not ask the direction of the Court or make any the slightest effort for the protection of the crop, which in consequence deteriorated and ultimately became valueless.

Held —That the attachment was not the proximate cause of the loss of the crop, and the Defendant could not be made liable for the value of the crop. The Plaintiff was also not entitled to recover the amount she had to pay to the pleader whom she employed to search the records and ascertain whether there was a valid decree against her in favour of the Defendant. For an act of trespass for which no blame attached to the Defendant he could not be held liable to pay exemplary damages. Only nominal damages (which is not necessarily small damages) should be allowed in recognition of the fact that there has been an infraction of a legal right which is actionable without proof of actual damage or harm. BISHUN SINGH v. The Defendant having in the first half of the year 1906 sold to other persons five parcels of tea amounting in the aggregate to 53,315 lbs. without offering the Plaintiffs the option of buying the same the Plaintiffs sued the Defendant for £500 as liquidated damages in respect of this breach. The Defendant having contended that the stipulation was by way of penalty. Held—That whatever the expression used in the contract in describing such a payment, the question must always be whether the construction contended for renders the agreement unconscionable and extravagant when made and one which no Court ought to allow to be enforced. That, in this case, it was impossible for the parties when making the contract to foresee the extent of the injury which might be sustained by the Plaintiff on breach, that it was obvious that sales in breach of the contract would seriously affect his business, and that having regard to the very uncertainty of the loss likely to arise and to the fact that damage of this kind, though very real, might be difficult of proof and that the proof might entail considerable expense, it was most reasonable for the parties to agree beforehand as to what the damages should be. The Clydebank Engineering Company Limited v. Don Jose Castaneda [1905] App. Cas 6 (1904), followed. That the payment stipulated was by way of liquidated damages fixing once for all the sum to be paid and not merely a penalty covering the damages though not assessing the same; and the Plaintiff, under the circumstances, could not be called upon to adduce evidence of damage actually sustained by him. That the parties to the agreement were merchants using language in the sense in which it is used in their trade, and the expression "part of the crop" did not mean parcels which might to sold over a grocer's counter but parcels such as were in fact sold in the present case. Nor was it intended that if successive parcels forming parts of the same crop were sold a right to claim £500 in respect of each sale would accrue. ROWLAND VALENTINE WEBSTER v. Guardians and Wards Act—Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890, orders apparently under, made without jurisdiction—Proceedings not had bona fide, orders in—Consent obtained by judicial pressure—Judge, no arbitrator.] One D died leaving a minor unmarried daughter by a predeceased wife and three widows. One R with a view to secure the marriage of his son with the girl (so that ultimately the property left by D might pass into the hands of the representatives of his own family) got the maternal grandfather of the girl, who was his servant, to apply for the appointment of himself as the guardian of the property and person of the minor, but no part of D's property had yet vested in her, the widows being according to Hindu law D's heirs. The widows objected to the application, but the District Judge having, owing to a misconception, passed orders directing that unless the widows placed their properties in charge of R he would remove the girl whom they dearly loved from their custody to that of the maternal grandfather, they were induced to grant a lease of of the properties to R, after which they were made to present an application for the appointment of themselves as guardians of the person of the girl and they were formally appointed as guardians. Held —That no guardian was needed for the protection of the person of the girl and she had no property of which a possible guardian could take charge. The application of the widows for appointment as guardians of her person was not voluntary, and the application of the maternal grandfather was not made bona fide, and the orders passed by the Judge were without jurisdiction. Orders passed in proceedings so instituted and conducted, even if they were nominally in conformity with statutory provisions could hardly be regarded as invested with the efficacy of legal orders made in bona fide judicial pro-

Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890, sec. 43, sub-sec. (1), (2) and 4, sec. 45, sub-sec. (1), cl. (a)—Order upon guardian not to marry without Court's leave, disobedience of, if punishable, when order without jurisdiction—Order if may be passed when minor a Hindu—Guardian's failure to produce ward in Court—Guardian if may be fined—"Enforcement" of order meaning of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 39, rr. 1 and 2] Before proceedings can be taken on account of disobedience of an injunction issued by a Court, it must be ascertained that the Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter in controversy. If the Court had no jurisdiction over or had exceeded its powers in granting an injunction in matters beyond its jurisdiction, the injunction must be treated as absolutely void and the person who has disobeyed it cannot be punished for the alleged offence. There is in this respect a clear distinction between an order erroneously made with jurisdiction and an order made absolutely without jurisdiction. Sub-sec. (4) of sec. 43 of the Guardians and Wards Act applies to all cases of disobedience of an order passed under sub-sec. (1) or sub-sec. (2) of that section, whether or not the effect of the disobedience is capable of removal or reparation. Quære—Whether there is any bar to a District Judge giving directions in an order appointing a guardian of the person of a minor Hindu that the minor should not be married by the guardian without the consent of another relation and without the Court's leave, where the guardian appointed is also the guardian for marriage according to Hindu law. Bai Diwali v. Moti Karson, I. L. R. 22 Bom. 504 (1896), referred to. Where it was found that the application upon which the order for appointment of a guardian was made was not made voluntarily: Held—That the order was without jurisdiction and disobedience on the part of the guardian of the directions relating to the marriage of the minor could not be punished under sec. 43, cl. (4) of the Guardians and Wards Act like disobedience of an injunction. Cl. (a) of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act does not contemplate orders on the guardian appointed under the Act for the production of the ward, and such a guardian cannot be fined under the section for failing to produce the ward before the Judge when required. *SAHADRA KOER v. ferential right to adopt as between senior and junior widows—Anumatipatra—Construction—Simultaneous or successive adoptions.] In Bengal as in Bombay, as between co-widows, the senior, that is to say, she whose marriage was earlier, has the preferential right to adopt; the adoption by a junior widow, though earlier in point of time, is void where she adopted without even seeking the senior widow's consent. Where a Hindu executed an anumatipatra as follows:—"In favour of the first wife B. S. and the second wife S. B. * * * I am giving permission that when I shall be no more, each of my two wives shall be at liberty to act according to their own religious tenets by adopting three sons successively, that is one after another." Held—That the anumatipatra did not contemplate simultaneous adoption by the widows but successive adoption in accordance with the rules of law. The proper canon of construction to apply to the instrument is that the Court would consider that the person giving the authority intended his widows to do that which the law allowed and not to do something which was, if not absolutely illegal, very unusual and not practised among Hindus. Akhoy Chunder Bagchi v. Kalapahar Hajji, L. R. 12 I. A. 198; E. C. I. L. R. 12 Cal. 408 (1885), followed. RANJIT LAL KARMAKAR v. BIJOY KRISHNA KARMAKAR ... 440

—Authority to adopt, interpretation of —General authority to adopt one son on death of another, not limited to adoption of two only—Widow if may question validity of adoption—Estoppel.] A Hindu and the owner of a Raj, died leaving a widow (the Appellant) who was then enceinte. According to the widow's own admission, R. before his death gave her authority to adopt in the following terms: "If, God forbid, you give birth to a daughter or if a son be born but die after his birth I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me so that he might perform my shradh ceremony and yours and perpetuate my name and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate. If, God forbid, the son who might be adopted under this authority should die in your life-time you will have power to adopt another boy." A son was born but died shortly afterwards, and three boys adopted one after the death of the other having also died, she adopted a fourth boy, the Respondent, who was the son of a cultivator. Until her quarrel with the Respondent, the Appellant and her advisers invariably regarded the words ascribed by her, according to her recollection, to her husband as giving her a general authority to adopt not limited to or exhausted by two adoptions. Held—That even assuming that she remembered the exact words used by her husband, they expressed a general intention that if one boy died another boy was to be adopted, and the widow had power under that authority, to adopt the Respondent. That so far as she herself was concerned she was, on the evidence, clearly estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption, and her suit to declare the adoption invalid failed on this ground as also on the ground that the adoption of the Respondent was in fact a valid adoption, being covered by the authority given to her by R. There is no substantial difference in principle between the obligation of a person to repay money borrowed and his obligation to discharge a liability created by a judgment of the Court; and it cannot be laid down that the rule of son's liability for father's debts is inapplicable to cases where the liability is created by a judicial decision. Periman Das v. Bhattu Mahton, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 672 (1897), referred to. Semle—It cannot be broadly laid down that in a case where the liability of the father has been embodied in a decree no question can be raised as to the nature of the debt which was sought to be enforced by the decree so as to exempt sons from liability for it. *Sha Wajid Hossain v. for their father's debt under the Mitakshara generally considered. A judgment-debt cannot be regarded as illegal within the meaning of the texts merely because the decision of the Court shows that the act for which the judgment-debtor was held liable in damages was in contravention of the rights of the successful Plaintiff. The son is not bound to do anything to relieve his father from the consequence of his own vicious indulgence, but a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money which he was bound to pay to another would be a debt of the most sacred obligation such as the son would be bound to discharge. Subsequently on the death of A and D the decree-holder sought to execute the decree against the entire ancestral property in the hands of R. R claimed that inasmuch as the debt was his grandfather's he was not liable for the interest. Held—That the wrong being the joint act of the father and grandfather and the liability arising therefrom being that of the father as well as of the grandfather the son was liable for interest. That after the entire property vested in R on the death of A and D, there was no distinction between what was obtained by R by survivorship from them and his own share so as to enable R to compel the decree-holder to proceed first against share of the father and grandfather to the exclusion of his own share. Quere—Whether the rule in *Kishun Pershad v. B got possession after his purchase and continued in possession for considerably over 12 years. Held—That the possession of the property by B was not that of a mortgagee but adverse to that of the mortgagee and the title of the mortgagor's representatives to redeem was lost by adverse possession. The remaining half share was sold in execution of a decree obtained by another creditor of the mortgagor in a suit brought against his representatives and purchased by B and passed by succession to B's heirs: Held—That the Plaintiffs who claimed through the mortgagee had failed to establish any title by way of redemption or otherwise to any interest in the mortgaged property and his suit should be dismissed. Where a howda which was part of the husband's estate had passed into the hands of a stranger and had been recovered by the widow out of the savings of the estate, the inference was that she intended to treat it as part of her husband's estate. Unrealised rents in the hands of tenants cannot be treated as temporary savings by the widow on her own account but should be looked upon as an accretion to her husband's estate. Rivett Carmac v. S. also brought a separate action against the widow for recovery of the property upon declaration of the invalidity of the will, and in this action the parties entered into an agreement of compromise by which (according to the construction put on it by the High Court) it was provided that subject to the enjoyment by the widow for life of the income and profits, the estate would devolve upon S. as an impartible estate. The term "perils of the sea" refers only to fortuitous accidents or casualties of the sea. The words do not cover every loss of which the sea is the immediate cause and so wear and tear do not come within the meaning of those words. Jurisdiction — Jurisdiction of the High Court—Restraint of suit outside the jurisdiction—Persons not residing within jurisdiction—Injunction. The High Court has power only to restrain a person who happens to be within its jurisdiction from prosecuting a suit without its jurisdiction. On the principle of "equity acting in personam" the mere fact that he possesses property, moveable or immoveable, within the jurisdiction but does not reside within it, does not give the High Court jurisdiction over him, since in the event of an injunction being granted against him and that being disobeyed he could not be subjected to the process of contempt. Vulcan Iron Works v. It is not necessary in such a case that the transferor himself should have had his name registered in the landlord's books. Where the landlord sues for such arrears of rent without making the transferee a Defendant, the decree obtained in the suit only operates as a decree for money. Suit by tenant against landlord for recovery of land—Rules of limitation, general and special onus of proof as to—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 143—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1882), Sch. III, Art. 3, secs. 184, 5, 5), 20 7—Character of tenancy, presumption as to—Area less than 100 bighas. In a suit by a tenant for the recovery of land of which he had been dispossessed by the landlord, the tenant claimed the land as tenure-holder and the Defendants contended that it was an occupancy holding. Neither the character of a tenure-holder nor that of an occupancy raiyat was established by positive evidence. The question being what period of limitation was applicable to the case, Held,—that in the circumstances of the case there was no statutory presumption either way. That the general rule of limitation in suits for recovery of possession of property was twelve years and that it is upon the party claiming the benefit of a shorter period of limitation to establish that the case fell within the special rule limiting the period to a shorter time. The Defendants having failed to establish the occupancy character of the holding so as to bring it within the special rule of limitation under the Bengal Tenancy Act and Plaintiff's suit being within time by the general rule, the suit was not barred by limitation. A suit by a tenant to recover lands from the landlord, of which he alleges he has been dispossessed, is not a proceeding under the Bengal Tenancy Act within the meaning of cl. (7) of sec. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is no provision in cl. In the absence of proof that the mineral rights were vested in the Digwar before or at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the zemindar with whom the estate in which the tenure was situated was permanently settled by Government would have the right to the minerals and, there being no evidence to show that the zemindar had ever parted with his mineral rights to the Digwar, the Digwar had no right to deal with the minerals. But the landlord's right to recover possession of the land encroached upon may be lost by the tenant having adversely to the landlord asserted his title as tenant to the land for more than twelve years. Under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, there may be adverse possession not only of immoveable property but of any interest therein, and a tenant may claim to have been in adverse possession for 12 years of a limited interest in encroached land, viz.,

Mere denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant does not, in cases to which the Bengal Tenancy Act applies, work any forfeiture unless the denial has been given effect to by a decree of the Court. Where the landlord, after the dismissal of his suit for rent up to the tenant's denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant appealed, and pending the appeal withdrew the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit and then brought an action to eject the tenant on the ground of such denial by the tenant, Held—That the only decree that could be relied on here was a decree which ceased to exist owing to the withdrawal of the suit by the landlord and so the denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant by the tenant would not work any forfeiture as it was not given effect to by a decree of the Court. *PYARI LAL HALDAR v. Statute.] In Vasudeva Mudaliar v. K. S. Srinivasa Pillai, 11 C W N 1005 (1907), the Privy Council reversing the decision of the High Court of Madras held that the suit, which was one to enforce a simple mortgage, dated 22nd October 1883, was governed by Art. 132 and not by Art. 147 of Sch. II, Limitation Act of 1877, so that the suit was liable to dismissal as time-barred unless Plaintiff could make out certain alleged payments of interest and settling of accounts which would save limitation. The Privy Council remitted the case to the High Court for enquiry and adjudication of these matters of fact, but before the enquiry was taken up the Limitation Act of 1908 was passed which saved from the operation of Art. 132 of the Limitation Act of 1877 suits on mortgages instituted within the period of 60 years from the date when the money secured became due and pending in the Province of Madras (amongst other places). Held—That the new legislation covered this suit which was still pending when it was passed. *VASUDEVA MUDALIAR v. It is not necessary that a suit should be brought to avoid the lease and when the Plaintiff on becoming sui juris brought a suit for damages in respect of occupation of the land leased, electing to treat the lease as a nullity: Held, that there was sufficient avoidance of the lease. *TARINI KANTA BHATTACHARJEE v. Where the mortgagor left a portion of the purchase-money with the purchaser for redemption of the mortgage, Held—That the mortgagee not having been a party to the sale could not avail himself of the undertaking on the part of the purchaser to pay off the mortgage-debt, and the latter, therefore, was not a person from whom the unrealised balance of the mortgage-debt was legally recoverable within the meaning of sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. *JAMNA DAS v. The mortgagee's accountability is not limited to items within the contemplation of the mortgage contract but may extend to amounts which the mortgagee was enabled to realise out of the mortgaged property by taking advantage of his position as mortgagee. *RAMAVATAR SINGH v. covery of a sum of money as her dower, alleging that it was charged on the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgage; it was found that there was no charge for the dower and the suit was dismissed as against the mortgagee but decreed against the husband; it was further declared that the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by the wife had she not been allowed to sue as a pauper should be a first charge on the amount decreed to her and also be recoverable from her husband. The Government purported to attach and sell the mortgaged property in execution of that decree and it was purchased by the Appellant. The mortgagee subsequently had the property sold in execution of his decree and purchased it himself. Held—That Government had no right to attach and sell the property in execution of the decree against the mortgagor, though such interest, if any, as remained in the mortgagor from whom the Court-fees were declared to be recoverable might have been reached by a proper proceeding. That the first sale was without jurisdiction and passed no title to the Appellant. That no question of priority of Crown debts arose in the case. It is only when claims of the Crown and claims of common persons concur or come into competition that the Crown is preferred. But the Crown has no more right than a "common person" to seize one man's property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from another. KUNWAR RAGHO PRASAD v. LALA MEWA LAL ...

The principal amount was made payable in September 1877. In February 1888 Rs. 12,000 was borrowed by the mortgagor from A and in accordance with the agreement between them was applied in paying the zarfeshgi debt and the zarfeshgi deed upon such payment was taken back and handed over to A in whose favour a simple mortgage was executed to secure the loan of Rs. 12,000, given by her; Held—That so far as it operated as a lease, the zarfeshgi deed came to an end but the charge created by the zarfeshgi was kept alive for the benefit of A. *Mohesh Lal v. Mortgage—contd.

That in suits for sale instituted after the date of A's mortgage of 1888 by persons who had obtained mortgages between the dates of the zarpeshgi of G and the simple mortgagee of A, A, as puisne mortgagee, was a necessary party under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act. Where in such suits A was made a party but did not set up her prior title under the zarpeshgi of 1874 and some of the properties covered by the zarpeshgi were sold: Held—That A's right to proceed against the said properties by a suit for sale on the basis of the zarpeshgi deed was barred by Expl. II of sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. In one such suit instituted by M within 12 years of the due date of payment under the zarpeshgi of 1874, A not having been joined as a party, the sales held did not affect or take away A's right as puisne mortgagee under the mortgage of 1888 or her claim of priority under the zarpeshgi of 1874. But A's claim to priority under the zarpeshgi of 1874 became barred in 1900 when a suit was first instituted by A's assignee to enforce A's mortgage, and the only decree Plaintiff in this suit would get as against the purchasers in M's suit was to be allowed to redeem the mortgage of M on payment to the purchaser of the amount of principal and interest in respect of which the property purchased by him was sold in M's suit. In a mortgage suit a puisne mortgagee of whose interest in the mortgaged property, the Plaintiff has notice is a necessary party under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and a sale of the property had in such a suit does not take away the puisne mortgagee's right to redeem. *SYED MAHOMED ABRAHIM HOSSEIN KHAN v. Registration Act (XVI of 1908), sec. 25—Registration of mortgage out of time by altering date—Lessee from executant if may question validity of mortgage registered out of time—Estoppel.] Where a mortgage deed had been presented for registration more than four months after the date of its execution and its registration had been secured by the executant altering the date of the instrument, Held—That even assuming that the deed had been wrongly registered, there being no fraud, the mortgagor would be estopped from taking the objection. Held further, that lessees from the mortgagor who took their leases after the registration of the mortgage are in the absence of fraud equally estopped with the mortgagor from taking the objection. GOPAL CHANDRA CHUKRABURTY v. SURENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOUDHRY ... 525

Where a mortgage is executed but there is a collateral agreement that no obligation should attach under the instrument till payment of money on the one hand and delivery to the registering officer on the other, the moment the condition is fulfilled, obligation attaches with effect from the date of execution and attestation of the document. That the question of res judicata was to be determined with reference to the decree on appeal and not with reference to that of the first Court. Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah, I L. But it is not necessary that the person affected should sue to set aside the transaction, it is sufficient if he declares his will to rescind by way of defence in an action to enforce the mortgage against him. Where it was found that the money raised by the mortgage was for the benefit of the minor the latter cannot avoid the mortgage without restoring the benefit which he had received under it, this equitable doctrine being applicable as well to a Defendant in an action on the mortgage as to a Plaintiff seeking to avoid the mortgage. *The Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co v. The Plaintiffs were not made parties in that suit, the mortgagee not having had notice of their interest at the time and they brought the present suit in 1907 for redemption. Held—That in the absence of allegation by the Plaintiffs that the debt was an immoral debt, the father of the Plaintiff sufficiently represented the Plaintiffs in the previous suit, and with the extinction of the father's right to redeem, the son's right of redemption was also extinguished. *Bunsee Das v. Where a portion of the mortgaged property was sold subject to the mortgage, but the buyer having failed to pay off the mortgage, the latter sued on his mortgage and the whole of the mortgaged property was sold and the seller was dispossessed of the lands which had been retained by him: Held—That a suit by the seller for damages against the buyer was governed by Art. 83 of Sch. To stay the suit according to the strict language of sec. 10 until by the decision of the previous suit the matter would be res judicata was needless. Obiter —Though, on general principles, the claim of a partner against a joint banking concern must in course of winding up proceedings be postponed to those of outsiders, there may be cases in which the complete solvency of the bank is admitted and a partner might sue, like any other customer, for the taking separately of his private account as a customer and for the recovery of the balance found standing to his credit. Where certain printing charges which an Appellant in a second appeal was called upon to pay, were paid by him to a clerk of his Vakil, but the amount was not paid in Court, and on the other hand, the clerk falsely informed the Appellant that his case was being proceeded with, and when later on the case was listed for dismissal for non-payment of the printing charges, it was dismissed in the Vakil's absence, and the Vakil in an affidavit sworn by him in support of an application made 18 days later for restoration of the appeal admitted that on the day the case was disposed of he had become aware of the fact that the money required to be paid had been paid by the client but had not been applied to the purpose for which it had been paid. Held —That in honour and in duty to his client, to himself and to the Court, the Vakil who had already become aware of the circumstances in which the money had not been paid in Court should have attended when the case was called and publicly explained those circumstances and apologised to the Court and expressed his regret. That the excuse offered by him, viz., that he was en- gaged elsewhere and could not therefore attend in order to discharge this duty of honour, was insufficient. That it was his duty, even after this, to have waited until an interval in any procedure of the Court or till the Court was about to adjourn, and to have instantly made his honourable explanation. That in any case he was honourably bound to inform his client of what had occurred on that day and he was guilty of regrettable conduct in permitting his clerk who was plainly guilty of fraudulent and improper conduct to continue in corres- pondence with the client in the course of which the latter was falsely informed that the appeal had come on for hearing and been dis- missed. the deed of gift, that for the purpose of discharging the onus that lay on the Defendant to prove the entire bond fides of the transaction, it was not enough for him to prove that the document had been read by an attorney and explained to the lady and that the attorney had explained to her that by it her interest in the property would cease and it would become the Defendant's. He must show that the whole of the circumstances were present to her mind and that the intention to give was really her own voluntary act. An attorney acting for both parties in such a transaction places himself in a very false position. An attorney called in to advise the donor in such a case should be independent of the donee in fact and not merely in name. A solicitor in such a case does not discharge his duty by satisfying himself simply that the donor understands and wishes to carry out a particular transaction. He must also satisfy himself that the gift is one that is right and proper for the donor to make under all the circumstances and if he is not so satisfied his duty is to advise his client not to go on with the transaction and to refuse to act further for him if he persists. *Powell v. Where a putni has been sold under the Putni Regulation and no suit has been brought under sec. 14 of that Regulation to set aside that sale, Held—That the sale cannot be impugned as invalid collaterally by way of defence in a suit brought by a purchaser of the putni for ejectment. Irregularity in the service of notices in such sale does not make the sale a nullity. Revenue Sale Law (Act, XI of 1859), ss. 2, 3—Act VII (B. C.) of 1868, sec. 30—Panchannagram, tenure in, if may be sold for arrears of revenue—"Default," date of, fixed by statute or notification thereunder, if may be varied by administrative Rules—Rent when becomes "arrears" and when "default" in payment takes place.] Tenures held under Government in Dihli Panchannagram in the District of 24-Pergunnahs are saleable under Act XI of 1859 by virtue of the provisions of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868. No distinction can be drawn between the provisions of Act XI of 1859 and those of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 with reference to the procedure for sale and with reference to what constitutes arrears. Where the kabuliyat executed by the original holder of the tenure provided that the jama, an annual one, would be paid in the Collectorate within the 28th June of every year, the rent payable under the terms of the kabuliyat on the 28th June 1902 was not in arrear according to the provisions of sec. 2 of Act XI of 1859 till the 1st of July 1902. Where further a Notification issued by the Board of Revenue under sec. 3 of Act XI of 1859 "determined and fixed the 28th June of each respective year as the latest day of the payment of rents of all descriptions of tenures in Khas Mehal Panchannagram, in default of which payment on or previous to that date tenures in arrears in that mehal will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder." Held —That the 28th June 1903 was the first date under the Notification and the Statute when the default, such as would enable the "tenure in arrears" to be sold, arose in respect of the amount payable under the kabuliyat on the 28th June 1902. The sale in this case which took place in March 1903 was therefore illegal and liable to be set aside. General considerations or administrative rules not having the sanction of the Statute, such as Rule 7 of Part III, c. 16, of the Survey and Settlement Manual, could not operate to vary the contract of the parties and the statutory provisions applicable thereto. Durlabh Chandra, Kar v. —, Execution Sale—Joint decree—Application to set aside sale by some of judgment debtors, if whole sale can be set aside—Sale proclamation, gross understatement of value by decree-holder, if by itself vitiates sale—Waiver by judgment debtor of fresh sale proclamation, if amounts to waiver of other irregularities.] Where a decree was obtained jointly against several persons and their respective liabilities were not ascertained therein, and the decree-holder proceeding against jointly had their property sold in execution, held, that upon good cause shown the whole sale should be set aside although only some of the judgment-debtors applied within time to set aside the sale. The application of the other judgment-debtors though made out of time could very well be treated as applications to be added as parties to the previous application of their co-judgment-debtors having regard to the fact that all the applications were tried together and were thus virtually consolidated. Where on the date fixed for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, the judgment debtor applied for a postponement and agreed that if the decree was not paid up by the adjourned date the sale might be held without the issue of fresh proclamation, and the decree not having been paid up the sale took place on the adjourned date, held—That in the absence of evidence to show that they were aware of the contents of the sale proclamation it could not be said that the judgment-debtor had waived any irregularities in the sale proclamation which contained a gross understatement of the value of the attached properties. Girdhari Singh v. Hardeo Narain, L. R. 3 I. A. 230; 26 W. R. 44 (1876); Arunachalam v. Arunachalam, L. R. 15 I. A. 171; s. c. 1 I. R. 12 Mad. 19 (1888), distinguished. Where with the object of seizing a very valuable property for the smallest possible price, the decree holder grossly understated its value in the sale proclamation with the consequence that he was able to purchase the property without competition at a fraction of its real price, held—That the deliberate misstatement of value in the sale proclamation was by itself a sufficient ground for vacating the sale. *Sadatmand Khan v. required deposit: Held—That the petition and the deposit were properly received on the next day, as no act of the Court itself ought to be allowed to prejudice the position of the Petitioner. A conditional deposit is not a good deposit under r. 89, Or. XXI, but where the Petitioner withdrew the condition the moment the decree holder auction-purchaser objected: Held—That there were no sufficient grounds under the circumstances to treat the deposit as invalid. R. 89, Or. XXI, does not confer a right to make a deposit to a person who had purchased the property sold so far back from the date of the sale and the execution proceedings that his interest was not affected by the sale. *DULHIN MATHURA • DAS KGER v. I, A-t. 165—Fraud employed to bring about sale, if may give bar of limitation—Fraudulent concealment, what amounts to—Fraud, plea of—Proof.] When an application to set aside an execution sale was made more than 30 days after the sale, but it was urged that sec. 18 of the Limitation Act applied to the case: Held—That the fraud which it is necessary to prove to bring the case within sec. 18 of the Limitation Act may have occurred prior to the sale—for fraud, at any rate of the nature generally employed in bringing about an illegal sale, is a continuing influence, and until that influence ends, it retains its power of mischief. Purna Chandra Mandal v. Anukul Biswas, 1 I. R. 38 Cal. 654 (1909), explained, Rahimbhoy Habibhoy v. Turner, 1 L. R. 17 Bom. 841 (1892), referred to. Fraud is not to be lightly charged or lightly found specially in cases of applications to set aside and execution sale, where this reserve is too often neglected. Misstatement of value, even if it can be described as "fraud," does not constitute fraudulent concealment, and non-publication of sale-proclamation in the mofussil even if it exposes the sale to attack at the instance of the judgment-debtor would not by itself bring the case under sec. 18 of the Limitation Act, unless it is shown that the judgment-debtor has, by means of fraud of which the decree-holder was guilty or to which he was accessory, been kept from the knowledge of his right. *NARAYAN SAHU v. The sale in such a case is a sale under the provisions of the Act and the restrictions imposed by it on the right of attorney authorised their agent to carry on their business on their behalf with a limitation in the power that nothing therein contained should authorise the attorney to speculate in gunnies, opium, shares or exchange, and the agent under the power signed a bought note for the purchase of sugar from the Plaintiff on behalf of the Defendants: Held—That the transaction was outside the express prohibition on speculation and that the mere imprudence of an act did not make it unauthorised. Were in the contract power to resell was reserved in default of the buyer taking delivery on a certain date, but the seller on that date had in stock a much larger quantity of the goods in bulk than was required for the purpose of the contract, and the goods agreed to be sold had not been separated and made ready for delivery to the buyer at the time the buyer was asked to take delivery, and the buyer not having taken delivery of the greater portion of the goods the seller by virtue of the power of sale gave notice and resold the goods about a month after due date and claimed, as damages the difference between the contract price and the resale price: Held—That as the sellers had not appropriated the goods for the purpose of the contract, there were no goods to which the power of resale applied and the seller was not entitled to recover the difference between the contract price and the price at which the goods were resold. *Moll Schulte

Sec. 12 of the Letters Patent gives the High Court in its Original Side express jurisdiction over persons who carry on business within its local limits and a suit for damages for breach of contract would lie against a person not residing within such local limits when he has been carrying on business within those limits through an agent. Or.
XXX, r. 10 which says nothing about residence either within or without the jurisdiction does not curtail the Court's power over persons

The maxim de minimis non curat lex should not be applied to Small Cause Court suits for damages in respect of immoveable property for the importance of the case to the parties is not to be measured by the pecuniary limit of their claim. Poona City v. Solicitor—Professional misconduct—Feeding to strike off from Rolls—Contempt of Court, pursuing remedy in Criminal Court when Supreme Court refused civil remedy, having disbelieved information, if amounts to Forgery, striking out names of witnesses' names by solicitor after informing responsible officer—Intent to defraud, if any—Bad faith—Right to be heard on matters relating to professional misconduct] Where a Plaintiff who has been refused a warrant for the detention of the Defendant by a Civil Court straightway starts a criminal process on the same subject-matter and by means of allegations to which the Civil Court attached no credit obtains his warrant from a different Court, almost as a matter of course, he undoubtedly runs several risks of a serious character. He is not, however, restricted by law to a single form of remedy. He may pursue all the legal remedies appropriate to his grievance, and his conduct does not necessarily involve any punishable contempt of the Civil Court whatever may be its other consequences. Where in such a case the arrest by warrant of the Criminal Court was obtained without getting the necessary fiat of Government, and it was executed but the prisoner was then discharged on the ground that the warrant was in excess of the Magistrate's jurisdiction and it appeared that the Magistrate was not misled into issuing the warrant by any concealment or deceit on the part of the applicant but that it might have been due to the Magistrate's own inadvertence and there was no evidence to show that the applicant did not believe in the justice of his claim and did not so instruct the solicitor who acted for him in the matter: Held—That the conduct of the solicitor, though it might, from other points of view, be shown to be open to strong animadversion, could not, in the absence of proof that the proceedings were tainted by his fraud, be held to constitute contempt of Court, nor did it show bad faith on the part of the solicitor. Where two persons on being served with subpoenas taken out by the solicitor on behalf of certain accused persons stated that they knew nothing of the case, and thereupon the solicitor took back the subpoenas and mentioned to a responsible Court officer that he wanted the names of witnesses to be substituted, and on his making no objection struck out their names and substituted those of two other persons in their place: Held—That there being nothing to show that the intent of the solicitor in so doing was to defraud, the facts did not establish the charge of forgery brought against him, who at most had committed an irregularity and for which a pecuniary penalty of £20 imposed on him was an adequate punishment. That an order striking the solicitor's name from off the Rolls on account of the said two alleged offences of contempt and forgery could not in the circumstances be maintained. The limit imposed by sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is on decrees which are merely declaratory and does not expressly extend to decrees in which relief is administered and declarations are embodied as introductory to that relief. was carried forward, further debit entries were

The question whether a map is a public document within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Evidence Act is prima facie a question of fact, and the fact that a map was treated as a public document in a previous suit to which the Plaintiff was not a party would not make it binding as such on the Plaintiff. A map prepared at the instance of the Collector when in charge of a private estate is a private document and sec. 88 of the Evidence Act has an application to such map. So before such a map can be used against a party not only must its accuracy be strictly proved, but other circumstances which may affect its evidentiary value such as the purpose for which the map was prepared, must be duly considered; for a map prepared for one purpose cannot be used for a totally different purpose, and in considering the value		Tort—Overflow of water into Plaintiff's land from tank belonging to stranger caused by Defendant lowering level of his own land to make it cultivable—Plaintiff's right to injunction and damages Where the Defendants with a view to make their land cultivable lowered its level with the consequence that water in a tank belonging to a third party passed to that land and subsequently overflowed into lands belonging to the Plaintiff: Held —That no right of the Plaintiff had been infringed by the act, and the Plaintiff was not entitled to a mandatory injunction to compel the Defendant to raise an embankment in order to prevent this overflow or to damages for harm caused by such overflow. Provisions about the amount of rent, the time of payment thereof and the consequences of default relate to essential incidents of the lease. Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar , 6 C. A document which varies the amount of rent to be paid under an existing lease registered as required by sec. 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act, as also the incidents of such payments viz., the date of payment and consequences of default of payment, requires registration. LALIT MOHAN GHOSH v. Will—Will, challenged as forgery—Proof—Suspicion alone when ground for refusing probate—Presumption against misconduct, operation of—Evidence Act (1 of 1872, secs. 3, 45, 101, 135—Order in which witness to be tendered, discretion of Counsel and Court's power—Expert, medical examination of, to test value of evidence of attending physician—Expert in Bengali language and legal terms, examination of—Document put in witness right of opposing counsel to inspect.] If a party writes or prepares a will under which he takes a benefit, that circumstance in itself ought generally to excite suspicion of the Court and calls upon it to be vigilant in examining the evidence in support of the instrument in favour of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased. Barry v. Bullin, 2 Moore P. C. 40 1834, referred to, and the rule in Tyrell v. Painton, L. R. [1894] P. D. 151 (1893), explained. Per JENKINS, C. J.—The suspicion which by itself would be ground for the Court not pronouncing in favour of an alleged will must be one inherent in the nature of the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction. Per WOODROFFE, J.—The rule in Tyrell v. Painton, L. R. [1894] P. D. 151 (1893), applies to cases where the circumstances of suspicion arise from the nature of the case as put forward by the propounder, in which case the propounder must remove the suspicion. Where, however, the alleged suspicion against a will arises from facts which form part of the impugnant's case, then the Court must see whether the facts which are said to give rise to suspicion are proved or whether the propounder's case is proved. The rule therefore does not apply where the question is simply which set of witnesses should be believed. In this case the trial Judge having decided against the genuineness of the will on the ground that the evidence of the witnesses whom the propounder had called to support her case was not so unimpeachable, so absolutely trustworthy in itself as by its own merit to dispose of all objections and to allay all doubt and suspicion, Held per JENKINS, C. J.—That the standard of proof required by the Judge was higher than the law (as contained in sec. 3 of the Indian Evidence Act) prescribes. Per WOODROFFE, J.—A probate case is not singular as regards the application of the general principles of proof as contained in secs. 3 and 101 of the Indian Evidence Act. Per JENKINS, C. J.—The Evidence Act, by which in matters of proof the Courts in this country must be guided, has in conformity with the general tendency of the day, adopted the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof. Evidence Act is at the same time expressed in terms which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability, so that where, as in this case, forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against misconduct is not without its due weight as a circumstance of improbability, though the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not be applicable. Cooper v. Stale , 6 H. L. Cas 746 (1858), and Dord Devine v. Wilson , 10 Moore P. C. 502, 531 (1895), referred to. This probability gains in strength where the character and position of the individual impugned is, apart from the particular case, above reproach. In the goods of GOPESWAR DUTT v. BISSESWAR DUTT ... 265		Zemindars of Central Provinces, status of—British subjects with delegated Judicial and Police powers not feudatory chiefs—Resumption of Police and excise functions—Abolition of private pounds—Suit by zemindari in Civil Court, questioning legality—Executive acts—Zemindars, removal of forfeiture of their privileges, discontinuance of nazaranas, provisions as to, in wajib-ul-arz, if legal—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.] In 1864 when certain petty chiefs of the Central Provinces were declared to be feudatory chiefs and the rest were classed as non-feudatories and declared to be ordinary British subjects certain judicial and administrative powers were entrusted to the latter or left in their hands as a matter of convenience or economy of administration. These zemindars in exercising Police and Excise functions were not acting as of right but were so acting either by sufferance or by delegation. The resumption of these functions by the Government was a thing done by the Government in exercise of sovereign powers and no action was maintainable in a Civil Court in regard to such resumption. The maintenance of private cattle pounds is incompatible with the provisions of the Cattle Trespass Act, and the establishment and maintenance of cattle-pounds under the superintendence and control of Government officials empowered to obtain the assistance of the Police when required may be considered essential for the maintenance of law and order and the peace and good Government of the country, and therefore a matter of the Executive Government with which it is not competent for the Civil Court to interfere. Where such non-feudatory zemindars accepted a fresh assessment of the tulkoli or revenue payable by them to Government under sec. 54 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881) for 11 years from 1st July 1890 to 30th June 1901 or until a fresh settlement was made, and agreed to be bound by all the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz of their zemindari as laid down by Government; and at the new settlement of May 1903, the zemindars were required to execute wajib-ul-arzes which amongst other things provided for the resumption of the Police and Excise administration and cattle-pounds by Government and also provided for the removal of zemindars and forfeiture of their privileges and the discontinuance of nazarana on grant or renewal of leases, and the zemindars executed the wajib-ul-arzes as required but under protest: Held —That the resumption of the Police and Excise administration and of cattle-pounds by Government could not be questioned by Civil Courts, but the District Judges decree cancelling the clauses relating to the removal of the zemindars and the forfeiture of privileges as also concerning the discontinuance of nazarana on the grant or renewal of leases was proper. —, Construction— Hindu Law — Bequest of estate to daughter-in-law—Legatee to remain in occupation of the property "just like myself," and appoint an "heir"—Estate given if life estate or absolute interest] A testator executed a Will which provided that after his death his widow, legatee No 1, would remain in possession of his properties with all sorts of powers "just like myself" and on her death, his widowed daughter-in-law, M., legatee No 2, would remain in possession and occupation of the entire property "just like myself and legatee No. 1," and the latter were invested with the power of appointing an "heir" either in her lifetime or by Will: Held —That on the death of the testator's widow, the daughter-in-law did not take an absolute estate in the properties left by the testator. Witness—A servant of the Municipality was summoned at the Plaintiff's instance to produce certain documents which the Plaintiff maintained would support his case of adverse possession of the land in dispute, but he failed or declined to attend, and the Plaintiff's application for a warrant to compel his attendance was rejected without good reason. The suit was dismissed on the ground, amongst others, that Plaintiff was not in possession for 12 years: Held, on second appeal, that there should be a re-hearing after compelling the witness to attend and produce the documents. Abstinent of transport, taking orders for supply of foreign liquor if. See EXCISE ACT, s. 46 ...	785	Accused's statement — Court if may use in part. When the accused's own statement is to be relied upon, it must be taken as a whole; and nothing can be read into it which is not found within the four walls of the statement. PIKA BEWA v. Accomplice — Testimony of—Corroboration. Under sec. 133 of the Evidence Act a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. To justify the High Court in setting aside the conviction it is necessary to show not only that there is no corroboration, but that the Judge, taking all the evidence together, was wrong in acting on it. Where, immediately after a dacoity and before the arrival of the police, one of the accused who had been caught made a confession to a private person, naming the other persons concerned in it except two, one of whom he named two days after in his confession to the Magistrate, which agreed with the evidence subsequently given by the informer, both the confessions being afterwards retracted, and another accused made a confession naming all the persons mentioned by the approvers, the two accused and the latter having been arrested at different times and places, and there was evidence that some of the dacoits were seen in company together shortly before the dacoity and that they were absent from their homes shortly after it: Held —That the confessions of the two accused and the other facts were sufficient corroboration of an approver, who had been believed by the Judge and assessor, as against the co-accused who had not made confessions. LALAN MALLIK v. KING EMPEROR ...	669	... effect of. A judgment of not guilty against an accused person fully establishes his innocence and the incident in respect of which the charge was brought cannot be used against the acquitted person in a subsequent trial for conspiracy. Emperor v. Nani Gopal , 15 C. W. N 594 (1911), followed. PULIN BEHARI DAS v. KING-EMPEROR ...	1105
Accomplice, spy or informer — Testimony of—Corroboration. Per HARRINGTON J.—The testimony of persons who have been members of a criminal conspiracy or else have joined it for the purpose of betraying its secrets must be very carefully scrutinised and much weight cannot be attached to it unless it is corroborated by other circumstances. Per MOOKERJEE, J.—Where a witness has made himself an agent for the prosecution before associating with the wrong-doers or before the actual perpetration of the offence, he is not an accomplice, but he may be, if he extends no aid to the prosecution until after the offence is committed. A mere detective or decoy is not therefore an accomplice nor an original confederate who betrays before the crime was committed. Yet an accessory after the fact would be an accomplice, if he had, before betrayal, rendered himself liable as such. As the crime of conspiracy is complete the moment there is concerted intention, members of the conspiracy who after such agreement have out of fear or repentance transformed themselves into spies and informers do not thereby cease to be accomplices, and their evidence requires corroboration of the same extent and character as in the case of accomplices. PULIN BEHARI DAS v. Calcutta Police Act (IV of 1866, B. O.), s. 44—

Betting on cotton figures, if an offence—Distinction between gaming and wagering—Cotton gambling not a game of contest. No form of betting or wagering without instruments other than rain gambling is an offence as created by Act IV (B. O.) of 1866. Apart from legislation, rain gambling is gaming only when a complete apparatus is used for the purpose, otherwise it is not. Gaming is playing at any game, sport, pastime or exercise, lawful or unlawful, for money or any other valuable thing which is staked on the result of the game, i.e., which is to be lost or won according to the success or failure of the person who has staked. Queen v. Ashton, 1 Ellis and Blackbourn 286 (1852); Lockwood v. Cooper, [1903] 2 K. B. 428, referred to. Wagering which includes betting is making a contract on an unascertained event, past or future, (in which the parties have no pecuniary interest other than that created by the contract) by which the parties are to gain or lose according as the uncertainty is determined one way or another. Carlisle v. The Smoke Ball Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 484, referred to. Cotton gambling is betting pure and simple. Books, papers, notice boards and lists of prices furnish evidence of gambling but are not instruments of gaming. RAM PRATAP NEMANI v. KING-EMPEROR ... 858 —, Misjoinder—Inherent power of Criminal Courts.] Per Mookerjee, J.—Criminal Courts have, equally with Civil Courts, inherent power to mould their procedure, subject to statutory provisions, to enable them to discharge their functions as Courts of justice. Where three persons were found to have acted in concert in having a man arrested with that object, the fact that two of them did not believe the story upon which the charge against the son was based to be true whilst the third believed in its truth was no ground for the exemption of the latter from liability for damages resulting to the father from the conspiracy, for the motive of one conspirator may be different from that of the others. The standard of proof of a conspiracy in a suit for damages resulting therefrom is not in India the same as if the Defendants were being tried on a criminal charge. In the Goods of Gopessur Dutt (unreported) relied on. A suit for damages resulting from a conspiracy which would be indictable at Common Law lies in British Indian Courts according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and the Indian Penal Code by providing for only one form of criminal conspiracy, viz., to wage war against the King, cannot be considered to have taken away this civil remedy either expressly or by necessary implication. Quinn v. Leatham , [1901] A. C. 495, followed. A suit brought on a conspiracy must be kept strictly to the cause of action that has been set out in the plaint. If a conspiracy is, as in this case, indictable at Common Law, it gives rise to civil liability if damage has been occasioned by it to the Plaintiff. The present suit being based on two causes of action, viz., (1) to recover the damage occasioned to the Plaintiff as the result of an actionable conspiracy; and (2) to recover damages for malicious prosecution against the Defendants as joint tortfeasors. Held —That the suit, though instituted beyond the period of limitation provided for suits for compensation for malicious prosecution, was, in regard to the first mentioned cause of action, not barred by limitation, as it was brought within the period provided by Art. 36 or Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, the former article being applicable to the matter, and if it did not apply the latter being applicable. Damage to a substantial amount should be proved by the Plaintiff in order to establish a cause of action for conspiracy, though if substantial damage is proved the damages awarded need not be limited to the precise amount proved. Held —That the Plaintiff should recover the amount he had to spend owing to his arrest, such damage not being too remote. PERRY MOHAN DAS v. Whether after proceeding under sec. 107 of the Code it will be proper for the Magistrate to act under sec. 145 must depend on the circumstances of each case as it arises. ss 109 (a) (b), 110—Security for good behaviour—Concealment— Ostensible means of subsistence—Satisfactory account.] The whole of cl. (a) of sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, must be read together and the object of the concealment must be with a view to committing some offence; mere concealment with a view to avoid observation is no offence at all. A per- son cannot be called upon to furnish security for an alleged temporary concealment in his father's house unconnected with any intention to commit an offence nor for any previous con- cealment outside the jurisdiction of the Magis- trate who takes the proceedings. The fact that a person had been previously connected with any criminal conspiracy or might still be in correspondence with any criminals outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate would not be relevant in a case under sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. Where a young man out of employment is staying in his father's house and the father is a man of substance, able, if necessary, to support him, he cannot be said to be without ostensible means of subsistence under the first part of cl. (b) of sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. The whole object of the second part of cl. (b) of sec. 109, Crimi- nal Procedure Code, is to enable Magistrates to take action against suspicious strangers lurking within their jurisdictions. A person cannot be called upon to give any account of his presence outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate taking proceedings under sec. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. SATISH CHANDRA SARKAR v. Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

A Deputy Magistrate in charge of the District Magistrate's office at head quarters, has no power as such, after taking cognizance of a complaint and examining the complainant on oath, to send the case, under sec. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for local investigation by the Sub-Divisional officer to whom he is by law subordinate, nor to dismiss the complaint, and to direct the prosecution of the complainant under sec. 476 on the report and investigation by the latter. The effect of sec. 529 (f) could be only to give the Sub-Divisional Magistrate jurisdiction over the case, but not to empower the Deputy Magistrate to dismiss the complaint and direct the prosecution of the complainant. The Government Circular with regard to enquiries into complaints against the Police has been misunderstood. It does not refer to local investigations under sec. 202, but the investigation it mentions is a full and complete judicial enquiry on the spot after the issue of process, and after hearing witnesses on both sides and taking the explanation of the accused person. *EMPEROR v. P. C., with respect to a sum of money: Held—That there was a misjoinder of charges in the case. The wording of sec. 222, Cr. P. C., refers to a single accused; and it must be so because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. Sec. 239 therefore has no application to such a case. When two persons are implicated in a case of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust with respect to a certain sum of money, the charges against them must be of misappropriation in one case and of abetment in the other. It is also open to the Court to frame the charges against each of them in the alternative, i.e., of misappropriation or abetment. GIRWAR NARAIN v. THE KING-EMPEROR ... 600

It is not necessary to have recourse to that section if the Magistrate can be satisfied in other ways that the nuisance complained of is continuing. Sec. 6 of the Act creates an offence under a local law and proceedings relating to such offence should be taken under sec. 140 of the Cr. P. C. Where a Magistrate authorised an Inspector of Police to enter and inspect the houses and the Inspector asked the Sub-Inspector to make the enquiry: Held —That the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case on the Sub-Inspector's report. The Magistrate could either treat the Sub-Inspector's report as a complaint under sec. 190 (a), in which case he would have to call upon the Sub-Inspector to appear and substantiate the report on oath; or under sec. 155 direct the Police to investigate the case and submit a charge sheet if they thought proper. Where the Sub-Inspector stated in his report that he was satisfied that a woman "was going on with her profession of prostitution" but did not say that she was using her house to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity: Held —that although the report might furnish a basis to the Magistrate to call upon the Sub-Inspector to depose on oath as complainant, the report itself did not disclose a complete case under sec. 2 of the Act. What has to be established under sec. 10 of the Evidence Act to make documents found in the possession of one of several persons accused of conspiracy admissible against the other accused is that there is reasonable ground to believe in the existence of a conspiracy amongst such persons. C.; but that Ganesh Chandra Sikdar v. Queen-Emress , 1. L. If the article is found in a portion of the house of which one member of the family has the exclusive use, such member must prima facie be held responsible for anything that is found there. But if the article is found in a portion of the house of which all the members of the family have use, then prima facie the karta of the family is responsible. Local Inspection—contd.

ent kinds of local inspections: (1) Those that are authorised or directed by the Code of Criminal Procedure and which are governed by the rules and limitations imposed by the Code itself. (2) Those which are in the nature of the view by the jury laid down in sec. 293 of the Code. It is not only not objectionable, but in many cases highly advisable, that a Magistrate trying a criminal case (having the functions of both judge and jury) should view the place in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in the Court. But if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any one on either side to say anything to him which might prejudice his mind one way or the other [In re Lalji, I L R. 19 All. 803 1897, referred to.] (3) Local inspections, not provided for as above in the Criminal Procedure Code, but which in so far as they conform to the provisions of the Evidence Act cannot also be excluded. The Evidence Act gives the Court power to adjudge the existence of facts on "matters before it" as well as according as they are deposed to in the evidence. In adjudicating on matters before him, which require proof, the Judge may use his eyes as well as his ears. A Court of Appeal therefore cannot exclude from its consideration the personal observations made by the trying Court at a local investigation. Joy Coomarr v. Bundhu Lal, I. L. R. 9 Cal. 363 (1882), followed. A case cannot be decided merely on an observation made by the Court locally. But if in looking at a place in order to understand the evidence the Magistrate thereby understands that the description of the place given in the evidence is erroneous or false, he is not precluded from holding that the facts as stated by the witnesses who gave that description are not proved and in so holding he does not make himself a witness but acts as a Judge deciding on "matters before him." Bubbon Sheik v. Emperor, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 340: s. c. 14 C. W. N. 422 (1910), considered. Girish Chunder Ghosh v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 20 Cal. 857 (1893), distinguished. It is very desirable that the results of the local investigation should be placed upon record as soon as it is completed. If the facts which the judicial officer considers to be established by the local investigation be impugned, and there is no contemporaneous record of them, the Judge would not be able to act upon them. But where they are not impugned the Appellate Court cannot exclude them from consideration merely because the facts observed were not immediately placed upon record, for it is not a positive rule of law that a note must be placed on the record on the spot. Where the observations of the Magistrate were not placed on the record on the spot but were embodied in his judgment soon after: Held—That the Appellate Court was right in refusing to exclude them from its consideration, when the correctness of the observations was not impugned before him and the accused did not appear to have been prejudiced by the irregularity in the matter of recording them.

The law does not empower a police officer to search an accused person's house for anything but the specific articles which have been or can be made the subject of summons or warrant to produce.

A general search for stolen property is not authorised and the law cannot be got over by using such an expression as "stolen property relevant to the case" as the law requires the mention of specific things. Where one of the accused in resisting such a search pushed the Sub-Inspector and the latter ordered two constables to climb on his roof and break into the house whereupon the villagers assumed a threatening attitude and threatened to cut them to pieces if they entered the house and this empty threat was sufficient to prevent the Police from committing the trespass: Held—That the accused had not exceeded the right of private defence and were rightly discharged and there was no ground for further enquiry. *FRANKHANG v. If the facts proved are such that the jury as reasonable men can say that there was a common design and the prisoners were acting in concert to do what is wrong, that is evidence from which the jury may suppose that a conspiracy was actually formed. R. v. Brown, 7 Cox. C. C. 442 (1858), followed. Where it appeared that certain members of a society found to be revolutionary were not acquainted with the real object of the society, not having been admitted to its secrets, it was held that it would not be proper to convict such members under sec. 121A of the Indian Penal Code. The criminality of a conspiracy lying in the concerted intention, once reasonable grounds are made out for belief in the existence of the conspiracy amongst the accused the acts of each conspirator in furtherance of the object are evidence against each of the others and this whether such acts were done before or after his entry into the combination, in his presence or in his absence. Conspirators are not thereby necessarily subjected to punishment for everything done by their fellows; but acts done prior to the entry of a particular person into the combination are evidence to show the nature of the concert to which he becomes a party, whilst subsequent acts of the other members would indicate further the character of the common design in which all are presumed to be equally concerned. *R. v.  21, R. 681 (1903), relied on. If arms were collected and secreted in furtherance of a conspiracy before the activities of the associates had been brought to an end by their arrest, the fact that they were discovered after the arrest and after prosecution had been started against them would not make the evidence of the find inadmissible at the trial. PULIN BEHARI DAS v. —, s. 121A—Possession of objectionable books if proof of guilty intention. The mere circumstances that a book of an objectionable character is present in the library of an individual or an association does not justify the inference that the teachings of the books are approved and adopted by persons who have access to it. The mere fact that books of a distinctly revolutionary character were found in the library of an association and were now and then read by some of its members would not conclusively show that the object of the society was revolutionary. Emperor v. Nani Gopal, 15 C. W. N. 594 (1911), followed. R. v. Watson, 2 Starkie 116, 147; 32 Howell St. Tr. 364; East on Pleas of the Crown 119 (1817), referred to. The presence of seditious literature of this description written by members of the society would however be an important element in furnishing a clue to their tendencies and designs. Per Harrington, J. The utmost that can be said of persons in whose library are found books which are calculated to excite hatred against the English is that they approved of literature of that nature and even that assumption would not in all cases be a just one. But the presence in the library of a Samity of violently revolutionary literature (some of them written in the hands of a member of the Samity) urging the destruction of the English and exalting persons who had murdered English people justified the inference that the members of the Samity were imbued with the sentiments those documents expressed. PULIN BEHARI DAS v. —, s. 121A—Letter written by stranger to a conspirator if sufficient to establish former's connection with conspiracy. A letter written by a stranger to a conspirator which is not shown to have been received or replied to or otherwise acted upon by the latter is not sufficient to establish the former's connection with the conspiracy so as to make his acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. *R. v.  conspiracy to wage war. To attach sinister significance to the mere association in play or pastime of those that live in the same village or attend the same school would be dangerous, specially when those exercises were undertaken with a complete absence of secrecy and rather with a courting of publicity. Emperor v. Nani Gopal, 15 C. W. N. 593 (1911), followed. PULIN BEHARI DAS v. KING-EMPEROR ...1105

—, s. 121A—Abandonment of charge of dacoity, if a bar to trial for conspiracy. The fact that proceedings for participation in a dacoity against certain individuals were dropped owing to insufficiency of evidence does not preclude a charge for conspiracy in respect of that dacoity from being brought against the same persons and others, for the criminality of a conspiracy is distinct from and independent of the criminality of overt acts. *Emperor v. —, s. 149—Charge under sec. 325, read with sec. 149—Conviction under sec. 325, if legal—Sec. 34, when applicable. Where the accused were charged and convicted by the Magistrate under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., and the Sessions Judge in appeal set aside the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C., and altered the conviction under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., to one under sec. 325, I. P. C.: Held—When a person is charged by implication under sec. 149, I. P. C., he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence. When a Court draws up a charge under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., it clearly intimates to the accused persons that they did not cause grievous hurt to anybody themselves but that they are guilty by implication of such offence inasmuch as somebody else in prosecution of the common object of the riot in which they were engaged did cause such grievous hurt. When these accused persons are acquitted of rioting obviously all the offences which they are said to have committed by implication disappear and the defence cannot be called upon to answer to the specific act of causing grievous hurt simply because it may have appeared in the evidence. Sec. 34, I. P. C., can only come into operation when there is a substantive charge. The considerations which govern sec. 34, I. P. C., are entirely different from and in many respects the opposite of those which govern sec. 149, I. P. C. REAZUDDI v. THE KING-EMPEROR ...1077

mined.] A certain naib of an estate got up a riot in order to dispossess certain persons by force. Three ladies having interest in the estate did not themselves do or omit to do any of the things set out under sec. 154, I. P. C., but they were responsible for the appointment of the officers under the estate; their adopted sons, although they took some share in the active management of the estate, were in no way responsible for the appointment of the naib who brought about the riot. On the conviction of the ladies and the adopted sons under sec. 154, I. P. C.: Held—That it was impossible to punish in every case under sec. 154, I. P. C., every person who had any interest in the land. The responsibility must depend upon the fact of the person who caused the riot being himself the person who has an interest in the land or an agent or manager of such person. That the adopted sons could not be held guilty under sec. 154, I. P. C. That the liabilities of the ladies were joint, but the case against them being a criminal one separate sentences should be passed against each of them. But in awarding punishment the extent of the responsibility of the estate should be kept in view rather than the number of individuals who are responsible under sec. 154, I. P. C. SIVA SUNDARI CHAUDHRANI v. THE KING-EMPEROR ... 768

P. C., and kindred sections, if done without due care to guard against dangerous consequences. In re Nidamurti Naga Bhushanam, 7 M. H. C. R. 119 (1872), and Empress v. Ketabdi Mundal, I. L. That under the circumstances of the case the fact that the Appellants pointed out the places where some of the articles stolen in a robbery were found, was not sufficient evidence to convict them under sec. 392, I. P. C., or even under sec. 411, I. P. C. Queen-Empress v. Gobinda, I. L. R. 17 All. 576 (1895), followed. PAIMULLAH v. THE KING-EMPEROR. ... 238

Mookturam Sirdar*, 23 W. R. Cr. 13 (1875), referred to. Association for the habitual pursuit of dacoity is the gist of the offence punishable under the section. Although the evidence need not show the same degree of particularity as to the commission of each dacoity as is required to support a substantive charge of that crime, it must be established for the purpose of conviction under the section that the accused belong to a gang whose business is the habitual commission of dacoity. The special conspiracy must be proved. Empress v. Kure, A. W. N. for 1886, 65, 66; King-Emperor v. Tirumal Reddi, I. L. R. 24 Mad. 523 (1901); The Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu, I. L. R. 32 Mad. 179 (1908), referred to. Corroboration of the testimony of an approver in a trial under sec. 400 must connect the accused with the offence, viz., the association of a gang of persons for the business of habitually committing dacoity. The general criminality of a tribe or caste cannot be imputed to individual members operating in gangs where the prosecution is under sec. 400, and the fact that members of the tribe generally were alleged to have been implicated in several dacoities within a period of ten years proceeding the trial was not sufficient proof against the persons under trial when it appeared that the tribe contained within it thousands of human beings. Where association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity had not been made out the mere fact that some of the accused had been previously convicted of dacoity or theft or had been bound down to be of good behaviour under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., was of no consequence. The fact that some of the persons undergoing trial for an offence under sec. 400 had once been sent up on a charge of dacoity of which they were acquitted could not be relied on to prove that they were habitual dacoits. No adverse inference can be drawn against accused persons after their acquittal. The Emperor v. Nani Gopal Gupta , 15 C. W. N. 593 (1911); See v. Plumber , (1902) 2 K. Some years after their marriage, the husband (A) became a Christian but reverted again to Mahomedanism within a month and a half. The wife (I) had in the meantime married another man during the Iddat period. Held —That the wife did not commit an offence under sec. 494, I. P. C. Apostasy from Islam, whether it takes place before or after consummation, dissolves ipso facto the marriage tie of Mahomedans. There is a consensus of opinion that a woman's marriage during Iddat is illegal and sinful, but still the woman marrying a second time after the apostasy of her former husband and during the period of Iddat, cannot be said to have gone through the form of the second marriage while her legal husband was alive. Per HOLMES J. —Whatever view be taken of the uncertain status of the parties during the period of Iddat and however illegal and void under Mahomedan law the second marriage of the woman during the period of Iddat might be, there was no foundation for any charge under sec. 494, I. P. C., against her. The parties to the marriage acted in good faith and even though they were mistaken as to their rights, they could not be made criminally liable under sec. 494, I. P. REPORTS (See Index.)

IT IS WITH DEEP SORROW THAT WE HAVE TO record the death of Mr. H. N. Morison of the Calcutta Bar, which sad event took place during the Poojah Vacation, on the 15th of October last, at Kurseong. He got called to the Bar in November 1887 and in February 1889 he was admitted as an Advocate of the Calcutta High Court. He was a man of very wide sympathies and culture and was a true gentleman in every sense of the term. Naturally he was universally popular and had made a large circle of friends. He was a man of literary and artistic tastes and at one time he was a frequent contributor to this journal. "Hints to Advocacy" was his chief contribution to the literature of law. Latterly his health showed signs of breaking down and his unexpected death from hæmorrhage confirmed the suspicion of some of his friends that he had fallen a victim to the most insidious of human diseases. He leaves a widow and three children all of whom are in England and we convey our sincerest condolence to the bereaved family.

WE ALSO DEEPLY REGRET TO RECORD THE DEATH of Babu Gnanendra Narayan Dutta, B. L., Attorney-at-Law, senior member of the firm of Messrs. G. N. Dutta & Co., which melancholy event took place at his Calcutta residence on the 1st of October last. He came from the very well-known zemindar family of Mozilpore. He was very quiet and retiring in his disposition and enjoyed the reputation of being a very honest, conscientious and a generous man. He was an attorney of 18 years' standing and had a fairly large conveying business. By his death the profession has lost a very valuable member. We deeply deplore his premature death.

IN THE COURSE OF THE LAST YEAR WE HAVE given the legal profession glimpses into the law and polity of ancient India as they prevailed in the Aryavarta many centuries before the Christian era. We propose to continue our researches in the distant past and as a prelude thereto we have reproduced in this issue a trial scene from one of the earliest Sanskrit dramas. To a lawyer it will give a fair idea of the Court house, of the Judges and their conception of duty, of the constitution of the Court and the duties of its officers and other functionaries, as also of the procedure followed at the trials, which all point to the advanced state of civilization that India had attained in those days. The artistic sensibilities of the cultured and even of the commercial classes of this distant period would also be quite a revelation to the modern artistic world. Charudatta's defence in the murder trial was that when he could not touch even a blooming creeper lest it should get hurt, was it possible for him to lay a violent hand on a beautiful woman? But above art and poetry what is most remarkable in this drama of the actual human life of the day is that law was even then no respecter of persons. The most respected, popular and benevolent citizen in the Kingdom, and a Brahmin too, whom all the sacred texts had placed above capital sentence, was found guilty by the judges on the strength of circumstantial evidence and the King condemned him to death. The popular regard for the law and justice quite fits in with the natural sequel of this charming episode. The high-caste but tyrannical Monarch is deposed and a plebeian is acclaimed King by the populace and then the curtain of this exquisite drama drops leaving us to muse and meditate if life even in ancient India was in reality at all times as Manu and the other sacred law-givers wished it to be.

BENSON AND SUNDARA AIYAR, JJ., OF THE Madras High Court have recently delivered an important decision (Acha Ranganaikammal v. Acha Ramanuja Aiyangar, 21 M. L. J. 600) on the right of a Hindu widow who has given in marriage her daughter against the wishes of her husband's father to recover expenses properly incurred by her from the latter. The claim could not evidently be supported upon the language of sec. 69 of the Contract Act. But their Lordships very rightly held that quasi-contractual liability may arise independently of the existence of a pecuniary interest in the Plaintiff in such circumstances. Bradshaw v. Beard, 12 Com. Bench Rep. N. S., p. 344, where the brother of a lady who had separated from her husband on account of a quarrel having performed her burial without communicating with the husband was held entitled to recover the costs, is an English case which shows that the principle of liability as laid down in sec. 69 of the Contract Act is not exhaustive. The question therefore was reduced to this:—whether the widow had a right to recover the expenses of the marriage from her husband's co-parceners under Hindu law.

THERE ARE SANSKRIT TEXTS TOO WELL KNOWN to require repetition here giving the father of the husband a preferential right over the widow to give the daughter in marriage. But the text refers to the act of danam (दानम्) and we have no doubt whatever that the learned Judges were right in holding that the text refers only to the performance of the ceremonial part of the marriage and does not confer the preferential right of guardianship in the matter of disposing of the girl. In Maharanee Rambansi Kanwari v. Maharanee Subha Kunwari, 7 W. R. 321, there is no doubt an obiter dictum of a bench of Judges of the Calcutta High Court to the effect that the text confers a right to dispose of a girl in marriage. But the decision of the Madras High Court seems to us to lay down the sounder view and one that will be generally accepted. It is only necessary to add that in the present instance the finding was that the co-parceners did not improperly or wrongfully refuse to perform the marriage. But this, if the law laid down is correct, would be of no consequence.

THE TRIAL OF CHARUDATTA.

The Mrichchakatika or the Earthen Car is known to be one of the oldest Sanskrit dramas. It has an interest for the student of the history of Hindu law in that it describes the trial of Charudatta for the alleged murder of a courtesan, named Vasantasena, which gives a glimpse of the actual administration of justice at that distant date. There are other aspects of the drama, which also cannot escape the attention of the historical student of law, e. g., the recognition given to gambling, the execution of gambling debts by a sort of manus in-jectio, and above all the validation of marriage by royal decree which to the student of the Smritis would seem impossible. We translate below the substantial portion of the trial scene.

THE STORY.

The story leading up to the trial scene is briefly as follows: Vasantasena, an opulent courtesan, had contracted a virtuous passion for a young and noble-minded Brahman merchant Charudatta, who had spent out his large fortune in charity and acts of kindness. She first came to know Charudatta when on a dark night, chased by Sakara, the king's licentious and foolish brother-in-law, she slipped into his house by an open door. Afterwards she left the house for her own, leaving her ornaments with Charudatta for fear of being molested on the way for them. A young man, named Sarbilaka, being in love with Madanika, a slave girl of Vasantasena, and anxious to purchase her liberty broke into Charudatta's house and stole these same ornaments. On his carrying the ornaments to Madanika she recognised them as her mistress's and scolded her lover for his misdeed. Vasantasena who had overheard their conversation, being charmed by their mutual attraction, gave Madanika to Sarbilaka for wife and took the ornaments.

In the meantime Charudatta having come to know of his loss sent his friend Maitreya with a costly jewel necklace to give to Vasantasena in exchange for her ornaments which he pretended he had lost in gambling. Vasantasena inwardly chuckled at the invention and took the necklace. In the evening she went to Charudatta's house and twitted him on his having turned a gambler. Ultimately she showed her the ornaments and related the story to him. She passed the night in Charudatta's house. Next morning Charudatta went to a lonely garden in the outskirts of the city and left instructions to his cartman to take Vasantasena there at night. While Vasantasena was preparing to go Charudatta's maidservant brought there his weeping son Rohasena. On enquiry Vasantasena learnt that he was crying for a golden toy cart and would not have the earthen cart which the maid gave him and which was all he could now afford. Thereupon Vasantasena gave her ornaments to Charudatta's son to have a gold cart made with them and left to prepare for going.

In the meantime there was a commotion in the city. One Arjyaka, a cowherd's son, had been imprisoned by the king and put in chains as it was predicted that he would depose the king and usurp the crown. He had however made his escape in a woman's clothes and when he reached near Charudatta's house, dressed as a female, there was a hot pursuit which obliged him to go indoors;

While he was staying there Charudatta's cartman (charioteer) arrived with the conveyance for Vasantasena. When the cartman called for Vasantasena Aryyaka got into the cart; and the cartman, feeling the cart heavy and judging that the lady was in drove off.

When Vasantasena came out there was another cart at the door which had been stopped there owing to the crowd in the street. Vasantasena, without any enquiry and considering the cart to be intended for her got up. The cartman did not know anything of it and drove off. It was Sakara's cart and was going to the garden house to fetch him from there.

By this mistake Vasantasena soon found herself in the presence of the man whom she hated most. Sakara first tried to persuade her to accept his suit, but ultimately after sending away the cartman as well as his companion he throttled her. When he thought her to be dead he covered her body with dry leaves and left.

He had in the meantime heard from Vasantasena that she had intended to go to another part of the same gardens to meet Charudatta. He therefore conceived the idea of charging Charudatta with the murder and went to the Adhikarana or Court to lay the complaint. This is the point where the trial scene commences.

THE TRIAL.

Scene IX.

Enter SODHANAKA.

SODHANAKA.—I have been told by the Judges, (अधिकरण भोजकाः) to go to the Hall of the Court to arrange the seats there. Now therefore I go to the Court Mandap. (Walks and looking about says) This is the Hall of the Court. Let me enter it. (Enters, sweeps and places seats) I have swept clean the Court Hall, placed the seats. Now I shall go and inform the Judges (अधिकरणिक्).

(Looking up).—Now why does this King's brother-in-law, this wicked and stupid man, come here. I shall avoid his eye in going.

(Enter SAKARA in a brilliant dress).

SAKARA.—. . . Now, on whom shall I throw the burden of this evil deed. Oh! I bethink me now. I shall throw this evil deed on poverty-stricken Charudatta. And, he is poor and everything would be deemed possible of him. So be it. I shall now go to the Court Hall and have a case written (यवहारं लेखयिष्यामि) that Vasantasena has been strangled to death by Charudatta. So now I shall go to the Court Hall. (Walks and looks up) This is the Court Hall, let me enter it now. (Enters and looks around). How now, the seats have been placed already; so the Judges must be coming now. I shall sit on this grass plot for a moment and wait. (So waits).

SODHANAKA.—(Walking in another part and looking ahead) Here come the Judges; Let me now get away. (Exit).

[Enter the JUDGE surrounded by SRESTHI (r) (merchant), KAYESTHA (clerk) and others].

JUDGE.—I say, you Sresthi and Kayastha!

SRESTHI & KAYESTHA.—What is your Honour's pleasure?

JUDGE.—O, how difficult is the work of Judges in knowing the minds of people which have to be ascertained for the purpose of determining suits. People, lost to a sense of right, come and state here matters covered with untruths and they do not speak of their own faults, so much filled are they with selfish passions. The king is affected by the sin which gains in strength by the struggle of the parties; and, as for the judge, abuse for even a slight cause comes quickly enough for him, but an appreciation of his merits comes very late indeed. For a Judge has to be well versed in law, expert in following the tracks of cunning and deceit and a good speaker; he must not have a bad temper and must be impartial to friends and strangers alike; he should give his decree only upon a consideration of the matters brought before him and not otherwise; he should be the protector of the weak, the chastiser of the wicked; and very anxious to do whatever is just. His heart should be set on ascertaining the affairs of others and he should find the means of assuaging the wrath of the king.

SRESTHI & KAYESTHA.—If anybody speaks of a fault in your Honour's virtues, he may as well speak of moonlight as dark.

JUDGE.—Good Sodhanaka show us the way to the Court Hall.

SODHANAKA.—Be pleased to come O Judge. (They walk).

SODHANAKA.—This is the Court Hall; please to enter, ye Judges.

JUDGE.—Good Sodhanaka, go out and ascertain who are here as suitors.

SODHANAKA.—As your honour pleases. (Goes out and says) The Judges ask who are here as suitors.

SAKARA.—(Smiles). The Judges have come! (Walking up) I, the great man, the royal brother-in-law, the king's brother-in-law, am a suitor.

SODHANAKA.—(Respectfully) The king's brother-in-law the very first suitor! So be it, your honour; wait a moment please while I inform the Judges. (Going to the Judge) your honour, here is the king's brother-in-law a suitor with his suit.

JUDGE.—How now, the king's brother-in-law the very first suitor! It is like the eclipse of the sun in the morning which, they say, betokens the death of a great man. Sodhanaka, the day's work would be spoiled to-day, go out and say that we shall not look into his suit to-day.

SODHANAKA.—As your honour orders. (Going out and approaching Sakara) Sir, the Judges say, go to-day, your suit will not be heard.

SAKARA.—(Angrily) What, they will not hear my suit. If they don't then I shall speak to the King my brother-in-law, to my sister and my mother and remove this Judge and appoint another in his place.

SODHANAKA.—Sir, the King's brother-in-law, please wait one moment while I inform the Judges. (Going to the Judges) The King's brother-in-law angrily says (repeats what Sakara had said).

JUDGE.—Everything is possible for that fool. Good man, go and tell him to come, we shall look into his suit.

SODHANAKA.—(Going to Sakara) Sir, the Judge asks you to come in.

SAKARA.—(Aside) first they say they won't hear and presently again that they will. So surely the Judges are afraid of me and whatever I shall say I'll make them believe. Be it so, let me enter. (Entering and approaching the Judges). Happiness to me, to you also I bid or not bid happiness just as I choose.

JUDGE.—(Aside) O, the level-mindedness of the suitor. (Aloud) Pray be seated.

SAKARA.—Ha! this land is as my own, so wherever it pleases me I shall sit. (Coming to the Sresthi) I shall sit here. (Going to Sodhanaka). No I shall sit here. (Placing his hand on the head of the Judge) I shall sit here. (Sits on the ground).

JUDGE.—You are a suitor.

SAKARA.—So I am.

JUDGE.—Then tell us your business.

SAKARA.—I shall speak in your ear. I am born of a great family. The King's father-in-law is my father; the King is my father's son-in-law; I am the King's brother-in-law; the King is my sister's husband.

JUDGE.—I know all this. But what is in a good descent; it is one's own nature that counts. Even in a good field thorny weeds grow up healthy enough. So tell us your business.

SAKARA.—So I will, even if I have done anything wrong no one can do me any harm. Now my brother-in-law, being pleased with me, has given me the lonely garden with flower beds which is the best of gardens. There I go every day to see, to dry, to improve, to nourish and to cut [plants as necessary]. As luck would have it I see, or do not see, a woman's body lying there.

JUDGE.—Now, do you know who is the unfortunate woman?

SAKARA.—Judge, do I not know that ornament of the town decked with a hundred golden ornaments? Some wretched mother's son has strangled Vasantasena by the force of his arms after entering the lonely garden for lucre, not I—[Having said this much stops with this half-finished speech and covers his face].

JUDGE.—Alas, for the negligence of the city police! Now, Sresthi and Kayestha, write down the cause of action, the first step in an action, with the expression "not I"— KAYESTHA.—As your honour pleases. (Does so) I have written.

SAKARA.—(Aside). In my haste I have killed myself. However let me see. (Aloud). How now, officers of the Court, I was going to say 'I have seen all this.' What are you making a fuss about. [Wipes away the writing with his foot].

JUDGE.—But how could you know that she had been strangled by the hand for the sake of wealth.

SAKARA.—I guessed that from the swollen condition of the neck which was destitute of the usual ornament.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—That seems likely.

SAKARA.—(Aside). Good luck has saved me.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Whom does this suit pertain to? (2).

JUDGE.—There are two kinds of suits.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—What are they?

JUDGE.—According to the words and according to the sense. The suit which follows the words of the complaint can only proceed with a complainant and a Defendant. That which follows the sense (3) (Equitable reliefs?) have to be decided by the judgment of the Judge himself.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—So this suit really pertains to Vasantasena's mother.

JUDGE.—So it does. Good Sodhanaka, go and fetch Vasantasena's mother without delay.

SODHANAKA.—So will I. (Goes out and re-enters with Vasantasena's mother) Come in, come in Madam.

OLD WOMAN.—My daughter is gone to a friend's house on a mission of love. This man—may he live long—says, 'Come the Judge calls you.' So I feel myself as under a spell. My heart trembles. Show me please the way to the Court Hall.

SODHANAKA.—This is the Court Hall, enter here madam.

OLD WOMAN.—(Approaching). Happiness to you, learned Sirs.

JUDGE.—Welcome, good woman, be seated, please.

OLD WOMAN.—As you please. (Sits down).

(2) The usual rule was that suits must be instituted at the instance of an interested party. Hence the enquiry as to who should be the complainant.

(3) The distinction is not clear. But this shows that in some cases the Judges did proceed to trial without a complaint. This would be against the words of Manu and Yajnavalkya. It would be seen however that these Smriti texts were not meant to be exhaustive.

SAKARA.—Have you come old procuress, have you come indeed?

JUDGE.—Are you Vasantasena's mother?

OLD WOMAN.—Yes.

JUDGE.—Well, where is Vasantasena gone now?

OLD WOMAN.—To a friend's house.

JUDGE.—What is the name of that friend?

OLD WOMAN.—(Aside) Alas! what a shame! (Aloud). This may be asked by a man in the street, it is not a fit question for a judge.

JUDGE.—Put aside modesty, it is the law that asks you.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—The law asks, there is no harm, tell us.

OLD WOMAN.—How does law come in? If it does, then hear you, learned Sirs; it is Charudatta of well-borne name, the son of the Sagardatta and grandson of the merchant Vinayadatta. He lives in the Merchant's Square (श्रेष्ठचत्वर) My daughter is gone there on an errand of love.

SAKARA.—Your honour has heard? Please take down these words. My suit is against Charudatta.

OLD WOMAN.—Charudatta is a friend. There's no harm in that!

JUDGE.—The suit then pertains to Charudatta.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—So it does.

JUDGE.—Dhanadatta, write down the first step of the suit as follows: "Vasantasena went to the honoured Charudatta's house." So has it come to this, that we have to summon even the honoured Charudatta! Or what's the harm, it is law that calls him. Good Sodhanaka, go and fetch Charudatta, at his ease and without causing him the least anxiety or trouble. Tell him that the Judge wants to see him.

SODHANAKA.—As your honour pleases. (Exit) (Re-entering with Charudatta) Be pleased to come Sir.

CHARU.—(Thinks). The King knows me by my ancestry as well as by my character. This summons therefore makes me fear that the facts are known. (Arguing by himself). Is it known that I have removed with my cart the prisoner who broke loose and got into the streets? The King must have been told this by his spies and that is why I am going now like an accused person. But why speculate? Let me go into the Court Hall. Good Sodhanaka, show me the way to the Court.

SODHANAKA.—Come in please Sir, (They walk).

CHARUDATTA.—(entering).—Ah! the Court hall is magnificent in its beauty. It looks like a sea; the thoughtful ministers (of justice) are like the water; the bailiffs (दूतः) are like its waves, and the conchshells like those thrown on the breach by the waves (4). The cells for prisoners round it are like the crocodiles and alligators; the horses and elephants are the other, preying sea animals (5); the men around making various sounds are like the kanka (6) bird; the kayesthas (with their crooked ways) are like the snakes (of the sea); Justice (with its uneven course) is comparable to the coast broken in by the breakers.

JUDGE.—This is Charudatta who has a noble face with the nose well raised and eyes well reaching to the sides. This is not a worthy object of causeless complaints. For amongst snakes, cows, horses and men good looks never part company with a corresponding character.

CHARU.—Blessings to the Judge! Oh King's Judge are you quite well?

JUDGE.—(Respectfully).—Welcome to you noble Sir, good Sodhanaka, place a seat for the gentleman.

SODHANAKA (Bringing a seat).—Here is the seat, sit on it please, Sir.

CHARU.—(Sits down).

SAKARA.—(Angrily).—Have you come, you murderer of a woman? Have you come? Aha! the law is just indeed, quite according to the Right, in that it gives a seat to the woman-killer. So be it; very well, give him one!

JUDGE.—Honoured Charudatta, is there any love, attachment or affection between you and this lady's daughter?

CHARU.—Whose?

JUDGE.—This lady's (Shows Vasantasena's mother).

CHARU.—(Rising).—Madam, I greet you.

OLD WOMAN.—My child, long may you live. (Aside). This is Charudatta! Well placed are my daughter's affections!

JUDGE.—Sir, is the prostitute your friend.

CHARU.—(Looks ashamed).

SAKARA.—Ah! Try to falsely conceal your true character for shame or fear. Having killed her yourself for money, you now want to cover your deed by false bearing. But the King won't keep it so.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Sir, Charudatta, speak; put aside modesty; it is law (that asks).

CHARU.—(With shame).—Well, Judge. How can I tell you that a prostitute is my friend? Or the fault is of my youth and not of my nature.

JUDGE.—The suit involves severe punishment. So put aside modesty and shame that is in your heart. Reticence will not do and any concealment is useless here. There's no need for shame, the law asks you.

(5) The horses and elephants were intended for the use of officers in serving processes and also for the execution of criminals and hence their comparison with preying animals

(6) Kanka is another name for the crow. But here it must mean some sea-bird.

(4) The Dutas evidently carried conchshells with them which they blew on occasions like the heralds in English Courts.

CHARU.—Judge, against whom am I joined in this suit?

SAKARA.—(With vehemence).—Sirrah, thy suit is with me.

CHARU.—My suit with you!

SAKARA.—O You woman-killer! having killed Vasantasena decked with a hundred jewels, you are now attempting to conceal it with false pretences.

CHARU.—You are mad.

JUDGE.—Enough of this. Sir, Charudatta, tell us the truth; is the woman your friend?

CHARU.—Yes.

JUDGE.—Sir, where is Vasantasena?

CHARU.—Gone home.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Why did she go? When did she go? Going, by whom was she accompanied?

CHARU.—(Aside).—Shall I say she went away in secret?

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Speak sir.

CHARU.—Gone home, what else shall I say?

SAKARA.—You entered my lonely garden and strangled her for her ornaments. Now you say she went home—really?

CHARU.—Ah! irrelevant raver, your face turns pale like the lotus of autumn; that shows that you are lying.

JUDGE.—(Aside).—To accuse Charudatta is as absurd as to weigh the Himalayas or to drive the sea or catch the wind. (Aloud). Why should the honoured Charudatta do such a misdeed?

SAKARA.—What! is the suit to be decided with partiality?

JUDGE.—Get away you fool! Being a low man you utter the Vedas, does not your tongue drop out? You look at the midday sun, is not your sight destroyed at once? You throw your hands into the fire, are they not scalded yet? You defame Charudatta's character, does not the earth remove your carcass? Why should Charudatta do the misdeed? He has given away riches unstintedly till like the sea despoiled of its endless riches he is reduced to mere high waves. Why should that great and noble man, honoured even by his enemies, do a misdeed for lucre.

SAKARA.—What, is the suit to be decided with partiality?

OLD WOMAN.—Wonder of wonders! He who gives away a necklace made of jewels which are the choicest that could he got in the four seas together because some deposited golden ornaments were stolen by a thief, would he do this misdeed for filthy lucre? Oh my girl! Oh my daughter!

JUDGE.—Sir, did she go walking or on a car?

CHARU.—The fact is that she did not go in my presence, so I do not know whether she went on foot or on a car.

(Enter VEERAKA in sulks).

VEERAKA.—I have been kicked, insulted, overpowered in the duel; thinking of these things my night has passed very indifferently (7). Now here I see the Court-Hall. Let me go in. (Entering). Happiness to you all, learned Sirs.

JUDGE.—Hallo, this is Veeraka, the city constable. Veeraka, what is your object in coming here.

VEERAKA.—Well, I was searching for Aryyaka after he had broken loose from his captivity. I guessed that he should be going by some covered vehicle. While searching one of these I said to Chandanaka, 'Well you have seen, I also want to have a look.' At this he kicked me. So I have come to you, learned Sirs.

JUDGE.—My good man, do you know whose that car was.

VEERAKA.—The cartman said, 'This is Charudatta's car conveying Vasantasena to the lonely garden for a pleasure trip.'

SAKARA.—Have you heard again Sirs?

JUDGE.—So the pure moonlight is covered by Rahu and the clear water is made turbid by the breaking bank! Veeraka, we shall look into your case hereafter. Now take the horse that is there at the gate, ride on it to the garden and see whether there is any woman in a poor plight or not.

VEERAKA.—As your honour pleases (Exit) (Re-entering). I went there and saw the body of a woman being eaten by beasts of prey.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—How could you know that it was a woman's body?

VEERAKA.—By the hair, the arms, hands and legs that were yet left.

JUDGE.—Alas! Woe unto the inequities of human laws. The more I anxiously deliberate the more I find difficulties. Alas, the requirements of law are well satisfied.

CHARU.—(Aside). Like the bees that come swarming to drink the honey when a flower first opens, misfortunes come in swarms when once a man has got into trouble.

JUDGE.—Sir, Charudatta, tell us the truth.

CHARU.—When a wicked man, jealous of another's good name and anxious to destroy another's life under the influence of a blinding passion, when such a man tells a lie, as by his nature he must, is that to be accepted? Nay, it is not worthy of consideration even. And again, I never even pull out a blooming creeper to take the flower that is on it, is it likely that I could kill a beautiful woman by pulling at her smooth dark long hair, she weeping at the time?

(7) This man was one of a party of soldiers out in search of Aryyaka when he had fled. This party had stopped Charudatta's car which carried Aryyaka. One of his companions Chandanaka looked into the car but was induced by Aryyaka's entreaties to let him go. He came out and said that it was a woman. Veeraka was suspicious and wanted to have a look himself. His companion resented and provoked a quarrel which was followed by a fight in which Veeraka came off worse. During the scuffle the car escaped with Aryyaka.

SAKARA.—Look here Judge, are you going to try the suit with partiality, that you are even now allowing the man Charudatta to sit on a chair.

JUDGE.—Good Sodhanaka, do so (i.e., remove his chair).

(Sodhanaka does so).

CHARUDATTA.—Yes, Judges, judge me, judge me. (Leaves the chair and sits down on the ground).

SAKARA—(Aside). Ha! Ha! Thus have I thrown my crime on him. Now let me go and sit where Charudatta sat. (Does so). Look Charudatta, look at me and say that you have killed her.

CHARU.—Say Judges if the word of such a wicked man is to be accepted. It is not worthy of consideration. (Aside). Oh Maitreya, what a plight is mine to-day, Oh my wife, born of a faultless Brahmin family! Oh Rohasena, thou seest not my misfortune, vainly dost thou play and enjoy thyself, for misery is henceforth to be thy lot. I have sent Maitreya to Vasantasena to get news of her and to return to her the ornaments that she gave to Rohasena for his cart. Why does he delay.

(Enter VIDUSAKA with the ornaments).

VIDUSAKA.—I was sent by Charudatta to Vasantasena. He said, "Friend Maitreya! Vasantasena sent my son Rohasena to his mother, decked in her own ornaments. Her ornaments have to be returned and not taken. So go and return them to her. So I am going to Vasantasena's place. (Looking ahead). How now, learned Rebhila, O learned Rebhila, why do you look anxious? (Hearing him). What do you say? Friend Charudatta summoned to the Court? It must be no small matter. (Thinks). I'll go to Vasantasena later on, let me first go to the Court. (Walks and looking up says). This is the Court-Hall, let me enter it now. (Entering). Happiness to the Judges. Where is my dear friend?

JUDGE.—Why, he is there.

VIDU.—All pleasant with you?

CHARU.—Yes, it will be soon.

VIDU.—All well with you?

CHARU.—That too will be soon.

VIDU.—How now, friend, why do you look so anxious? And why have you been summoned?

CHARU.—Friend, by me, cruel and ignorant of the Hereafter, a woman who might as well be Rati herself—the rest this gentleman will say.

VIDU.—What? What?

CHARU.—(Whispers in his ears).

VIDU.—Who says so?

CHARU.—(Pointing to Sakara). That holy ascetic over there, officiating for my death, so complains.

VIDU.—(To Charudatta). Why did you not say that she had gone home.

CHARU.—I have said so, but from adverse circumstances that is not believed.

VIDU.—Oh you noble Sirs, do you believe that this man who has adorned the city of Ujjayini with buildings, monasteries, gardens, temples, lakes and wells, that he has done such a misdeed for the sake of petty lucre. (Angrily). O, you bastard! The King's brother-in-law! licentious, wicked gold-covered monkey, say, say before me if you dare, how my friend who would not pull a flowering Madhabi creeper for fear lest it might be snapped, say how he could have done this misdeed so injurious to life both here and hereafter. Stay you procuress's son, stay till I break your head into a hundred parts with this wooden stick, crooked as it is like thy heart.

SAKARA.—Hear him, learned Sirs. My suit or quarrel is with Charudatta; why does this wretched fellow want to break my head into a hundred parts. Don't do so you son of a slave-girl, you wicked fellow.

VIDU.—(Abuses as before with the stick raised).

[Sakara angrily rushes at him; Vidusaka returns the attack; they beat each other; in the course of the struggle the ornaments fall down from Vidusaka's armpit].

SAKARA.—(Taking up the ornaments). Look, look, masters! These are the ornaments from her body. (Pointing to Charudatta). For this that man has beaten and killed her.

(The officers of the Court all hang their heads).

CHARU.—(Aside). At such a time do these ornaments come to view! Fallen now as my ill luck would have it, it will fell me.

VIDU.—Friend, why don't you tell them exactly what happened.

CHARU.—Friend, what's the use. The King's sight is weak, he can't see the truth through these things. If I say anything it would only add to my humiliation and make death dishonourable.

JUDGE.—How unhappy the lot! Mangala is against him and Vrihaspati is weak in him. Here again arises against him another evil star in these ornaments like a veritable comet.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—(After looking at the ornaments and addressing Vasantasena's mother). Attend, Madam; are these ornaments yours or not?

OLD WOMAN.—(Looking). These are like them but not the identical ones.

SAKARA.—Oh you old procuress! You know by the sight and deny by your mouth.

OLD WOMAN.—Fool, get away!

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Speak with deliberation; are these the same ornaments or not?

OLD WOMAN.—Sir, the art of the maker deceives the eye, but these are not the same ornaments.

JUDGE.—Good woman, do you know these ornaments?

OLD WOMAN.—I tell you, these do not seem altogether unknown but they have been deceptively made by the artist.

JUDGE.—Sresthi, examine them. It often happens that imitations are made, alike in substance and look, of things. Looking at the work of one man, another artist imitates him and so produces another thing exactly alike.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—These are honoured Charudatta's.

CHARU.—No, no.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Whose are they then?

CHARU.—They belong to this lady's daughter.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—How did she part with them?

CHARU.—(Relating the circumstances). Thus they have come to me.

SRESTHI AND KAYESTHA.—Sir, Charudatta, here you should speak the truth. Truth gives happiness; one who tells the truth never becomes a sinner. Truth is simple. Don't cover it with falsehood.

CHARU.—I don't know what these ornaments are. I know they have been brought from my house.

SAKARA.—You first enter the garden and kill her; now you want to conceal the truth by false dealing.

JUDGE.—Sir, Charudatta, tell us the truth. Presently our rude whips would fall on your soft body and it will grieve us greatly.

CHARU.—I am born of a sinless family; there is no sin in me. Is it possible that a sinless man like me should commit this crime? (Aside). I don't care to live without Vasantasena. (Aloud). There is no need for further talk. By myself, cruel and ignorant of the Hereafter, a woman who for her beauty might as well be Rati herself—the rest will be said by this gentleman.

SAKARA.—Has been killed. Ay, say yourself "I have killed."

CHARU.—You yourself have said so.

SAKARA.—Listen, listen gentleman. He has killed (her). All doubt has been removed by this. I pray that corporal punishment be awarded to him.

JUDGE.—Sodhanaka, do as the King's relation has said. Officers, take hold of Charudatta.

OLD WOMAN.—Be pleased to hear, learned Sirs. This man who sent a necklace of jewels which were the choicest that could be had in the four seas together in the place of stolen gold ornaments, is it possible that he should have killed my daughter for her jewels? If he has killed, he has killed. Long may my son live. Now, a suit is between a Complainant and a Defendant. I am the complainant in this case. So release him, I say.

SAKARA.—Get away, born slave, get away. What have you got to do with all this.

JUDGE.—Madam go away. Officers take him away.

OLD WOMAN.—O my child, O my son—(Exit weeping).

SAKARA.—(Aside). I have done just what I should like. Now let me go. (Exit).

JUDGE.—Sir, Charudatta, we are authorised only to decide. For the rest it is with the King. Sodhanaka, inform King Palaka. Tell him that this Brahman offender is not to be sentenced to death but should be banished the realm with his wealth undiminished. So Manu has laid down.

SODHANAKA.—As your honour pleases (Exit). (Re-entering) Sirs, I had been there. King Palaka says that the ornaments for which Vasantasena was killed should be tied round the criminal's neck and he should be taken with the beat of drums to the southern execution ground and there made to die on a spike, so that whoever else may do such things may be warned by this punishment.

CHARU.—Oh the wrong-headed King Palaka! Thrown into the fire of this kind of law by ministers, Kings soon attain a miserable condition. These white crows (8) of ministers by polluting King's justice kill thousands of innocent men and are killed themselves.

Friend Maitreya, take my word to my wife and give her my last greetings. Bring up my son Rohasena.

VIDU.—When the root is severed how can a tree be nursed.

CHARU.—Say not so. The son is the image of a deceased person. The love that you bear to me, do please bestow on Rohasena.

VIDU.—Friend, I am your dear friend, do you suppose I should live without you.

CHARU.—Show your love to Rohasena.

VIDU.—That is well said.

JUDGE.—Good Sodhanaka, remove these men. (Sodhanaka does so) Is there anybody here? Give orders to the Chandalas.

(Charudatta is being removed by officers).

SODHANAKA.—Sir, please come this way.

CHARU.—Maitreya, friend, what is this my plight to-day. O my wife! begotten of a spotless ancestry! O Rohasena, vain are thy pleasures and enjoyments, for ever afterwards misery will be thy lot. O king! you could have tried the case against me by the scales, poison, water, fire &c., (ordeal) (9) but without thus fairly ascertaining my guilt you lay your hand on my body. You are going to kill, at my enemy's word, me a Brahmin: you shall fall into Hell with all your children and grandchildren. Here, I come. (Exit).

THE CONCLUSION.

In the next and the concluding scene of the drama Charudatta is carried to the execution-

(8) These are regarded as of evil omen.

(9) The last expressions show an evident reference to Yajñavalkya II, 95.

तूष्णीमापोर्विषं कोशो दिव्यानौह विशूद्वये ।

The subsequent verses of Yajñavalkya give details of the trial by ordeal as practised under Hindu law.

ground by the Chandalas through the streets. There are five places fixed for making announcements; as he is brought to each of these places his attendants beat the drum and repeat in a set form of words the offence of Charudatta and the punishment destined for him. On the way sympathising crowds bless him and ladies drop their tears from the windows above.

In the course of an affecting interview with his son who is brought to him by Maitreya, Charudatta was brought to one of the places of announcement. Just above that place was imprisoned Sthavaraka, the cartman who had unknowingly taken Vasantasena to Sakara's garden. Sakara's companion who also knew the circumstances of Vasantasena's death, having left the city to join Aryyaka, this was the only witness to Sakara's crime. Sakara had therefore confined him in a room. Sthavaraka on hearing the announcement guessed everything and by a supreme effort released himself by throwing himself from the window and related the true facts to all present. Sakara arrived at this juncture and succeeded in discrediting this man by slipping in a golden trinket into his hand and then saying that for stealing that he had confined the slave and that he was accusing him out of spite on that account.

This man having thus been disposed of, Charudatta was carried to the execution ground. At the last proclamation place, Vasantasena met the crowd.

She had not been killed by Sakara's violence but had only fallen senseless. She had been revived by a Buddhist Bhikshu who was once a gambler and had on one occasion been saved from his creditors by Vasantasena's generosity. This man was taking her to Charudatta's place at her bidding when on the way they saw the crowd accompanying Charudatta to the execution. Just then the last proclamation was being made. The Bhikshu heard and explained it to Vasantasena. They both hurried forward making their way as best they could through the crowd. And just when the sword raised by one of the Chandalas accidentally slipped away from his hand, she arrived there and discovered herself. On seeing her Sakara fled, pursued by the Chandalas.

While Vasantasena and Charudatta were talking of what had occurred since they parted, great things had occurred in the city. Aryyaka had by a secret move taken King Palaka unawares, killed him and possessed the city. Sarbilaka his friend and chief officer was immediately sent to look for Charudatta. He arrived at this juncture and broke to Charudatta the news of Aryyaka's success. Just then Sakara was brought a prisoner. He threw himself at Charudatta's feet and as Sarbilaka said he would leave the punishment to Charudatta, the latter asked him to be immediately released.

Meanwhile Dhuta, Charudatta's wife had decided to immolate herself on a pyre and, unwilling to hear of Charudatta's death before she died, she was making all haste. Informed of this Charudatta rushed to the spot and was just in time to save the situation. He was here reunited to his son and Maitreya. Sarbilaka announced King Aryyaka's pleasure that Vasantasena should henceforth be regarded as the lawful wife of Charudatta.

LEADING CASES AND STATUTES ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. With notes, explanatory and connective. By Ernest Cockle. Second Edition, London. Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3 Chancery Lane, W. C. 1911.

The study of leading cases in extenso has of late formed an important item of the curriculum of legal study for the University students here. We have long been of opinion that the study of cases from the Law Reports often prove more confusing than helpful to students and we are glad to be confirmed in our view by the author of the work under review. We are quite at one with him that "nothing confuses students more than striking but immaterial facts." The author of the present compilation has presented the material portions of the judgments only, so that the point may be easily appreciated and assimilated by the students. The author has not been content with merely clipping the judgments to suit students, he has arranged them after the manner of a text-book furnishing introductory notes at the beginning of each group of cases and further notes by way of connecting links between them. The book is thus a happy compromise between a text-book and a collection of leading cases and as such we cordially recommend it to the students of law in this country. It is, however, by no means students only who profit by such books. Practitioners have also shown their appreciation of the work and the author has had to amplify the scope of the work in the present edition to suit their requirements.

THE LEADING CASES ON HINDU LAW. Part I. Adoption—Capacity. By S. Srinivasa Aiyar, Vakil, High Court, Madras; G. C. Loganadham Bros. The Guardian Press, Mount Road. 1911.

Mr. Aiyar is following in regard to Hindu Law almost the same plan as that adopted in the work just noticed. There are introductory notes, brief statements of facts followed by material portions of the judgment—the whole annotated by reference to texts and cases in which the principles of the cases have been followed. The notes are perhaps a little elaborate, showing that the interests of the practitioner have been kept more in view than the students'. There is no doubt, however, that a careful study of the book whether by a student or legal practitioner will be wholly beneficial.

THE LAW OF SERVICE TENURE IN BENGAL. By Ranajit Sinha, B. A., B. L., Pleader, Bhagulpur. The Law Printing House, Mount Road, Madras.

The author deserves all praise for bringing together the law on this important subject scattered as it is in different reports and statutory enactments. We have no doubt that it will be prized by practitioners for the saving it will effect in their labour in their search for authorities.

Notes of Cases. ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Savidge. Before JUSTICES DARLING, COLERIDGE AND HAMILTON. 23rd October 1911.

Misdirection of jury, confused and conflicting account—Burden is upon the prosecution to show that if a misdirection of fact had not been made the jury would have arrived at the same verdict.

This was an appeal from a conviction and sentence for manslaughter on a trial before AVORY, J. The story for the prosecution was that the Appellant was in a public house with the deceased, that the Appellant dealt a blow, unprovoked and unlawful, which caused the death. The defence was that the blow was given under provocation and under such circumstances as to justify the deed. Both sides produced evidence of the affray. The learned Judge in the course of his summing up to the jury said :—

"Now, shortly, I will remind you of the way in which the case stands on the part of the prosecution and on the part of the defence, making this observation while I remember it, that, with the exception of the prisoner himself, who did give evidence before the Coroner, none of the witnesses for the defence who have been called before you to-day ever gave evidence before the Magistrate in this case. They have given their evidence for the first time, and there has been, therefore, no opportunity of testing the truthfulness by any inquiry of what they said."

"Mr. Carter, who appeared for the Crown, then said :—'My Lord, if I might interpose, some of these witnesses did give evidence before the Coroner.'"

"The learned Judge replied.—'I said "before the Magistrate." Did I not say that with the exception that the prisoner did give evidence before the Coroner, none of these witnesses for the defence have given evidence before to-day ?

"Mr. Carter then said :—'I beg your Lordship's pardon ; I misunderstood your Lordship.'"

"MR. JUSTICE AVORY then said.—'That is what I meant to say. The prisoner did give evidence before the Coroner ; the prisoner did not give evidence before the Magistrate, who had to decide whether this case should be sent for trial, and none of the other witnesses for the defence who have appeared here to-day appeared before the Magistrate and gave any evidence. My observation was that there therefore could be no opportunity of testing by inquiry the truthfulness of their statements.'"

The Appellant contended that the trial Judge had misdirected the jury. The Court allowed the appeal and quashed the conviction. In the course of the judgment Mr. Justice Coleridge said :—

The substance of this was the conveying to the jury that, although the Appellant himself had been called before the Coroner, none of the witnesses he had put forward at the trial had been called, before, either at the Police Court or before the Coroner, and that, therefore, there had been no opportunity for testing the statements that they had now made at the trial for the first time on oath. Now some of these witnesses had given evidence before the Coroner, and there had therefore been an opportunity to test their story. It must be remembered that the jury had to judge from confused and conflicting accounts of what had taken place, and that it appeared that the Appellant had received considerable provocation as appeared from the rider the jury appended to their verdict that they recommended the prisoner to mercy on account of the large amount of provocation he apparently received.

It is clear that there was a very nice question for the jury as to which account of what happened was to be believed, and it was on this question as to which side the jury should incline their minds that the learned Judge made the observations I have read.

We cannot dive into the minds of the jury as to what guided them in the decision at which they arrived. Having regard to the mistake which occurred in these circumstances, it rests upon the prosecution to show that if this unfortunate statement had not been made the jury would have arrived at the same verdict. As the Lord Chief Justice said in Stoddart's case (1909, 73 J. P., 379), the question is whether, if the jury had been properly directed, they would have returned the same verdict. We are not satisfied that the jury would have returned the same verdict if this statement had not been made by the learned Judge. In every other way the learned Judge summed up the case most fairly. Unfortunately he was led by human error, to which we are all subject, to make these observations.

Mr. Lynch for the Appellant.

Mr. Carter for the Crown.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—The Moss Steamship Co., "Ld" v. Whinney. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR, THE EARL OF HALSBURY, AND LORDS ASHBOURNE, ATKINSON, SHAW AND MERSEY. 26th June 1911.

Receiver trustee or agent—His liability, whether personal.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal. The facts were as follows :—

Messrs. Ind, Coope, & Co. had for some time shipped beer on the vessels of the Moss Steamship Company, and taken bills of lading which provided that the shipowner shall have a lien on the goods not only for the stipulated freight, but also for any unsatisfied freight due on other shipments either from shipper or consignee to the shipowner. On January 5th an order was made in a debenture-holder's action that Mr. Whinney should be receiver and manager of Ind, Coope, & Co. It was that the company still remained a living son, but was disabled from conducting its business of which the entire conduct passed into the hands of Mr. Whinney. Mr. Whinney did not wind down the business, but continued it, and, for other things, he resolved to send some of Messrs. Coope, & Co.'s beer to Malta to the consignee's representatives there.

Accordingly on January 3rd he sent an order to the Moss Steamship Company directing them to ship the beer to Ind, Coope, & Co., care of Messrs. Bull, Junr. and Somerville of Malta, and he gave the following order :—"Ind, Coope, & Co., Limited, Arthur F. Whinney, Receiver and manager." Upon this Messrs. James Moss & Co., as shipper, shipped the beer and made out the bill of lading in the terms theretofore in use, which, gave to the shippers a contractual lien, not merely for the freight of £56 payable for this particular beer, but also for any unsatisfied freight due, either from shipper or consignee. There was at that time due from Ind, Coope, & Co. to the shipowner the sum of £171 for unsatisfied freight.

The question for decision now was :—

Can Mr. Whinney claim delivery of this beer on payment of the stipulated freight of £56 or must he also pay the additional £171 unsatisfied freight due upon earlier contracts from Ind, Coope, & Co., in accordance with the lien clause in the bill of lading?

Mr. Justice Hamilton decreed the full claim but his judgment was set aside by Lord Justices Vaughan Williams and Buckley, Lord Justice Moulton dissenting. The Court now dismissed the appeal, Lords Shaw and Mersey dissenting. In the course of his judgment the Lord Chancellor said :—

My Lords, questions have been raised as to the power of a Receiver and manager to hypothecate the assets of the company for payment of unsecured creditors. It is said that such a proceeding would be ultra vires, or at all events an excess of authority, of which a trader who knew the position could not avail himself. I do not think such a question arises in the present case for the reason stated by Mr. Bailhache. This is an action between the shipowners on the one side and Mr. Whinney on the other. If Mr. Whinney has contracted so to hypothecate these goods, I say if he has done so, he cannot himself compel the shipowners to deliver them without first satisfying the charge which he has created. As between the litigating parties there is a charge. It may be that Mr. Whinney had no power to create it, but if so, then it is for the company to claim the goods and to raise the question of his authority. Of course, a decision upon the ground so taken by Mr. Bailhache would really settle nothing as to the true rights of the shipowners.

In my opinion there is another ground upon which the case ought to be decided in favour of the shipowners. The shipowners can claim a lien on the £171 unsatisfied freight only if this freight was due by the shippers or consignees of this particular shipment of beer. As between the shippers and consignees respectively they must look at the order of January 5th and the bill of lading together. The order was made by Ind, Coope, & Co. by Mr. Whinney, receiver and manager. Unless qualified by other circumstances absent here, this means that Mr. Whinney ordered the shipment and contracts for it on his personal credit, looking, of course, for reimbursement to the assets of the company, of which he was receiver and manager. He is the shipper in the bill of lading, if it is true, of Ind, Coope, & Co. The shipowners know, from the terms of the order, or ought to know, that Ind, Coope, & Co. no longer are conducting the business, but Mr. Whinney is conducting it and making contracts for it. So again, when in the bill of lading Ind, Coope, & Co. are named as consignees, the shipowners know that they are so only in name, the real consignee being the same as the real shipper, namely, Mr. Whinney, the Receiver and manager.

I agree with Lord Justice Moulton that the company was still alive and its business was being still carried on by Mr. Whinney, but he was not carrying on as the company's agent. He superseded the company, and the transactions upon which he entered in carrying on the old business were his transactions, upon which he was personally liable. He was really a trustee, and the shipowners dealt with the trustee. No doubt there may be cases in which a Receiver and manager is in all senses the agent of the company, and a question may then arise as to the extent of his authority. But here he was not such agent, and this was sufficiently conveyed to the shipowners by the notice that he was Receiver and manager.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Central London Railway v. Commissioners of Land Tax for the City of London. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES FARWELL AND KENNEDY. 24th July 1911.

Ownership, presumption of, a centro usque ad cælum—Ownership of half the street presumed in abutting owner—Liability of the tube railways to pay the land tax.

This was an appeal from a decision of SWINFEN EADY, J.

The case raised two questions of importance as to the Plaintiff company's liability for land tax—first, where their line lay under highways and the tax had been redeemed on lands abutting on those highways, and, secondly, where it lay under any lands the surface of which had been exonerated from the tax by redemption.

The Court below held that where the land tax had been redeemed on lands or houses abutting on a public thoroughfare the exoneration did not extend to the middle line of such thoroughfare, and that for that portion the tube railway was liable to pay the land tax.

Hence this appeal which was allowed by a majority, Lord Justice Farwell dissenting.

In the course of his Judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said—

It is important to observe that there is no suggestion of any separate assessment of a moiety of Cheapside. And further that in 1804 Cheapside was, and that in the present year the streets in the City of London are, like country roads in this sense, that the "streets" are not vested in any local authority. The entire ownership a centro usque ad cælum is vested in the owners of the adjoining houses. In the absence of evidence to rebut the presumption, the owner of each house is owner of the street usque ad medium filum. It is often called a presumption of law, and I do not stop to consider whether it is more properly called a presumption of fact.

His Lordship, after observing that various theories had been started as to the origin of this presumption, referred to the authorities on the point.

Whatever be the origin of the presumption, said his Lordship, its existence cannot be disputed. It is not a mere conveyancing presumption. It is a rule of construction that a message includes a moiety of the street or road in which it is situate. The message and the moiety of the street or road are one tenement. Some evidence must be forthcoming to establish a severance or the existence of two tenements. This applies to a contract to sell the house, to a grant of the house, and to a lease of the house. A remarkable instance in the case of lease was where the landlord was allowed to distrain on a cart standing on the moiety of the road, as being on the demised premises—Hodges v. Lawrence (13 J.P., p. 347).

It applies also to a devise of the house. I cannot suggest any legal instrument to which the presumption would not apply. An inclosure award is not really an exception. For the roads set out under the award owe their existence to the Inclosure Act; and it depends upon the language of the Act and the award whether the lord of the manor has or has not been deprived of the soil for the benefit of the adjacent owners. It is conceded that the presumption may be rebutted, and the terms of the Act and award may suffice to rebut it.

Is there any reason for holding that the assessment of the house and the certificate of the contract for redemption are documents to which the presumption does not apply and that they did not, as matter of construction, include a moiety of the street? I can discover none. It is plain that the moiety of the street or road might be included without being expressly named. For example, "the manor of X," "all the estate of John Smith in the parish of Y." And I feel no doubt that the "Priory Firm" would include the soil of any roads running through the farm. A limited owner who redeems the land tax on the house gets a charge upon the property. It is not reasonable to suppose that his charge extends only to the outside wall of the house and not to the middle of the street. I do not feel pressed by the argument that a separate assessment of a street or road is seldom to be found.

The fact that the moiety of the road was of little or no value, having regard to the public rights over it, seems to tend in favour of its inclusion in the assessment. But it is a fallacy to assert that there can be no beneficial occupation of the street. The owner of the adjacent house has not only legal possession which enables him to restrain trespassers, but he has also rights which are or may be of value. For example, the right to wells, vaults or cellars under the street, or to grant licences for carrying wires over the street. I am not aware of any authority adverse to the view which I have expressed. Much reliance was placed upon a sentence in Lord Watson's judgment in Metropolitan Railway Company v. Fowler (1893, A. C., 487), but I do not think it right to attribute to the dictum of that great Judge the weight of a deliberate judgment upon a point not distinctly raised before him.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 287, 311—Execution sale—Postponement of sale—Proclamation fixing date of monthly sale as the day of sale—Monthly sale delayed—Sale in course of monthly sale on a later date—Irregularity—Substantial injury.

• Where an execution sale which was to take place on the 16th May 1903 was on that date postponed and fresh proclamation of sale was issued directing that the sale would be held "at the monthly sale commencing at 6 o'clock in the morning of the 13th July 1903," but the monthly sale, owing to the absence from station of the presiding officer, did not take place till the 20th July on which date the property was sold in the course of the monthly sales :

Held—That the sale was not in contravention of secs. 287 and 291 of Act XIV of 1882.

That even if there was any irregularity in the sale, it could not be set aside in the absence of substantial injury.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Calcutta dated the 24th of September 1905 which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate

Judge of Monghyr dated the 11th of May 1904 who rejected an application by the Appellants as judgment-debtors to set aside a judicial sale.

The application was made by a petition dated the 13th of August 1903 under sec. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) on the ground of material irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale of the property of the judgment-debtors which it was alleged was followed by substantial injury. It was further contended that the property in dispute was a ghatwali tenure and was therefore not liable to sale under the law.

In reply to the petition of the judgment-debtors the auction-purchaser at the sale (the present Respondent) put in a petition of objection dated the 11th of April 1904 in which he asserted that there was no irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale ; that an adequate price was obtained for the property at the sale and that the contention that it was not transferable by reason of its being a ghatwali tenure of a particular class was entirely wrong.

With reference to the allegations of the parties the Subordinate Judge framed the following issues for trial :—

(1) Whether the property in dispute is transferable ?

(2) Whether there was a material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale ?

(3) Whether the property in dispute was sold at an inadequate price ?

Oral and documentary evidence was adduced on behalf of both parties. On that evidence the Subordinate Judge found that the property in dispute was a ghatwali tenure. But the Subordinate Judge found as a fact that in the particular ghatwali tenure before him there was not only no custom restricting its alienation, but it was satisfactorily established by the evidence of the judgment-debtor himself and by the instances of transfers produced in the case that it had been all along the subject of divisions and transfer. He therefore decided the first issue against the judgment-debtors and his finding on it was apparently not disputed in the High Court. Dealing with the second issue the Subordinate Judge recorded that the irregularities complained of were as follows :—

(a) Non-publication of the sale-proclamation.

(b) Non-publication of a fresh proclamation under sec. 291, Civil Procedure Code, the sale not having taken place within seven days from the date fixed for the sale.

(c) That the Government Revenue payable being more than Rs. 500 the sale should have been published in the Calcutta Gazette.

(d) That when the property in dispute was purchased in the name of Balmakund Sahay, Dewan of the Maharaja of Gidhour, the latter cannot be declared to be the purchaser of the property.

With regard to (a) the Subordinate Judge found that it was established by the evidence that the sale-proclamation was published in all the villages of the disputed taluk and was otherwise duly made known. As to the other matters complained of he held that they did not constitute irregularities in conducting the sale.

On the third and last issue he found that every possible care was taken to sell the property at a fair price and that the sum of Rs. 38,000 realised by the sale was "a very adequate value."

He therefore ordered that the application of the judgment-debtors should be rejected and that the sale should be confirmed.

The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court at Calcutta from the order of the Subordinate Judge. The appeal was heard by two learned Judges (Harington and Pargiter, JJ.) of the Court who, on the 24th of September 1905, delivered their judgment, the material portion of which is as follows :—

"The point taken on behalf of the Appellants is that the sale should have taken place on the 13th July 1903 but that the Judge being away on casual leave the sale did not take place until the 18th July, that there was no warrant for holding the sale on the 18th and that therefore the whole proceeding was illegal and void.

"It is further contended that the notices required to be served were only served in one out of the 13 mouzahs. Even if it be assumed that these matters were established there was in our opinion only an irregularity. The onus therefore rests upon the Appellants to show that they have suffered substantial loss in consequence of these irregularities supposing in fact irregularities took place.

"Now the property was sold and it fetched Rs. 38,000. The Judge finds that the net collection from the property amounted to Rs. 2,054-odd. If that finding is correct then so far from the judgment-debtors having suffered any injury they succeeded in selling their property at a good price at 19 years' purchase which is more than the average price of property in that district. But the Appellants contend that the collections amounted to Rs. 5,200 or 5,300. Oral evidence was given to this effect and the Appellants state that the jumma-bundi showing these figures is in possession of their manager. It is a very remarkable fact that they did not produce the jumma-bundis which they say are in their manager's possession. From the Road-cess returns which were filed by the judgment-debtors we see that the collections amounted to something over Rs. 2,000. That being so we think the Judge was quite right in his conclusion and the Appellants have entirely failed to show that the property has been sold at an inadequate price. Even if there was an irregularity in the proceedings the Appellants have sustained no damage, consequently they are not entitled to have the sale set aside."

The appeal was therefore dismissed with costs and hence this appeal.

• Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Appellants :

There were material irregularities in the conduct of the sale and the Appellants suffered substantial loss thereby. The sale was held more than seven days after the advertised date. It was in violation of sec. 291, C. P. C. A fresh proclamation was essential. It was a condition precedent to the sale, its absence is an illegality and it is no sale within the meaning of the Code. Cited Basharutulla v. Uma Churn (1) ; Ameer Ali and Woodroffe's Code of Civil Procedure, p. 949. If not an illegality, it is an irregularity and the price obtained was inadequate.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Ross for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by .

from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Bengal which affirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr dismissing the application of the judgment-debtors, Appellants, under sec. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to set aside a sale of certain landed property in execution of a mortgage decree.

The grounds on which the sale was impugned in the first Court were two-fold, (1) that the property sold was a ghatwali tenure and therefore inalienable ; and (2) that there was material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale which resulted in substantial injury to the Appellants. .

The first ground appears to have been abandoned in the High Court and is not pressed before this Board. The Appellants now rest their case mainly on the provisions of secs. 287 and 291 of the Code. They urge that on the 16th of May 1903 the sale was postponed to the 13th of July following and a sale-proclamation was directed to issue fixing that date for sale ; that it was not sold on the 13th, but on a later date, without a fresh proclamation as required by law, and that consequently the sale is null and void, and ought to be set aside. An examination, however, of the proceedings culminating in the sale, shows that there is no substance in the Appellants' contention. It is clear from the order-sheet that sale-proclamations had issued, at the instance of the Appellants, not less than six times. On the 30th of March 1903 the sale was stayed on their application and a sale-proclamation had issued fixing the 11th of May. On this day the Appellants asked for three days' grace, which was granted, the property being " kept under hammer." It was not, however, put up to sale until the 16th of May, when it was found that there were not sufficient bidders present, and a fresh proclamation was therefore ordered to issue fixing the 13th of July for the sale. In the proclamation it was notified that "in the absence of any order of postponement the sale would be held at the monthly sale, commencing at 6 o'clock in the morning of the 13th of July 1903, at Monghyr."

The presiding officer was, however, absent from Monghyr from the 13th to the 16th of July. On the 17th an application was made to him for a postponement, which was rejected. The property, however, was not sold until the 20th. It is evident that on the 16th of May the sale was postponed to the 13th of July, the day on which the monthly sales were to commence; those sales did not actually begin until the 17th, owing to the absence from the station of the presiding officer, and the sale was held on the 20th in the course of the monthly sales. On the facts appearing on the record their Lordships think the Subordinate Judge did not act in contravention of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in holding the sale on the 20th of July.

Both the Courts in India have found against the Appellants on the question of substantial injury. The evidence regarding the value of the property is meagre and unsatisfactory, and their Lordships are not satisfied that, assuming even there was any irregularity in publishing the sale, any substantial injury has been caused thereby to the Appellants.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the order of the High Court is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 1134 OF 1910.

STEPHEN, J.	}	JUMNA DASS, Plaintiff,
1911,		v.
16, January.		HARCHARN DASS, Defendant.

Jurisdiction of the High Court—Restraint of suit outside the jurisdiction—Persons not residing within jurisdiction—Injunction.

The High Court has power only to restrain a person who happens to be within its jurisdiction from prosecuting a suit without its jurisdiction. On the principle of "equity acting in personam" the mere fact that he possesses property, moveable or immoveable, within the jurisdiction but does not reside within it, does not give the High Court jurisdiction over him, since in the event of an injunction being granted against him and that being disobeyed he could not be subjected to the process of contempt.

VULCAN IRON WORKS v. BISSHUMBER PERSAD (1) followed.

THE CARRON IRON CO. v. MACLAREN (2), MAUGLE CHAND v. GOPAL RAM (3) relied on.

This was a Rule obtained by the Plaintiff calling on the Defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from proceeding with his suit against the Plaintiff in Ludhiana in the Punjab pending the hearing of this suit, both suits being so nearly connected with the same subject-matter, that were the Ludhiana suit brought in a Court subordinate to this Court, it would be stayed.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with him Mr. N. Sircar) in support of the Rule contended that the two suits are so nearly connected with each other as to be upon the same subject-matter and that if the Ludhiana suit were brought in any Court subordinate to this Court it would no doubt be stayed and that the fact that the Defendant has property within the jurisdiction of this Court, namely, a deposit of Rs. 600 gives this Court jurisdiction over him so as to be restrained from proceeding with the suit in Ludhiana.

Mr. B. C. Mitter for the Defendant showed cause.—That this Court has no jurisdiction to issue injunction on the Defendant as he is not a resident within it on the principle that a Court of Equity can only restrain a person from proceeding with a suit in a foreign Court if he is a resident within the jurisdiction of the Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

STEPHEN, J.—The Petitioner in this matter is a commission agent who brought certain goods on behalf of the Defendant. His case is that the Defendant refused to reimburse him for the expenses he had incurred, and that events occurred which justified him in re-selling the goods on behalf of the Defendant at a less price than he had paid for them. Before the re-sale the Defendant paid him Rs. 600 as a deposit in respect of the expenses he had incurred on behalf of the Defendant. He now sues the Defendant for the loss incurred on the re-sale of the goods allowing for the Rs. 600 he has received. The Defendant brought a suit at Ludhiana for the return of Rs. 600 before the institution of the present suit. The Plaintiff has obtained a Rule on the Defendant calling on him to show cause why he should not be restrained from proceeding with his suit in Ludhiana, and the two suits are so far concerned with the same subject-matter, that were the Ludhiana suit brought in a Court subordinate to this Court, it would certainly be stayed. The Defendant, however, shows cause by contending that this Court has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction on him, as he is not resident in Bengal. To this the Plaintiff replies that the Defendant has property within the jurisdiction, namely, the Rs. 600 deposit, and that this gives this Court jurisdiction, over him. I can not, however, consider that this argument is well-founded in point of law. In Vulcan Iron Works v. Bisshumbher Persad (1), Fletcher, J., after referring to The Carron Iron Co. v. Maclaren (2), comes to the conclusion that a Court of Equity can only restrain a person from proceeding with a suit in a foreign Court, if he is within the jurisdiction of the Court. It has been sought to show that this conclusion was not properly deduced from the authority referred to on the ground that that case was decided on the merits of the case, and that if the Court that is asked to issue an injunction can make any order that would affect the person whom it is sought to enjoin, if, as is said, the Court can reach him by attaching or sequestering his property, it has jurisdiction to issue an injunction. I do not consider that this is so. The Court in the case of The Carron Iron Co. v. Maclaren (2) proceeded not on the particular merits of the case but on the general rule that a person living entirely under a foreign jurisdiction must be left to obtain such relief as his own Courts may afford, and that being so, the case is an authority for the proposition put forward by Fletcher, J. Lord Brougham's judgment seems to be quite inconsistent with any other view. I agree with Fletcher, J., in the view he takes of the decision of this Court in Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (3).

The petition, therefore, fails on a point of law and I need not determine the question whether the Defendant has any property within the jurisdiction, as the question does not arise. But I may say that the term property would have to be extended to very wide limits to embrace the Rs. 600 that the Plaintiff has received and has applied to his own purposes.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs.

(3) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 101 (1906).

—Under-raiyati lease—Lease for indefinite term—Lease "from generation to generation"—Ejectment—Notice—"Written lease," meaning of.

The words "written lease" in cl. (b) of sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, mean a written lease of the same kind as that mentioned in cl. (a), i.e., a written lease for a term.

The case of an under-raiyat holding under a pottah executed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and not expressly providing for the period of its duration, comes within cl. (b) of sec. 49 and such under-raiyat may be ejected upon notice to quit as provided thereunder.

When an under-raiyati lease provides that the under-raiyat is to hold from generation to generation, the period of duration is provided for by the contract, within the meaning of cl. (a) of sec. 49.

This was an appeal preferred on the 23rd of July 1909, against a decree of S. N. Huda, Esq., District Judge of Pabna and Bogra, dated the 16th of April 1909, affirming that of Babu Sasi Kumar Ghosh, Munsif at Bogra, dated the 30th of November 1908.

The case came up for hearing on the 21st of June 1911, before a Division Bench (Chitty and N. Chatterjea, JJ.), which referred the same to the Full Bench on 29th of June 1911.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the order of reference.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows:—

CHITTY, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs to eject the Defendants from certain land. The facts are that the Plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat of the said land. On 18th Sraban 1288, (1st August 1881), the predecessor of the Defendants executed in favour of the Plaintiff a kabuliyat as korfa or under-raiyat. The kabuliyat was for no fixed period or term. The Defendants were holding the land under that kabuliyat and were served by the Plaintiff with a notice to quit, in accordance with the terms of sec. 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Courts below following the case of Madan Chandra Kapali v. Jaki Karikar (1) have dismissed the Plaintiff's suit. The Plaintiffs have appealed.

The Courts below have referred to the cases of Komaruddi v. Sreenath Chowdhury (2), Mohendra Nath Sepai v. Parbutty Charan Dass (3) and Idugazi Doctor v. Chandra Kali Sundrani (4). They distinguish them by saying that in those cases the kabuliyats were after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As a matter of fact in the first of the three cases, the date of the kabuliyat or pottah does not appear. In the second, the kabuliyat was no doubt after the passing of the Act, i.e., in 1893. But in the third, the pottah was dated 13th Baisak 1290, (26th April 1883). The actual date of the lease does not, in my opinion, make much difference. The question turns upon the construction to be put upon sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If the words "written lease" are to be given their ordinary meaning then it is clear that in enacting sec. 49 the Legislature omitted to provide for a case where an under-raiyat holds under a written lease for an indefinite period. This was the view taken in the case of Madan Chandra Kapali v. Jaki Karikar (1), where the learned Judges said—"But if he holds under a written lease for an indefinite time, his raiyat lessor cannot eject him arbitrarily. He can only do so for non-payment of the rent." In the case of Komaruddi v. Sreenath Chowdhury (2), decided by the late C. J., and Mitra, J., it was held that "written lease in sub-sec. (b), means such a written lease as is mentioned in sub-sec. (a), that is, a written lease defining the term of the tenancy." The case of Madan Chandra Kapali v. Jaki Karikar (1) was not referred to on that occasion. In the other two cases, in Mohendra Nath Sepai v. Parbutty Charan Dass (3) and Idugazi Doctor v. Chandra Kali Sundrani (4), decided by Mitra, J., very shortly after the first, that case was referred to but the learned Judge adhered to the view which was taken by the late C. J., and himself. With all respect to those learned Judges, I would point out that it is only by implication from the preceding words that the words "written lease" in sub-sec. (a) can be taken to denote only a written lease for a definite term. To fix them with that meaning some other words must be read into the section whether in sub-sec. (a) or (b). However as the cases in 6 and 8 Calcutta Weekly Notes stand, that in the former volume is in direct conflict with those in the later volume. The question is one of considerable importance to *raiya*ts and *under-raiya*ts, and I would, therefore, refer it to the Full Bench. The question will be:—Whether in the case of an under-raiyat holding land from a raiyat under a written lease executed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the lease not being expressed to be for any definite term, the under-raiyat is liable to ejectment and, if so, after what notice. Certain other cases were cited which turn on the construction to be put upon sec. 85 of the Act. These have, in my opinion, no direct bearing upon the present question.

The facts in second appeal No. 329 of 1909 are in all respects similar to those above stated. That appeal is accordingly also included in this reference.

CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree in making this reference to the Full Bench.

In S. A. No. 1499 of 1909.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with Babu Rishendra Nath Sircar) for the Appellant.

In this case the Defendant is the son of the original under-raiyat. Under-raiyat tenure not being heritable he is merely a tenant on sufferance and the notice he has got is undoubtedly "reasonable notice." The notice moreover was good notice within sec. 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The notices were served on the 24th Chaitra 1311, B. S., and the suit was instituted on 10th Magh 1313, B. S. The only question is whether the lease which is a written lease but does not fix a term comes within cl. (b) of sec. 49.

[CHIEF JUSTICE.—Can there be a lease for an uncertain term at all?]

Submitted it was very doubtful.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—There are in the document the words সন সন বাজান দিবে (will pay rent every year).]

Which means "for so long as he holds," and that would perhaps bring it within the definition of "lease" in the Transfer of Property Act.

Assuming it to be a "lease" he submitted that by the operation of sec. 85 (3), the term of the tenancy became fixed by operation of law so that sec. 49 (a) would apply. But in any case it would come under cl. (b).

Secs. 10, 18, 25, 44 and 49 all show that the modes provided in the Act for ejectment of tenants are exhaustive and by sec. 178 (1), cl. (c), the parties cannot provide for themselves a different mode. It is hardly likely that the Legislature should have left out any description of under-raiyati leases unprovided for, nor that it should have intended to confer higher rights on tenants holding under indefinite terms. Mohendra Nath Sepai v. Purbutty Charan Dass (3) is in my favour, as also Idugazi Doctor v. Chandra Kali Sundrani (4).

Babu Hari Charan Ganguli for the Respondent.

It was never questioned in the lower Courts that I was not a tenant or that I did not hold under a lease.

Leases in the form of the present lease are very common.

"Lease" as defined in the old Rent Act would cover a mere undertaking to cultivate and though that term is not defined in the present Act that is probably due to the fact that the word had acquired a definite meaning and did not require definition.

See also sec. 3, Registration Act III of 1877.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Why should the Legislature be supposed to have left leases which according to you are very common unprovided for in sec. 49?]

The Legislature as sec. 85 shows did not intend to interfere with the contractual rights and obligations of the raiyat and under-raiyat as between themselves. It sought to protect the rights of the superior landlord only.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Do you suggest that such a lease would operate as a permanent lease?]

As against the raiyyat only—not against the whole world.

To bring the present lease within sec. 49 (b) it will be necessary to read into the section the words "for a term" after the words "written lease."

Babu Kumar Sankar Roy for the Respondent referred to sec. 66, Bengal Tenancy Act.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

No. 1499.

The decision of the question referred in this case depends upon the proper construction of sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Chap. VII of the Act which deals with under-raiyyats consists of two sections. Sec. 48 speaking of the limit of rent recoverable from under-raiyyats divides rent into two classes, rent payable under a registered lease or agreement and rent payable in any other case, thus comprising all classes of under-raiyyats. Sec. 49 dealing with the ejectment of under-raiyyats divides them into two classes: cl. (a) speaks of those who hold under a written lease and cl. (b) speaks of those who hold otherwise than under a written lease. The term "written lease" in cl. (a) is necessarily restricted, by the word "term" used before, to written leases which are for a term or period of duration mentioned in the lease. The word "term" is not repeated in cl. (b), and it is therefore contended on the authority of the case of Madan Chandra Kapali v. Jaki Karikar (1), that the case of an under-raiyyat who holds under a pottah which does not provide for any period of duration is omitted from the purview of the section and that he cannot therefore, be ejected except under sec. 66 for non-payment of rent. The Court is of opinion that there is no sufficient reason for holding that the Legislature made any such omission either by intention or by mistake. As regards intention there is no reason why a tenant of this class should attract any particular favour from the Legislature. As regards mistake it must be remembered that this class of pottahs called mela pottahs or be-miadi pottahs are very common in Bengal and could not have escaped notice. Looking at the whole scheme of the Act and the manner in which the different classes of tenants are dealt with in its different provisions the Court holds that the proper construction to be placed on the word "written lease" in cl. (b) is to read them as indicating a written lease of the same kind as that mentioned in cl. (a).

The answer to the reference therefore is that the case of an under-raiyyat holding under a pottah executed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and not expressly providing for the period of its duration, comes within cl. (b) of sec. 49 and the notice must be as provided thereunder.

In this view of the case the appeal must be decreed with costs.

No. 329.

The pottah in this case was one from generation to generation: its period of duration therefore is provided for by the contract and the question referred does not arise. The case must go back to the Division Bench for disposal in due course.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 250, 423 (d)—“Consequential or incidental order”—Order to pay compensation on reversal of conviction—Power of Appellate Court.

Held, by the majority of the Full Bench—That an Appellate Court in setting aside an order convicting an accused person cannot make an order directing the complainant to pay compensation to the accused under sec. 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Sec. 423 of the Code in authorising the Appellate Court to “make any amendment or any other consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper” does not extend to it the special power given by sec. 250 to an original magisterial Court alone. The clause does not amplify the powers of the Appellate Court: but what it does is to modify the exhaustive character which without it sec. 423 (1) would apparently have.

This was a Rule against an order of the Appellate Court (S. W. Goode, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Beguserai) passed under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., on the 5th of October 1909, (while setting aside the conviction of the accused) directing the Petitioner, complainant, to pay a compensation of Rs. 25 to each of the accused. The original Court (Mr. O. G. Robinson, Magistrate, 2nd class, of Beguserai) had convicted the accused under secs. 379 and $\frac{17\frac{1}{2}}{11\frac{1}{4}}$ of the Penal Code and sentenced each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 6 weeks.

The material facts are set out in the ORDER OF REFERENCE which was as follows:—

STEPHEN and CARNDUFF, JJ.—The Petitioner before us lodged a complaint under secs. 379 and $\frac{17\frac{1}{2}}{11\frac{1}{4}}$ of the Indian Penal Code against three persons, who were convicted before a Deputy Magistrate. On appeal to a Joint-Magistrate the convictions were set aside, and the Appellate Court found the case entirely false and called on the Petitioner to show cause why he should not pay Rs. 25 compensation to each of the Appellants under sec. 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code. No cause being shown, the order to pay compensation was made absolute. A motion to set aside this order was rejected by the District Magistrate. We have issued a rule to show cause why the order for compensation should not be set aside on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order on appeal granting compensation.

The question we wish to refer is, has an Appellate Court power to order compensation under sec. 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code?

The question turns on the construction of secs. 250 and 423 of the Code. The former, as far as it is relevant, runs as follows:—“If in any case instituted by complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits the accused and is satisfied that the accusation against him was frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may in his discretion direct the complainant to pay compensation to the accused.” But, before making such direction, "the Magistrate is to (a) record and consider any objection which the complainant may urge;" (b) and if he directs compensation "state in writing, in his order of discharge or acquittal, his reasons for awarding compensation;" and by sub-sec. (3) a complainant who has been ordered by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation, may appeal from that order as if he had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate. On the terms of this section there can be no doubt that the only person who has power to award compensation under it is the Magistrate by whom the case is heard. But it is contended that this power is conferred on the Appellate Court by sec. 423 (1) (a) of the Code. This section enables an Appellate Court to take certain steps in cases of (a) acquittals, (b) convictions, and (c) other orders, and (d) to "make any amendment or any other consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper." The question is whether the order of the Appellate Court in this case is "consequential" as it is not suggested that it is "incidental," a term which seems to exclude any final order. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it is not consequential, see Balli Pande v. Chittan (2); and by this Court in the recently reported case of Kari Singh v. Zafani Dhanuk (3), that it is. The difference of opinion depends largely on first impression, as the only authority referred to by either Court is a passage in Sir Henry Prinsep's edition of the Criminal Procedure Code in a note to sec. 250, at p. 250 of the 13th Edition, which seems to us, as we gather that it did to Stanley, C. J., to be carefully framed so as to raise the question but not to express any opinion as to its proper answer. Under these circumstances and looking at secs. 250 and 423 only, we agree rather with the Allahabad decision than with that of this Court. Primarily we should suppose a consequential order to be an order that is the necessary consequence of the Court's decision, as an order that an Appellant whose conviction is set aside should be discharged from his bail bond, or that any part of a fine imposed on him should be repaid: and we incline to suppose that an order which depends on the consideration of a question that has not been previously considered is not within the terms of sec. 423. We are the more inclined to take this view on consideration of sec. 106 (3), which is referred to by the Judges in this Court in the case above cited as an example of the policy of the present Code of enlarging the powers of the Appellate Court. That enactment expressly enables the Appellate Court to bind a person down under sec. 106. This seems to show that an order to this effect is not a consequential order under sec. 423; and a power to bind down seems to be very much on the same footing as a power to award compensation to an accused person.

It has been argued before us that if the Appellate Court has power to award compensation under sec. 250, the person against whom such order is made loses some of the safeguards provided by that section. In the first place, it is said that the provisions of sec. 250 (1) (a) would not apply to the Appellate Court, so that that Court could not be obliged to record or consider objections which the complainant might have been in a position to urge against the making of the order. In the second place, if payment of compensation is directed by a second or third-class Magistrate, the complainant cannot, if he cares to appeal, be made to pay compensation unless there are two decisions against him; whereas, if compensation is directed in the first instance by an Appellate Court, there is only one. Neither of these arguments seems to us to carry any weight. On the other hand, in the present case it is no doubt "inconvenient," to borrow a phrase from Stanley, C. J., that, where one tribunal has found a charge to be proved beyond all reasonable doubt, another should find it to be not only false, but frivolous and vexatious.

We regard the matter, however, as one of the first impression, subject to the views expressed in the two decisions we have mentioned, and the indication given in sec. 106 (3) of the meaning to be attached to the word "consequential" in sec. 423.

We, therefore, refer the above-mentioned question to a Full Bench of this Court. If the answer is Yes, the rule in this case will be discharged. If it is No, the rule will be made absolute, the order set aside, and any money paid under the order and in the hands of lower Court must be refunded.

Babu Karunamoy Bose for the Petitioner.—Reads secs. 250, 423.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—On general principles, has not the Court of appeal all the powers of the first Court?]

In view of the specific provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, the powers of the Appellate Court are not co-extensive with that of the original Court.

An order under sec. 250 is not a "consequential or incidental order" as the making of it would involve a fresh judicial proceeding and a fresh exercise of judicial mind and the consideration of fresh evidence given.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—Besides in an appeal from a conviction the complainant is no party and a fresh proceeding upon notice to the complainant would be necessary.]

The power under sec. 250 is specifically given to the trying Magistrate. If the Criminal Court of appeal had all the powers of the original Court where was the necessity for the elaborate provisions of sec. 423 defining its powers?

The Appellate Court's powers are to remedy or rectify errors. On appeal from a conviction, it is concerned with the question whether the accused is guilty or not and not whether the complaint is in addition frivolous and vexatious. Compare sec. 106 (3). An order under this section would be consequential on the main order and yet the Legislature which enacted this provision at the same time as sec. 423 (d) was careful to specifically give the power to make an order under sec. 106 to the Appellate Court. Sec. 522 also seems to contemplate an order which would be consequential on the main order in the case. Moreover that section gives powers to the "Court" a term comprehensive enough to include an appeal Court. See also secs. 545, 562, 553.

Decisions passed anterior to the enactment of sec. 423, cl. (d), are all in my favour and I submit sec. 423 (d) has not amplified the powers of the Appellate Court in this respect. The difficulty was created by a note in Sir H. Prinsep's Commentary, 12th Edition, omitted in the present edition.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Suppose an order of acquittal is set aside on appeal and the accused convicted, will not the Appellate Court have power to set aside the order under sec. 250?]

Yes; because the order in that case would be incidental to the order of conviction.

The powers of the Appellate Court under the Code are not so wide as that conferred by 57 and 58 Vict., Ch. 16, sec. 2 (2).

Besides, where a conviction has been had in the original Court, the case for an order under sec. 250 is so obviously weakened that the Legislature might very well have considered it inexpedient to give the Appellate Court power to make an order under sec. 250 when setting aside the order of conviction.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question referred to the Full Bench is whether an Appellate Court can order compensation such as is contemplated by sec. 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

Sec. 250, being confined by its terms to the Courts of Magistrates trying cases in the first instance, does not confer the requisite power. But it is suggested that cl. (d) of sec. 423 (1) does.

Sec. 423 (1), which defines the powers of an Appellate Court in disposing of an appeal, begins by setting forth those powers in precise terms, and concludes with cl. (d), which enables it to "make any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper."

Now, in a Criminal Court, this phrase cannot be construed so liberally as to embrace any and every ancillary order which is capable of being described as "consequential or incidental." Otherwise an Appellate Court affirming, for instance, a conviction of kidnapping a woman, might add, and enforce, a direction that the offender should pay her, by way of maintenance, a monthly allowance. This can hardly be.

It would seem, therefore, that "consequential or incidental" orders, within the purview of the provision, must fall under one or other of two heads.

First, there are orders which follow as a matter of course, being the necessary complements to the main orders passed without which the latter would be incomplete or ineffective. Such are directions as to the refund of fines realised from acquitted Appellants, or, on the reversal of acquittals, as to the restoration of compensation paid under sec. 250; and for these no separate authority is needed.

Secondly, there are orders which, though ancillary in character, require more than the support of a Criminal Court's inherent jurisdiction, and could not be passed without express authority.

An order mulcting a complainant to compensate an accused for having been frivolously or vexatiously charged seems to fall under the second head. It does not necessarily follow or arise out of an order of discharge or acquittal, and it is not, per se, an order "consequential or incidental" thereto. For the issue primarily before the Court is whether the accused has been proved to be guilty or not, and the question whether the complaint against him was merely frivolous or vexatious, is another matter importing fresh considerations. The making of an award for compensation would, consequently, seem to need express authority, and an order therefor is not "consequential or incidental" to an order of discharge or acquittal, unless the discharging or acquitting Court has, aliunde, power to make it. In an original Court it is, by virtue of sec. 250, "consequential or incidental" to an order of discharge or acquittal made there; but it is not quoad a like order passed on appeal.

MEHI SINGH v. MANGAL KHANDU.

If this be so, then the clause can be relied upon only if it be sufficient to extend to an Appellate Court, to be exercised by it, mutatis mutandis, the special power given to an original magisterial Court alone by sec. 250. But it falls short of this, and, so far as appears, it never occurred to the learned Judges who decided Hari Chand v. Fakir Sadrudin (1) that it could be appealed to in this connection. It does not, like sec. 2 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Jurisdiction) Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict., c. 16) or Or. XLI, r. 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, invest an Appellate Court with authority to "make any order which ought to have been given or made" by the Court below; nor does it, like sec. 107 of the latter, confer upon Appellate Courts "the same powers" as Courts of Original Jurisdiction. It does not amplify the powers of Appellate Courts: but what it does is to modify the exhaustive character, which without it, sec. 423 (1) would apparently have, and so to prevent any conflict between its special provisions and the general provisions of, e.g., sec. 517 or sec. 522.

And, as the exercise of the power in questions by an Appellate Court would involve such an extreme measure of contempt for the judgment of the inferior Court concerned that it could but seldom be used with propriety, it can readily be understood why the Legislature should not have thought it worth while—if, indeed, it did not think it actually inexpedient—to extend it to such a Court.

For these reasons the majority of the Full Bench are of opinion that the answers to the question referred should be in the negative.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 46 and 52—Annuity, instalments not accrued due if attachable—Right to annuity if may be attached—"Debt," meaning of.

A executed a conveyance of all his properties in favour of his son for the payment of his debts it being provided therein that the purchaser would pay the vendor a monthly sum of Rs. 4,000, the first payment to be made on the 1st October 1905 and the payment for every succeeding month on the first day of the month following between the hours of 1 A.M., and 6 A.M., the deed further providing that the vendor would not by mortgage or otherwise sell or charge or alienate the allowance payable to him and that on no account and in no circumstances was it to become payable to any person other than the vendor or his duly constituted attorney. The allowance was further declared to be a first charge upon a specified share of the estate so far as the subsisting mortgages executed by the vendor would allow:

Held—That the allowance payable as annuity could not be regarded as a debt or even as a portion of the consideration for the conveyance, payment of which was deferred, and no instalment of such allowance could be attached under r. 46 of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code until it should have actually fallen due.

A sum payable upon a contingency is not a debt and does not become one until the contingency has happened.

Whether a claim is a debt or not is in no respect determined by a reference to the time of payment.

Held, further—That the allowance could not also be attached under r. 52 of Or. 21 of the Code, as that rule does not allow of an anticipatory attachment of money expected to reach the hands of a public officer and is restricted only to money actually in his hands.

Quere—Whether notwithstanding the restrictions upon alienation embodied in the conveyance the right to receive the annuity is attachable in execution.

This was an appeal against a decision of Babu Kishori Mohan Sikdar, Subordinate Judge, Bhagulpur, dated the 5th of July 1910.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babus Bepin Behari Ghose and Debendra Nath Bagchi for the Appellant.

Babu Noresh Chandra Sinha for the Respondents.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal is directed against an order by which the Court below has overruled an objection of the judgment-debtor now Appellant before us to the attachment of a sum of Rs. 4,000 payable monthly as allowance to him by the representative in interest of his son. It appears that, on the 25th September 1905, the Appellant conveyed all his properties in favour of his son for the payment of his debts. The conveyance provided that the purchaser would pay the vendor a monthly sum of Rs. 4,000 the first payment to be made on the 1st October 1905 and the payment for every succeeding month, on the first day of the month following, between the hours of 1 A.M., and 6 A.M. The deed further provided that the vendor would not, by mortgage or otherwise, seek to charge or alienate the allowance payable to him and that, on no account and under no circumstances was the allowance to become payable to, or demandable by, any person other than the vendor or his duly constituted attorney. There was also a provision that so far as was consistent with the then subsisting mortgages executed by the vendor himself the allowance payable was to be a first charge upon a specified share of the estate. The purchaser died some time after this transaction whereupon the properties vested in his widow, Rani Sashirama Kumari, and are now under the management of the Court of Wards on her behalf. On the 4th April 1910, the Respondents before us, who held a decree for a large sum of money obtained against the Appellant, Raja Padmananda Singh, on the 13th November 1903, applied for execution thereof. They prayed for recovery of the judgment-debt by attachment of the allowance of Rs. 4,000 from April 1910 up to the date of realisation, and also for rateable distribution of a sum of money, which had been already deposited in Court and apparently represented a portion of the allowance due to the Appellant from November 1909 to January 1910. They further asked that the allowance for the months of February and March 1910, which had already accrued due and was still in the hands of the Manager under the Court of Wards, might be attached and made available for the satisfaction of their dues. Notice was in due course issued upon the judgment-debtor who objected that the allowance could not be attached before it became due; that it was not attachable at all because it was in the nature of a maintenance grant; and finally, that in no case could the entire amount of the maintenance be treated as attachable. The Subordinate Judge has overruled these objections and has issued a prohibitory order upon the Manager under the Court of Wards, by which the latter is directed to withhold payment of the monthly allowance to the judgment-debtor from the month of April 1910 till the whole of the amount claimed by the decree-holders is satisfied. The judgment-debtor has now appealed to this Court, and, on his behalf, it has been argued that no attachment could be effected of the allowance before it had accrued due: in other words, that an annuity, not yet due is not garnishable under the provisions of the law. In our opinion, this contention is clearly well-founded and must prevail.

The applications of the decree-holder fails, it is stated on their behalf, within the scope of rr. 46 and 52 of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. R. 46 in so far as it may be supposed to be applicable to the circumstances of the present case, provides that, in the case of a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument, the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting the creditor from recovering the debt, and the debtor from making payment thereof until the further order of the Court. A copy of the order is required to be affixed on some conspicuous part of the Court house and another copy sent to the debtor. Sub-r. (3) of r. 46 provides that a debtor thus prohibited may pay the amount of his debt into Court, and such payment discharges him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the sum. R. 52 provides for the attachment of property in the custody of a public officer. In a case of this description, the attachment is made by a notice to the officer requesting that the property sought to be attached and any interest or dividend becoming payable thereon may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued. It will be observed that the expression "debt" is not defined in r. 46, and that although in r. 52 the term used namely, "property," is wider in scope, an attachment can be affected only of property in the custody of a public officer.

In so far as r. 46 is concerned there is no room for controversy that the term "debt" is intended to be used in its legal sense of a debt either due or accruing due. As was explained by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Banchharam Majumder v. Adyanath Bhattacharji (1), a debt is a sum of money which is now payable or will become payable in future by reason of a present obligation. That is the definition given by Lindley, L. J., in Webb v. Stenton (2). It was further pointed out in the case mentioned that the principle applicable to cases of this description may be concisely stated in the words of the learned Judges who decided the case of People v. Arguello (3):—"Standing alone the word debt is as applicable to a sum of money which has been promised at a future date as to a sum now due and payable. If we wish to distinguish between the two we say of the former that it is a debt owing and of the latter that it is a debt due. In other words debts are of two kinds solvendum in presenti and solvendum in futuro. Whether a claim or demand is a debt or not is in no respect determined by a reference to the time of payment. A sum of money which is certainly and in all events payable is a debt without regards to the fact whether it is payable now or at a future time. A sum payable upon a contingency however is not a debt and does not become a debt until the contingency has happened." On this principle it was ruled by this Court in the case of Haridas Acharjya v. Bnoda Kishore Acharjya (4) that when A is bound under deed to pay to B a monthly allowance during the lifetime of the latter, there cannot be a valid attachment of any portion of the allowance by a prohibitory order issued to A of a date anterior to the time when the same falls due to B. The learned Judges relied upon the observation of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Tufuzool Hossain v. Raghoonath Pershad (5) and it may be observed that the same view had been indicated many years earlier by Mr. Justice Colville in Baistub Churn Bysack v. Battye (6). The same principle has been adopted by the Allahabad High Court in Sher Singh v. Sri Ram (7) and Devi Prasad v. Lewis (8) and also by Madras High Court in Ayyavayyar v. Virasami (9). It has been ingeniously argued however by the learned Vakil for the Respondents decree-holders on the authority of the decision in Harshankar Prosad v. Baijnath Das (10) that the sum payable as annuity was in substance a portion of the consideration for the conveyance paid to the vendor in successive instalments, and consequently constituted a debt the payment whereof was deferred. But there is clearly no foundation for this contention. The aggregate amount of the consideration of which part was immediately payable and the balance payable in instalments was never fixed by agreement of parties. The annuity, it cannot be contested, would terminate immediately upon the death of the grantee and cannot be treated as a debt the payment whereof was deferred. The case of Dumbar Kocri v. Sham Kissen (11) is distinguishable, because there the annuity apparently accrued due from day to day, and consequently on the date the prohibitory order was issued, there was an actually existing debt though the sum was payable at a future date. The cases of Sree Nath Roy v. Brojendra Bhusan (12) and Gopal Lal Seal v. Mursden (13) cannot be treated as binding authorities upon this matter, because those decisions were based on the distinction between an annuity given by a Will and right to future maintenance, and the question was not decided whether a contingent right could be made the subject of a prohibitory order. In view of the principles already explained, the position cannot thus be seriously maintained that a prohibitory order may be validly issued in respect of sums which may never fall due and become payable to the judgment-debtor.

It is worthy of note that the view just indicated has been adopted as well-founded on principle both in the English and the American Courts. It is settled law in England that, to make a debt attachable it is essential that the relation of creditor and debtor should exist between the judgment-debtor and the garnishee. Two practical tests have been applied in relation to this matter, namely, first, could the judgment debtor sue the garnishee for the amount and recover it? Secondly, would the debt vest in the judgment-debtor's trustee in the case of bankruptcy? Hence a garnishee order can be made where the debt is payable by instalments, for payment of the accruing instalments as they become payable from time to time, Tapp v. Jones (14). Consequently though annuities payable by trustees are attachable, Nash v. Pease (15), the money must have reached their hands and be also payable, Webb v. Stenton (2). These decisions recognise the distinction between a case where there is an existing debt payment whereof is deferred and a case where both the debt and its payment rest in the future: in the former case, there is an attachable debt, in the latter case there is not. See also Hall v. Pritchett (16), Both v. Trail (17) and Fellows v. Thornton (18). The distinction mentioned has also been recognised in the Irish Courts, Sparks v. Younge (19) and Payne v. French (20). It has similarly been ruled that an annuity payable under a trust-deed is attachable only in respect of sums that have accrued due, Nokes v. Menders (21) and Bascombe v. Onge (22). In America the principle is recognised as firmly settled that in case of annuities payable on fixed dates during the life of the annuitant without provision for an apportionment, as the claim of the annuitant is liable to be defeated on his death before the time of payment arrives, the claim is before such time contingent and not the subject of garnishment. It is hence stated in Rood on Garnishment, sec. 120, that on a promise to pay a certain sum on a certain date in each year as long as the annuitant shall live and at the same rate for any part of the year, the promisor can be charged as garnishee of the annuitant only for the amount which had accrued before the garnishment was served, for it is uncertain that she will live longer, Salim v. Cooper (23), Easterly v. Keny (24), Sayward v. Drew (25), Dickinson v. Dickinson (26), Cony v. Day (27), and Briggs v. Beach (28); compare Damber Koeri v. Sham Kissen (11). A similar exposition is given by Chief Justice Drake in his classical Treatise on Attachments, 7 Ed, sec. 555. The only solitary cases in which the contrary view has been maintained are those of Red v. Power (29) and Kaiser v. Shaw (30). In these two decisions, however, no explanation is suggested upon which it may be held that a debt though it is uncertain and contingent and may never become due and payable, may yet be subject to garnishment. The preponderance of authority is undoubtedly in favour of the view that it is only indebtedness which is in its nature absolute and payable at some time without contingency, that can be reached by garnishment process, Smith v. Gilberts (31). We are unable therefore to accept the contention of the Respondents that a fixed sum payable to the debtor monthly or only for life is subject to garnishment, although the aggregate amount which will be payable is uncertain and contingent. It is thus incontestable that the Respondents decree-holders were not entitled to the issue of a prohibitory order in respect of sums which had not accrued due, on the basis of their application: and that r. 46 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908 is of no assistance to them.

In so far as r. 52 of Or. 21 is concerned, the case is equally clear. As already stated, that rule applies only where the property to be attached is in the custody of a public officer. It does not allow of an anticipatory attachment of money expected to reach the hands of a public officer, and is restricted only to money actually in his hands [Tulaji v. Balabhai (32)]. The prohibitory order issued by the Court upon the application of the decree-holders cannot consequently be sustained.

It has finally been argued by the learned Vakil for the decree-holders that it is open to them to apply for attachment and sale of the right of the judgment-debtor to receive the allowance from the representatives of the purchaser. It has in substance been contended that, notwithstanding the restrictions upon alienation formulated in the conveyance, the right may be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the vendor. The question sought to be raised is by no means free from difficulty, and it is sufficient to state that when it arises, it must be answered in the light of the principles explained in the cases of Asadali Molla v. Hyder Ali (33), Annapurni v. Swaminatha (34) and Tarasundari Debi v. Saroda Charan Banerji (35), where the earlier authorities on the question of the assignability of a right to receive maintenance or allowance will be found reviewed. It has also been suggested by the learned Vakil for the Respondents that the restraint upon alienation of this right was invalid, and that in fact the entire settlement was fraudulent and inoperative in law. This also is a question of considerable nicety, and, if we treat it as one of first principles untrammelled by precedents, it does not follow by any means that the answer must necessarily be against the judgment-debtor [see also Erskine, Principles of the Law of Scotland, Book III, Sch. tion of the decree-holders by which the proceedings now before us were initiated, did not invite the Court to attach and sell the right of the judgment-debtor to receive the allowance. The interesting question suggested therefore cannot be discussed in this appeal.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge reversed, and the application for execution in so far as it seeks relief in respect of allowance from April 1910 onwards, dismissed with costs in all the Courts. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 77—Suit for order directing registration of document—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), secs. 5, 6—30 days expiring during a Court holiday—Suit instituted on re-opening day if barred.

The provisions of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act apply to suits under sec. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877).

When therefore the period of limitation provided in that section for a suit for an order directing the registration of a document expired during the X'mas holidays :

NIJABUTOQLLA v. WAZIR ALI (2) followed.

(2) I. L. R. 8 Cal. 910 (1882).

This was an appeal preferred on the 9th of December 1908, against the decree of Babu Atul Chandra Batabyal, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 5th of September 1908, confirming that of Babu Ambika Charan Majumdar, Munsif of Burdwan, dated the 12th of June 1907.

The appeal arose out a suit for directing the registration of a document alleged to have been executed in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant by the Defendant-Respondent.

The Defendant after presentation of the document for registration denied execution before the Sub-Registrar. The Plaintiff got an order from the District Registrar directing the registration of the document, but the Sub-Registrar refused to register the document on the ground that the document was presented before him more than 30 days after the order of the Registrar. This decision of the Sub-Registrar having been upheld on appeal by the Registrar, the Plaintiff instituted the present suit under sec. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). The plaint was however not presented within 30 days of the last order of the Registrar as the 30th day fell within the X'mas vacation but it was presented on the day the Courts re-opened.

The Munsif held that the suit was not maintainable in that the document had not been presented before the Sub-Registrar within 30 days of the order of the Registrar directing the Sub-Registrar to register it. He further held that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the suit was maintainable, but that it was barred by limitation, relying on Appa Rau v. Krishna Murthi (5).

(5) I. L. R. 20 Mad. 249 (1896).

MATABBAR MOLLAH v. SASI BHUSAN GHATAK.

The Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Babu Hemendra Nath Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghosh (Jr.) for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a suit for an order directing the registration of a document.

The Munsif held, for the reasons stated in his judgment, that the suit was not maintainable, and that, if it was maintainable, it was barred by limitation, in that the suit was not brought within 30 days from the date of the dismissal of the Plaintiff's appeal by the Registrar.

The learned Subordinate Judge, on appeal, disagreed with the Munsif, in holding that the suit was maintainable, but held that the suit was barred, in that sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, which contains a proviso in the case where the Court is closed when (as here) the period of limitation expires, had no application to suits under the Registration Act. It is, no doubt, the general rule that a general enactment is not ordinarily presumed to be intended to interfere with a special Act; and sec. 6 of the Limitation Act provides that "when, by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India, a period of limitation is specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed." We are not here concerned with the wider question, whether sec. 6 is limited in its operation only to prevent the time within which a suit should be brought from being affected and whether it excludes the application of other provisions of the Limitation Act, such as those relating to the computation of the period of limitation. Nor are we concerned with other Acts of the Legislature, nor with other sections of the Limitation Act. The actual question before us (which is the only one which calls for decision) is whether sec. 6 of the Limitation Act excludes the application of sec. 5 of the same Act to suits brought under sec. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It has been held to be the general rule that where the parties are prevented from doing a thing in Court on a particular day, not by any act of their own, but by the act of the Court itself, they are entitled to do it at the first subsequent opportunity. See Peary Mohun v. Anunda Churn (1). And parties will not be called upon to do that which is impossible. The Legislature under the Registration Act has given a period of 30 days in which to bring a suit; and it is not reasonable to suppose that that period is to be cut down to 29 days. There is, moreover, direct authority of this Court in favour of the Appellant's contention, to be found in the case of Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (2), where it was held that the provisions of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act apply to suits under sec. 77 of the Registration Act. It was there held that sec. 5 had a general application to all suits, notwithstanding anything contained in sec. 6. This decision is not affected by the other decisions to which we have been referred relating to other Acts or other sections of the Limitation Act: for as pointed out in the case of Girija Nath v. Patani Bibee (3), sec. 6 is not in conflict with sec. 5. There the High Court pointed out that so far as sec. 5 is concerned, the decisions then cited before it did not conflict with sec. 6, because those decisions did not extend the period of limitation. All that they did was to prevent the period of limitation from being curtailed by the closing of the Court; and the days on which the Court was closed must be considered as non-existent (dies non) and therefore they are not counted when the dies non happen to be days on which the period of limitation expires. There is no decision in this Court which holds that sec. 5 is not applicable to suits under the Registration Act; and we must therefore hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

It was then argued that, even if that were so, the question is not to be regarded as one relating to a rule of limitation, but as one affecting the right itself, and that as the right to bring a suit is a statutory right, which depends on the terms of sec. 77 of the Registration Act, no right, in fact, accrues upon which a suit may be instituted, if in fact more than 30 days have expired, as stated in sec. 77. The first answer to this is, I think, the decision to which I have referred in Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (2), where the matter was dealt with as a question of limitation. But, apart from this, I think that on a consideration of sec. 77 itself such contention fails. The object of the Legislature was that a person should have 30 days. Thirty days were given him for the purpose of doing something; and that something was the institution of the suit. But the intention was that he should be in a position to institute the suit on any one of these 30 days, there being nothing to oblige him to bring the suit at any time before the actual expiration of the period of 30 days. The objection on this ground therefore fails.

An argument has then been addressed to us upon the question of the maintainability of the suit. The learned pleader on behalf of the Respondent has sought to support the judgment on the ground which has been decided against him in the lower Appellate Court. It is true that that Court has held that the suit was maintainable; but in holding this it appears to have proceeded on the ground that the 30 days after the making of the order are to be 30 days from the date of the communication of the order, and that therefore the Plaintiff had a right to sue under sec. 77 of the Registration Act. The authority relied upon is that in the case of Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan (4). It is not necessary to go into the question of law upon this point. But, assuming that the law is correctly stated in the judgment under appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge has assumed, without any evidence, that the suit was brought within 30 days of the communication of the order, and that the order was not known to the Plaintiff on the date upon which it was made. Now, there is no evidence at all upon this point, as no evidence was, having regard to the findings of the lower Court, taken at all. In fact, it has been urged by the Respondent, that that question was not one which properly arose in the suit, having regard to the pleadings: for, as the Munsif points out in his judgment, want of knowledge of the order of dismissal had not been pleaded, which alone, in his opinion, could save limitation on the authority of the ruling in Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan (4). Although the Appellant has relied on the statements made in para. 4 of the plaint, it is very doubtful whether such a contention can be taken to be implied or can be extracted from any statement therein appearing. The point, however, appears to have been taken before the Munsif, and it was one of the grounds of appeal to the Subordinate Judge. And, as the question is a technical one, and, at the most, the Plaintiff was one day out of time, I think that we should in this case give the Plaintiff the benefit of the doubt we have upon this matter, and enable him to give evidence upon this point, so that if he establishes it, the merits of the case may be enquired into.

There is one point which, in this connection, should be cleared up. In para. 4 of the plaint the Plaintiff says that he started for Katwa on the 15th, which was the last day of the period of limitation, but that when he reached the Sub Registrar's office at that place, he found that the Sub-Registrar had left his office after finishing the registration work of the day. He does not state (and he should state) at what hour he reached the Registry office. An enquiry must be made as to what the office hours of the Sub-Registrar are.

On these grounds I would set aside the decree under appeal and would remand the case to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question as to when the order of the Sub-Registrar was communicated to the Plaintiff may be determined, and when, therefore, the last day of the period of 30 days expired.

If it is found that the Plaintiff presented himself at the Registry office, or presented the document within the prescribed 30 days, having regard to the decision in Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan (4) and to the provisions of sec. 26 of the Registration Act, the Court will proceed to decide the suit on the merits. If the period of 30 days has been exceeded, then the suit is to be dismissed. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

REV. No. 797 OF 1911.

HOIMWOOD, J.	}	TRIPUNDESHUR
N. CHATTERJEA, J.		MITTER, Petitioner,
1911,		v.
3. August.		THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA, Opposite Party.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899, B. C.), secs. 3 (30) (a), 351 — "Re-erection," meaning of—Building line, infringement of—"Building," tin shed if.

The offence of infringing on a building line is the erection or re-erection of the wall of a building within that line. The re-placing of the roof on four posts already in existence does not constitute the offence.

The repairing or renewing of the roof of a shed consisting of four posts and a tin roof was not re-erection within the meaning of the Calcutta Municipal Act.

Quere—Whether such a shed is a "building."

This was a Rule granted on the 7th of July 1911, against an order of Mr. N. C. Ghuttak, Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta, passed on the 9th of June 1911, under sec. 449 (ii) of Act III (B. C.) 1899.

The Petitioner inter alia stated that he had got a timber yard at No. 61, Russa Road, North, in Bhowanipur, in the Suburb of Calcutta, and there had been in existence on that yard for over 10 years an ordinary shed used as a working place for carpenters. In January 1911, the Petitioner made certain necessary repairs of the thatches in the roof of the said shed without any change in the dimension or height or without any alteration in any other part of the same. The Petitioner subsequently came to learn that proceedings were going to be taken against him by the Corporation of Calcutta on account of the said repairs on the ground that the shed in question fell within the prescribed road line of Russa Road, North, in contravention of sec. 351 of Act III (B. C.) of 1899. The Petitioner thereupon having approached the Building Surveyor of District No. IV on the subject, the latter told the Petitioner that if he gave an undertaking to set back the shed when required at his own cost and without claiming any compensation therefor, no action would be taken against him for the repair done, and accordingly on the 13th of January 1911, the Petitioner gave a written undertaking to the effect as desired by the Building Surveyor.

Notwithstanding such undertaking given by the Petitioner, proceeding was subsequently taken against him before the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta on the charge that he had re-erected a tiled hut without sanction and that the hut fell on the prescribed road line of Russa Road, North, in contravention of sec. 351 of Act III (B. C.) of 1899.

The Magistrate convicted the Petitioner on the 9th June 1911 and directed, under sec 449 (ii) of the Act, that so much of the hut re-erected be demolished as would remove the hut from the prescribed road line and leave six feet open space from the masonry building on the north. Against this order the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Babus Provash Chandra Mitter and Susil Madhub Mullik for the Petitioner.

Babu Debendra Chandra Mullik for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This conviction is for re-erecting a building within the building line of a certain road. It appears that before the building line was laid down the shed consisting of four posts and a tin roof stood on identically the same spot as it does now. After the building line was laid down the owner had occasion to take the roof off and the Municipal authorities happened to see this place when there was no roof on the shed. Whether the owner repaired the same bits of tin or whether he put in new bits of tin or what he did in renewing or repairing his roof there is nothing to show. But he eventually put up a roof either made of new tin or repaired, it does not matter which, in identically the same place as the old roof.

Now this is certainly not a re-erection. It is admitted that sec. 3 (39) (a) is the only definition which can apply in this case, and this is reconstruction of the building if more than one half of the cubical contents has been taken down. Now the removal of this roof for the purpose of repairing did not alter the cubical contents of this shed in the least except a small area which the lean-to-roof may have contained. That certainly cannot have been anything like one-half or even a quarter of the whole cubical content. The expression re-erected does not apply.

Now comes the question whether sec. 351 has been infringed. No portion of any building or wall abutting on any street shall be constructed within the line. We cannot find any definition of the word building, and we are not at all clear that this roof with four posts is a building :

THE SIXTH CRIMINAL SESSION OF THE YEAR WILL commence its sittings from Wednesday the 29th instant, Mr. Justice Woodroffe presiding.

WE ARE GLAD TO OBSERVE THAT REFERENCES ON the Original Side are now heard right through from day to day during the ordinary Court hours. We are sure that the observance of a similar practice with regard to the examination of witnesses on commission would greatly expedite cases and afford great relief to suitors in respect of the expenses of litigation. Reforms in the machineries of the administration of justice along such lines will also be greatly appreciated by junior members of the Bar as their services are bound to be in larger requisition consequent on such changes. We would also draw the attention of the District and Presidency Small Cause Court Judges for the introduction of similar reforms in their Courts as well. The present practice of proceeding with the commissions after Court time proves very expensive to the parties. Judges may therefore well lay it down in their orders that the commissioners should proceed with their work during ordinary Court hours.

A QUESTION OF SOME NOVELTY RECENTLY CAME up for decision before a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Nour Mahomed Soleman reported in L. R. 35 Bom. 368. During the last Dewali festival, the accused who owned a toy shop abutting on a public road in the town of Bombay exhibited in the windows of the shop overlooking the road certain clockwork toys, with a view, no doubt, to attract purchasers. The toys, it is reported, consisted of effigies of a lion, a tiger and a cock, and there was, it is added, an electric bell which rang causing a spark of electricity. These, according to the findings of the Magistrate, proved irresistible to the simple folk of Shekh Menon Street, with the result that "thousands of people collected on the road, there were dangerous rushes, people were knocked down and great obstruction and danger was caused to those using the road." The Police, we are informed, called upon the accused to stop the exhibition but he refused and thereupon the accused and his servant were charged with committing an offence under secs. 283 and 114 of the Penal Code, and they were convicted and sentenced by the Magistrate to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each.

THE LEARNED JUDGES, CHANDAVARKAR AND Heaton, JJ., hold with perfect justice that there was on the findings a public nuisance and that the act of the accused was the "efficient cause" of it. But this being a criminal trial the question was whether the accused intended to cause the results which in fact followed. Their Lordships say "their object was to attract a crowd, and they knew that a crowd would be, and as a matter of fact was attracted by what they did and they must be regarded as having intended that consequence." The language here used by their Lordships if literally interpreted may, however, convey an erroneous idea as to the reasoning which really underlies their decision. Looking at the facts of the case it would, to our mind, be unreasonable to hold, and the Judges could hardly have intended to hold, that the accused actually anticipated all the mischief caused by the crowd or that they desired or even expected that such a crowd would collect before their shop. They no doubt wanted to attract a crowd but the result may be assumed to have exceeded their expectations. When, however, they did see the mischief caused by their act, innocent as it might have been in the beginning, they should, in the interest of the public, have stopped the show which was attracting a large number of idlers, and they were certainly unreasonable in not accepting the suggestions to that effect made by the Police. The user of their property by the accused, as held by the Judges, ceased to be reasonable the moment the crowd collected in sufficient numbers to cause obstruction and danger.

THE LIABILITY OF COMMON CARRIERS IN INDIA.

The Common Law liability of carriers was a remnant of the old Common Law rule relating to all bailees based, as Holmes points out, on the fact that while the bailee had an action against anybody who deprived him against his will of anything in his possession, the bailor had none. Thus all bailees in Common Law were absolutely liable for loss of bail simply upon proof of delivery. This Common Law doctrine continued to be held long after the reason for it had disappeared and it was laid down even so late as when the Southcote's case, 4 Co. 83 b (1601), was decided. Southcote's case continued as authority till it was ultimately displaced by the judgment of Holt, C. J., in Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym 909. So long as this absolute liability continued there was no occasion to distinguish between carriers and other bailees. But even before Southcote's case the absolute liability of bailees was breaking down and a distinction was made between carriers for hire and factors and servants, two years before Southcote's case, in Woodlife's case, Owen 57. That was probably the first case in the reports which recognised a special liability in carriers as distinguished from other bailees.

The decisive turn was given to the law of bailments by the supercession of detinue for bailments by an action on the case and the introduction of the theory of quid pro quo borrowed from the action of debt. Detinue afforded no relief for damage to the thing caused by the negligence of the bailee provided that there was no active wrong and the thing in suit was produced. This helped the supercession of detinue by an action on the case which furnished the further advantage that in it the Defendant could not wage his law as in detinue. But in the state of the law at that time a Defendant could not be held liable for a mere non-feasance; it was necessary to allege mal-feasance. It was thus that it became necessary to allege an undertaking by the Defendant to do the act upon which alone his negligence in doing it would amount to a mal-feasance. Hence the allegation of super se assumpsit in this form of the action on the case.

There was another branch of law which contributed to the development of the law of common carriers and that was the law relating to common carriers. The law required persons following a public occupation to ply their trade in the interest of the public, so that they would be liable not only for negligent performance of a duty undertaken by them as such common carriers but also for failure to do their work at the request of any member of the public.

By the fusion of these two different liabilities, of bailees by reason of their supposed or real undertaking to take care of the thing and of common carriers by reason of the public nature of their calling, the law of bailment, now that both the forms of action became fused in one, took a new course of development. Henceforth for an action for damage done to a bail and a fortiori for loss of bail, it was necessary either to allege an undertaking (super se assumpsit) in the bailee or his common calling which gradually came to be understood as implying an undertaking. The result of this process was that from being an action for a wrong as it originally was the action on a bailment now began to sound in contract.

In Bernard v. Coggs in which Holt, C. J., first gave a definite form to the English law of bailment, it was assumed to have been derived from the Roman law and Holt, C. J., proceeded to expound the liability of different kinds of bailees by reference to Roman law. It cannot be doubted that the subsequent history of bailment in English law has thus been largely moulded by ideas borrowed from Roman law through Bracton from whom Holt, C. J., drew his Roman learning. But in its origin it was English.

The development of a law of common carriers also was peculiarly English though it may have been moulded later on, on the model of the Roman law of quasi-contract based on the occupation of nautae while that of caupones and stabulari undoubtedly formed the basis of the Common law liability of inn-keepers. But so far as carriers were concerned, Roman law only attached the liability to ship-owners. The English law of common carriers however took its particular concrete shape by reference to the English law relating to common carriers.

When Lord Holt delivered his judgment in Coggs v. Bernard "common" carriers had not yet come to have the comprehensive significance that it now has for he speaks of common carriers along with common bargemen, lightermen, &c., as being under the same kind of liability. But the nature of their liability was finally settled by him as it now is except in so far as it is modified by statute. "The law," he says, "charges this person thus intrusted to carry goods against all events except acts of God and King's enemies."

"King's enemies" do not include robbers or rebels as was established in the Marshall's case, S. B. 33, Henry VI, 1 pl 3, where a prisoner was released from the debtor's prison of Marshalsea by rebels and the defence was that the debtor was released by the King's enemies. The result of that case would seem to be to confine this exception to a carrier's liability to the acts of alien enemies of the King.

"Act of God" was described by Lord Mansfield in Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27, as such act as could not happen by the intervention of man, like storms, lightening and tempest. In this view he held that where the loss was due to a fire in adjoining premises it was not an act of God, though of course it would undoubtedly be a casus fortuitus under the Civil law. The law on the subject was further specified by Cockburn, C. J., in the leading case of Nugent v. Smith, 1 C. P. D. 423. While acts originating in human agents were undoubtedly not acts of God, it was there pointed out that it was not every act done by elemental forces that would be a ground of exemption from liability. The carrier is liable though the loss was due to elemental forces if it was to any extent caused by his negligence, as for instance by negligent exposure to danger. The carrier, it was laid down, is bound to do his utmost to protect the goods. If he is wanting in this amount of care he is liable though the loss be caused by an "act of God." But at the same time the standard to be applied is that of a man of ordinary prudence unless, it would seem, he had some special knowledge or capacity. He is bound to do what a man of ordinary prudence would do, but it is not necessary that "the vis major should be such as no amount of human care or skill could have resisted or the injury such as no amount of human skill could have prevented." In this case the judges held that a carrier by sea was not liable for the death of a man by reason of the fright into which she got owing to the ship being tossed by a tempest where no negligence was found. In an old case it was also held that jettison was a good defence as it was due to an act of God.

Lord Mansfield gave expression to the true position of a common carrier when he said that they were in the nature of insurers against all risks but those due to an act of God or the King's enemies.

In India the Common law relating to carriers was long applied before the Carriers' Act of 1865 empowered carriers by land or by inland navigation to limit their liability by contract. But by

sec. 8 of the Act it is laid down that even in case of a limitation of liability by contract or otherwise a common carrier would be liable for the negligence of its servants. While following the common law sec. 9 places the onus of proving want of negligence on the carriers themselves.

After the passing of the Indian Contract Act the question arose whether the liability of common carriers like that of all other bailees was not governed by the provisions of the Contract Act. In Kuverji v. G. I. F. Railway, I. L. R. 3 Bom. 109, the Bombay High Court held with reference to the definition of bailment in sec. 148 that bailee under that Act included common carriers and that therefore the common law rule of carriers' liability was abrogated by the Contract Act. The Calcutta High Court in Mothura Kant v. I. G. S. W. Co., I. L. R. 10 Cal 160, on the other hand held that the provisions of the Contract Act did not abrogate the common law rule as limited by the Carriers' Act. The view of the Calcutta High Court was adopted by the Privy Council in the Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bhagwan Das, L. R. 18 I. A. 166. Common Carriers in India therefore are now as before liable as by the common law in England subject to limitations imposed by the Carriers' Act, which in its turn follows generally the plan of the English Act.

A question arose in two different Courts in India as to the meaning of "common carriers" with reference to the status of the Campagne des Messageries Maritimes regarding carriage contracts entered into in India. The Calcutta High Court held that being a French Company they were not common carriers by common law, that their position was therefore governed by the Indian Contract Act. (McKilloan v. Campagne des Messageries Maritimes, I. L. R. 6 Cal. 227). The Madras High Court, on the other hand, in a case where the contract was entered into in Calcutta, held that the lex loci contractus would apply and the Campagne should be held to be Common Carriers. (Haji Ismail Sait v. The Company of the Messageries Maritimes, I. L. R. 28 Mad. 400). It would seem that the Calcutta High Court too applied the lex loci contractus in that it made the provisions of the Indian Contract Act applicable, and it is difficult to see on what principle the English Common Law which was a part of the lex loci could be excluded. No doubt everything depended on the meaning of the words "common carrier." The definition in the Carriers' Act is not applicable to this case as that Act applies to carriers by land or inland navigation. But common carrier is not so much of a technical term in English law that it cannot apply to a foreigner if he plies the trade of a common carrier within the jurisdiction of the Common Law.

The liability of Railway Companies as carriers is limited by legislation (Indian Railways Act, 1890, sec. 12) to that of a bailee under secs. 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act subject to further limitation by a contract signed by the bailor. But sec. 76 provides, like sec. 9 of the Carriers' Act that the burden of proving want of negligence lies on the Railway Company. It has been held that the effect of this is to establish that loss or damage of goods is prima facie evidence of negligence, (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 786 ; I. L. R. 22 All. 361).

The liability of a carrier for passengers is on a different footing from that for goods. In Collett v. L. N. W. Ry. (16 Q. B. 985), Lord Campbell, following a long judicial usage, had observed that the Railway Company was bound to carry the Plaintiff safely. Taken literally this would make Railway Companies insurers for the safety of passengers in the same manner as common carriers were insurers for the safety of goods. But Lord Halsbury in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in E. I. Ry. Co. v. Kalidas, 5 C. W. N. 449, pointed out that in the circumstances of that case Lord Campbell only meant to imply that though there was no contract between the Plaintiff and the Railway Company if the Company was bound to carry him they were bound to exercise the same care and diligence with respect to him as with respect to any other passenger with whom there was a contract. In this case the Judicial Committee laid down on a consideration of the English case law that the Railway Company was not bound to carry a passenger 'safely' but only with reasonable care and diligence and that they were not therefore liable for the death of a passenger in the absence of negligence.

It would seem that this is the law not with reference to Railways only but also with regard to all other carriers. Thus for instance Lord Chelmsford in Henderson v. Stevenson, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 470, which was a case of a steam-packet company held that the steam packet company was under a liability to carry and convey passengers with reasonable care and diligence which implies absence on the part of the company of negligence. Apart from this however the decision in the case of the Railway company is not based on any ground peculiar to Railway companies but on those common to them with all carriers of passengers.

THE LAW REPORTS OF BRITISH INDIA. By M. Subramaniam, B. A., B. L., and M. V. Krishnaswamy, B. A., B. L., Vakils, High Court, Madras. Vol. I, Allahabad: The Law Reports Office, Madras, South India. 1911.

The compilers of this volume had collaborated with Mr. Sanjiva Row in bringing out the now well-known "Indian Reports" which supplied the profession with excellent annotated reprints of the Privy Council decisions contained in Moore's Indian Appeals. The death of Mr. Row having brought the arrangement to an end, the present compilers have, after securing the permission of the Government, commenced reprinting in a cheap and handy form the decisions which appeared in Government Law Reports up to 1876. In this volume appear the Agra Full Bench Rulings and the cases reported in the North West Provinces High Court Reports, Vols. I to III, covering the periods from 1866 to 1867 and 1869 to 1871. The volume is very neatly got up and will prove useful.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, Act V of 1895, with Notes and Notifications. By Babu Bijoy Krishna Bose, B. L., of the Alipur Bar and Vakil High Court. Lila Printing Works, Bowbazar, and to be had of the author at 28, Hazra Lane, Kalighat, Calcutta. Price Rs. 6.

We are glad to welcome this moderately priced and moderately annotated edition of the Criminal Procedure Code. The annotated editions of the Code have gone on increasing in such numbers, size and price in recent years that it is sometimes distressing to decide which of them to consult for one's ordinary daily use either at home or in the Courts. The want therefore of a handy edition of the Code which would not prove confusing to the profession at times of hurry and furnish useful information from the more recent and important decisions, was greatly felt and the work under review, we are glad to find, answers that requirement. The early experience acquired by the author in rendering frequent assistance to the Public Prosecutor at Alipur, and later on in conducting the defence in the great Alipur Conspiracy Case has enabled him to deal with the sections of the Code relating to Police investigation, magisterial enquiry and other matters connected with the progress of trial in the Courts in a thoroughly practical manner. For instance under sec. 162 and other sections he points out that a number of rulings are not of much practical importance having regard to the changes in the law. This method of annotation, we regard as the chief merit of the work. The author has, however, taken care to embody all recent rulings up to September last in this work. For instance we find the Stallman case, 15 C. W. N. 1053, referred to both in the notes and the addenda. The real point of a case has been printed in bold type in the annotations which makes the work of reference easy. All the same the annotations still leave considerable room for classification and we are also of opinion that the index is somewhat meagre. The size of the book is attractive, the binding neat and printing clear. Altogether practitioners will find it a very handy work of reference.

TRIPUNDESHUR MITTER v. THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

but from the use of the expression "wall abutting on a public street" we presume that the offence intended was one which is indicated in sec. 3 (3) of the Act where the "building line" is defined as meaning "a line (in rear of the street alignment) up to which the main wall of a building abutting on a street may lawfully extend." It is therefore clear that the offence of infringing on a building line is the erection or re-erection of the wall of a building within that line, and we do not think that the replacing of the roof upon the same posts can fall within the purview of the law. Admittedly it is the front posts and not the roof which caused the trouble; and if the Municipality wish to remove the obstruction they must obtain powers obviously to remove the posts, because the roof cannot be removed unless the posts are removed, and the posts appear to have been always in the same position as they are now.

The rule must therefore be made absolute and the order of the lower Court discharged.

Rule made absolute.

APPLICATION IN THE PRESIDENCY SMALL CAUSE COURT.

SUITS NOS. 19 AND 706 OF 1910.

HARRINGTON, J. } JOHAN SMIDT, Plaintiff,
1911, } v.
30, January. } RAM PRASAD, Defendant.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), sec. 38—New trial, power of Court to order—Judgment against weight of evidence.

Sec. 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) places no limitation upon the power of the Court to order new trial in a matter when the judgment is manifestly against the weight of evidence; such power is not restricted to questions of law only.

SASSOON v. HARRY DAS BHUKUT (1) relied on.

This was a Rule obtained by the Defendant in suits Nos. 19 and 706 of 1910 of the Calcutta Small Cause Court calling upon the Plaintiff to show cause why the order of the Small Cause Court for a new trial in the suit should not be set aside.

These were suits on contracts alleged by the Plaintiff to have existed between the parties. They were originally heard and tried by the learned Second Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court. Evidence was gone into and upon the evidence adduced the learned Second Judge held there was no contract between the parties and dismissed the suits. The Plaintiff thereupon applied under sec. 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act for a new trial on the ground that the learned Second Judge had erred in holding that there was no contract between the parties and that his decision was wholly against the weight of evidence. The application was heard by a Bench composed of the learned Chief Judge and the Second Judge of the Small Cause Court. The latter would dismiss the application but the former granted it and transferred the case to the file of another Judge. The Defendant now obtained this rule on the ground that in the absence of any question of law the Small Cause Court has no power to order a new trial on a pure question of fact.

Mr. A. K. Ghose for the Petitioner argued that the learned Chief Judge in directing the new trial illegally assumed the functions of a Court of Appeal and that the said order was passed without jurisdiction. [Sadasook Gambir Chund v. Kannayya (2)].

Mr. N. N. Sarcar showed cause that the order of the Bench was perfectly legitimate and that the Small Cause Court can in any suit order a new trial to be held or alter, set aside or reverse the original decree or order upon such terms as it thinks fit. [Hassanbhoy Visram v. The British India Steam Navigation Company (3)] referred to.

HARINGTON, J.—This Rule must be discharged. Sec. 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act gives the Court power, inter alia, to order a new trial to be held. It has been argued by learned Counsel in support of the Rule that the Court can only exercise the power under sec. 38, if a question of law arises, but I find no such limitation in sec. 38, and I think that the judgment in the case of Sassoon v. Harry Das Bhukut (1) shows that a new trial may be ordered when the judgment is manifestly against the weight of evidence.

The Rule must therefore be discharged with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 244, 278, 280—Decree for money against judgment-debtor personally—Claim by him as shebait of Deity—Appeal—Second appeal—Party.

When A, in execution of a decree for money against B personally, attaches and proceeds to sell properties of which B alleges that he is in possession, not in his own right but as shebait of a Deity to whom the properties have been dedicated, the question raised falls within the scope of sec. 278 read with sec. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and not within that of sec. 244 of that Act.

KURIYALI v. MAYAN (1) and PUNCHANAN v. RABIA BIBI (2) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 14th of February 1908, against an order of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 4th of October 1907, affirming an order of Babu Sripati Chatterjee, Sub-Judge of that district, dated the 8th of August 1907.

The appeal came on for hearing before MOOKERJEE and VINCENT, JJ., who on the 25th August 1909 referred the case to a Full Bench.

KARTIK CHANDRA GHOSH v. ASHUTOSH DHARA.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was in the following terms :—

MOOKERJEE AND VINCENT, JJ.—On the 20th May 1907, one Ashutosh Dhara, Respondent in this appeal, obtained, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hughly, a decree for money against Kartik Chandra Ghosh and his two brothers, now Appellants before this Court. On the 4th June 1907, Ashutosh applied for execution of his decree. As certain properties had been attached before judgment, the Court directed the issue of sale-proclamation and fixed the 13th August for sale. On the 7th August the judgment-debtors presented a petition of objection under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, in which they urged that the properties attached and intended to be sold were in their possession, not on their own account, or as their own properties, but in trust for four idols in whose favour they had been dedicated by their ancestors under a deed of endowment executed on the 31st January 1883. The Sub-Judge held that the question raised fell within the scope of sec. 278 and not sec. 244, and under the proviso to the former section, declined to make the investigation on the ground that the claim had been designedly and unnecessarily delayed. The sale then took place in due course on the 13th August, and the properties were purchased by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtors then appealed to the District Judge on the ground that the objection preferred by them fell within the scope of sec. 244, and that it should not have been summarily rejected without investigation. The District Judge, however, held that the judgment-debtors were the representatives, not of a party to the suit but of a Deity who was not a party to the litigation. In this view, he held that the claim must be taken to have been preferred under sec. 278, and so affirmed the order of the Court of first instance. The present appeal is directed against the order of the District Judge. On behalf of the Appellants, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Begraj v. Kundali (4) and Jogendra v. Gobinda (5), in support of the view that the objection raised falls within the scope of sec. 244, and reference has also been made to some observations in the case of Punchanan v. Rabia Bibi (2). On behalf of the Respondent reliance has been placed upon the cases of Rooplal v. Bekani Meah (6), Bhajahari v. Ramlal (7), Ram Krishna v. Padma Charan (8) and Amar Chand v. Nani Gopal (9), in support of the view that the question raised is covered by sec. 278 and our attention has also been drawn to the case of Ramanathan v. Levvai (10), where a similar view was taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. There is a clear conflict of judicial opinion upon this subject, and under the Rules of Court, we are bound to refer the matter for decision to a Full Bench. The question which we refer for decision may be formulated as follows.

If A in execution of a decree for money against B personally, attaches and proceeds to sell property of which B alleges that he is in possession, not in his own right but as shebait of a Deity to whom the properties have been dedicated, does the question raised fall within the scope of sec. 244 or 278 of the Code of 1882.

KARTIK CHANDRA GHOSH v. ASHUTOSH DHARA.

As the question arises in an appeal from an Appellate order, the whole case must be referred for final decision by the Full Bench.

Babu Hara Kumar Mitter (with him Babu Satyendra Nath Mukerjee) for the Appellants.—Refers to secs. 50, 244, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 331—"Party" in sec. 244 means the person whose name appears on the records—not the "persona" or capacity.

If a person has two capacities there is no reason why he should not make his objections in both capacities.

The question whether the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest or not is clearly a question under sec. 244. When he raises a jus tertii the question still is whether the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest. The executing Court for the purpose of deciding this question may go incidentally into the question of title of the third party. It will not surely bind the third party, but the question will be a question under sec. 244 all the same. Cites Nga Tah Yah v. Burn (11). Kuriyali v. Mayan (1) is in point and in my favour. The Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar v. Kalidas (3) has approved of this decision and it is therefore binding on this Court. The Full Bench decision in Punchanan v. Rabia Bibi (2) is also in my favour.

The question was one of assets or no assets.

assets in the hands of the representative of the judgment-debtor.]

Babu Baidya Nath Dutt (with him Babu Tarini Das Banerjee) for the Respondents was not called upon.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question referred for decision to the Full Bench has been formulated in the following terms.

If A in execution of a decree for money against B personally, attaches and proceeds to sell properties of which B alleges that he is in possession, not in his own right, but as shebait of a Deity to whom the properties have been dedicated, does the question raised fall within the scope of sec. 244 or 278 of the Code of 1882?

In order that a question may be determined under sec. 244, it must arise between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. The question sought to be raised is not of this description, because while B is a party to the suit in his personal capacity the claim is advanced by him in his capacity of shebait of a Deity who is not a party to the suit.

In the opinion of the Full Bench, therefore, the question raised does not fall within the scope of sec. 244. On the other hand, it falls within the scope of sec. 278 read with sec. 280.

It has been argued, however, that this view is contrary to two decisions which are binding upon the Full Bench, namely, Kuriyali v. Mayan (1) and Punchanan v. Rabia Bibi (2). The first decision, no doubt, involves by implication the view that the question raised falls within the scope of sec. 244, but it is not binding upon this Court: it was approved by the Judicial Committee in Prosunno Kumar v. Kulidas (3) upon an entirely different point, namely, that sec. 244 does not cease to be applicable to proceedings in execution merely because the execution purchaser is a stranger to the suit. The decision in Punchanan v. Rabia Bibi (2) is by a Full Bench of this Court, and is binding till overruled by a Special Bench. It does not, however, decide the question now in controversy, but merely deals with the converse question.

KARTIK CHANDRA GHOSH v. ASHUTOSH DHARA.

The result is that the appeal to the District Judge as also the appeal to this Court must be deemed incompetent. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs of the hearing before the Division Bench and the Full Bench, the hearing fee for each hearing being fixed at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

L. P. APPEAL NO. 9 OF 1911.

Debutter, private, consensus of co-sharers if may change character—Treatment of property as secular, effect of—Partition of property by snebaitis if converts property into secular—Legal conversion, proof of.

Where a private debutter had been partitioned between members of the family for the better enjoyment thereof and there had been sales and mortgages of portions of the property by some members but there was nothing to show that there was a consensus to give the property a different turn,

Held—That the original debutter character of the property being established these facts did not operate to destroy its debutter character.

DOORGA NATH v. RAM CHANDRA (1) referred to.

Per CHATTERJEE, J.—A partition of debutter property for the purpose of convenience of the user for the sheba is not a violation of the trust for the sheba of the property.

Per JENKINS, C. J.—Where the original debutter character of a property is found in a suit to establish such character against one who claims under an original shebait, it lies upon the Defendants to show the subsequent legal conversion of the land to the ordinary user of the property.

JUGGUT MOHEENEE v. RAJENDRO NATH (2) referred to.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent, filed on the 5th of January 1911, against a decree of Mr. Justice Caspersz, dated the 6th of December 1910, passed in Second Appeal No. 743 of 1908.

The facts of the case so far as they are material for this report were as follows:—

The Plaintiff and the Defendants other than Defendant No. 3 were all descendants of one Radha Charan Mandol who was the founder of the debutter. The relation between the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 will appear from the following pedigree:—

(2) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 711 (1890).

(3) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 688 (1892).

(1) I. L. R. 2 Cal. 341 (1876).

(2) 10 B. L. R. 19, 31 (1871).

DHARMA DAS MANDOL v. GOSTA BEHARY MANDOL.

It was alleged by the Plaintiff that Radha Charan had dedicated 10 bighas of land and himself remained in possession of it. Subsequently the heirs of Radha Charan partitioned the lands by metes and bounds and held them in those shares, contributing to the sheba according to their shares. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and their deceased brother Uttam held $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of the lands. Sarup Manji the father of Defendant No. 3 in execution of a decree on a mortgage executed by Ram Tarak purchased a portion of the lands of the Defendants and purchased the remaining portion of the same at a private sale. Subsequently on the death of Uttam the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 refused to pay their share of the sheba expenses. Thereupon the Plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration that the properties in question were debutter property, that Sarup Manji acquired no title by his purchase and that Defendant No. 3 had no title to the land and other consequential reliefs.

The Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 pleaded, inter alia, that the plaint lands were not debutter and it transpired that subsequent to the purchase by Sarup Manji the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 recovered their $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the lands purchased by him and re-purchased some other lands.

It was found in the case that besides the mortgage by Ram Tarak which was subsequently renewed by his son Uttam almost all the co-sharers except the Plaintiff and his predecessors had sold portions of what were claimed as debutter lands.

The Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance found that the property was debutter and that it had been proved that according to the terms of a solenama executed by Ram Tarak amongst others a shebait who refused to pay his share of contribution to the sheba was liable to forfeit his share. The learned Munsif accordingly decreed the suit, the debutter character of the property was declared and possession of the property was decreed to the Plaintiff.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge set aside the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit with costs. In the course of his judgment the Subordinate Judge observed as follows :—

"In this case, there is no direct evidence of dedication. It is only proved that out of the income of the lands, the debsheba was performed. But this is not sufficient proof that the lands are debutter as has been held in Doorga Nath v. Ram Chandra (1). Then of course a deed of endowment is not absolutely necessary in order to the creation of a valid debutter [see Muddun Lal v. Komol Bibee (3)]. The question is whether there is reliable oral evidence on the point. It appears from several pieces of documentary evidence that the Mandol family had debutter property as observed by the learned Munsif and that the only idol that the family worships is Thakur Sridhar Jiu. It may be safely presumed, therefore, I think, that the property was once debutter. But if treatment of the property in a particular way is to be regarded as the true test whether the property is debutter or secular, as it has been authoritatively laid down in several instances, then I cannot but say that the property has for a long time past been treated as secular property.

"The father of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged the property long ago for no legal necessity. Uttam, the deceased brother of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, again renewed that bond. The claim for declaration that the property is debutter, after it has been so treated as secular property, is liable to be barred by limitation [vide Shama Charan Nandi v. Abhiram Goswami (4)]. So the treatment of the property is not a light thing at all.

"It appears in the present case that almost all the co-sharers except the Plaintiff sold portions of what are called debutter lands. It will appear from Ex. L that the Plaintiff and his brother Sribash once instituted a suit similar to the present but because Sribash had once sold his portion of the debutter land that suit was withdrawn. The learned pleader for the Respondent contends that sale was a mere instance of a breach of trust; so Sribash even could not be disqualified from maintaining that suit [vide Jugut Mohinee v. Sookhimony (5)]. No doubt this proposition is true. But in this case, the parties partitioned the debutter property amongst themselves and treated for a long time past their respective shares as secular property. The learned pleader for the Respondent contends that the parties can partition debutter property just as they can divide the pala (turn) of worship. Division of pala is quite distinct from the division of the debutter property itself and the treatment of the several shares as secular property. I hold that the property ceased to be debutter and was converted into secular property.

"As regards the second point, there is no evidence to show that the endower imposed any such condition as mentioned therein. It was only two of his descendant's Ram Tarak and Amrita Lal who laid down that condition. So, the Plaintiff, who is not a descendant of either of these two, cannot derive any benefit therefrom.

Besides, a descendant of the endower cannot bind their own descendants even by such a condition if the property is really debutter, just as he cannot create a permanent incumbrance affecting the property. So in no case is the Plaintiff, in my opinion, entitled to recover khas possession."

On appeal to the High Court the case was heard by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Caspersz sitting singly. At the time of this hearing a compromise had been effected between the Plaintiff and the representatives of Defendant No. 3. The learned Judge disposed of the case against Defendant No. 3 in terms of the compromise but as against the others he affirmed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. In the course of his judgment his Lordship observed as follows:—

"In second appeal, it has been urged by the learned Vakil, on behalf of the Plaintiff, first, that, on an erroneous view of the Hindu Law, the Subordinate Judge has held the property to be not debutter; for that such property cannot change its character by reason of any method of treatment adopted towards it, and, secondly, that, at any rate, the suit of the Plaintiff having been compromised with regard to the heirs of the mortgagee Swarup Manji, namely, the widows of Defendant No. 3, the suit may be decreed against Defendant's Nos. 1 and 2, who are holding under a collusive conveyance from Defendant No. 3.

"As already mentioned, a petition of compromise was put in, between the Plaintiff and the widows of Defendant No. 3, and to that extent this appeal has been disposed in terms of that compromise. The second contention, therefore, may be entertained, but I think there is no force in it. It has not been found by the first Court that the conveyance to Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (of plots 2 and 4) was a collusive transaction, and the Munsif rather thought that it was a real transaction binding the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 because they had cut themselves off from lawful participation in the performance of the debsheba. The Subordinate Judge did not decide the point because it was not raised before him, and on the finding of the first Court the point does not now arise.

"There remains the substantial argument in this case. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge is not, perhaps, quite accurately expressed, but his findings are in accordance with the law on the subject of debutter property. He says that there is not sufficient proof of the lands being debutter, and it is only proved that out of the income of the lands the debsheba was performed. This in original terms, is the principle laid down in Doorga Nath v. Ram Chandra (1). Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, however, laid stress on the family understanding as to whether there was any endowment. The decision of the Privy Council was applied in Gobinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Debendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury (6), where it was reported that, by the conduct of the members of the family properties at one time debutter had, by common consent, been converted into secular properties. In another passage of the judgment of the Privy Council (at p. 347) there is an observation, 'where the temple is a public temple the dedication may be such that the family itself could not put an end to it; but in the case of a family idol the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction.' Now what has been found by the Subordinate Judge is that there was such a family consensus. It is quite clear in the terms of the sole-nama, dated 7th October 1874, (pp. 27 and 28 of the paper-book) that even before the year 1874, the property had been divided into shares. One share, 3 annas 4 gundas, belonged to Ram Tarak and the then Defendants, Sribash Mondal, Dharmadas Mondal and Srimatya Nabin-Dasi. The same state of affairs is admitted by the Plaintiff in the 7th paragraph of his plaint where it is said that the shebait, for the convenience of enjoyment and possession, got the said property partitioned by metes and bounds and used to perform the debsheba from the income of those properties. In the case of Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (7), there was an ancient document, and it was pointed out that the mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol may not be proof that those lands formed an endowment for the purpose, but it is a fact that may well be taken into consideration, when as in this case the intention of the founder has to be gathered from an ancient document expressed, to say the least in ambiguous language. In the present case there is no ancient document, either ambiguous or unambiguous, and in the circumstances, I do not see how the first Court could have arrived at the conclusion that the lands are strictly debutter of the Idol Sridhar Jiu; on the contrary, from the facts underlying the arguments of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is quite evident that the property in suit was never debutter in the strict sense of the word; it was rather appropriated with pious intentions towards the upkeep of a certain family Thakur. The conduct of the parties, from the very beginning, showed that there was no real dedication to pious uses such as would be protected by the law and to which would attach that character of perpetuity which alone attaches to valid endowments."

Against this decision the Plaintiff appealed under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Krishna Prosad Sarbadhikary for the Appellant.

Babu Shyama Churn Roy for the Respondents.

CHATTERJEE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that certain properties which had passed from the family of the Plaintiff and Defendants and had been re-purchased by some of the Defendants were debutter properties and liable to contribute to the expenses of the debsheba. There were also certain other prayers. The debutter character of the property was denied.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the property was once debutter but that by the action of certain members of the family in dealing with this property the character of the property has been changed into that of secular property. As authority for the latter conclusion, he has relied upon certain cases which he does not name. He may have had in his mind the case of Doorga Nath v. Ram Chandra (1). In that case, there is no doubt, their Lordships said: "but in the case of a family idol, the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction." In the first place, that is a mere opinion which was not necessary for the decision of the case: and, in the second place, it does not say that it is competent to the heirs of the donor or other shebais to convert debutter property into secular property by the manner of their dealing with the same. In any case, the facts found in this case do not come within the purview of that opinion even, for, in this case, there was not the consensus of the whole family. The Plaintiff and his predecessors were not guilty of any breach of trust in respect of the debutter in question. It is argued before us that the mere fact of the several members of the family having partitioned the land was an act of breach of trust and that in that way the whole family may be considered to have joined in giving the property a direction in the way of its being treated as a secular property. The partition, however, must have been for the purpose of convenience of user for the sheba for which the property was dedicated: and, if that be so, the partition would not be in violation of any trust for the sheba of the deity. Besides that, there is nothing against the Plaintiff or his predecessors. There has not, therefore, been any legal conversion of the debutter property and the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to that effect is wrong.

During the pendency of the appeal, there has been a compromise of the case with Defendant No. 3 and the relation between the parties is governed, so far as the Defendant No. 3 is concerned, by the terms of the compromise entered into in the case. As regards the other Defendants, there will be a decree in this case declaring that the property in suit is debutter property and liable to contribute to the sheba of the deity Sridhar Jiu.

JENKINS, C. J.—I agree with the conclusion at which Mr. Justice Chatterjee has arrived. The case appears to me to be a very simple one. We are only concerned with Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, for with Defendant No. 3 there has been a compromise which removes that Defendant from the sphere of contest. We start with the fact found by the Subordinate Judge that the property in suit was debutter. The purpose of the suit is to have its debutter character established, at this present day, with consequential relief. It is sought to establish this claim not against a stranger to the dedication, but one who claims under an original sherbait. It lies upon Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to show that there has been some subsequent legal conversion of the land to the ordinary user of property. [See Juggut Moheene v. Rajendro Nath (2)]. Whatever force may be attributed to what was said by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Doorga Nath's case (1) in relation to a family idol, it certainly is not shown upon the facts of this case that there has been a legal conversion of the property which has divested it of its original debutter character.

On these grounds, I think that the decree of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported and his decree as well as the judgment of Mr. Justice Caspersz must be set aside and a decree passed declaring the present debutter character of the property and that the Plaintiff and Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as *sherbait*s are under an obligation to apply the income of the debutter property towards the purpose to which it was dedicated, that is to say, the worship of the deity Sri Sri Sridhar Jiu. The Plaintiff declares his willingness to apply the income of the property in his possession for the purpose of the endowment, and we decree that the income of the property in the possession of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 be also applied for the purpose of the endowment.

Each party will bear its own costs in all the Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 210, 257A, 525, 526—Arbitration, reference to, by executing Court—Award modifying decree for money—Instalment decree upon award, if ultra vires—Waiver of irregularity.

Upon an application for execution of a decree for money, the judgment-debtors having raised objections, the dispute was referred by the executing Court to an arbitrator before whom the judgment-debtor withdrew his objections and the decree-holder consented to have the decretal amount paid in certain instalments. The arbitrator purported to embody these terms in an award and the Court subsequently passed a modified decree in terms thereof. The decree-holder having applied for execution of this decree more than 12 years after the original decree was passed in his favour, the judgment-debtor objected inter alia that the application was time-barred, that the agreement embodied in the award and the decree based thereon were void under sec. 257A and that this decree was not in compliance with sec. 210 of the Code and was otherwise ultra vires of the executing Court.

Held—Per CHATTERJEE, J., agreeing with TEUNON, J., (Coxe, J., contra)—That assuming that the proceeding referring the matter to arbitration was altogether null and ultra vires, the arbitration might be treated as a private arbitration, so that the award would be one under sec. 525 and the decree under sec. 526 which it was not open to the parties to challenge or dispute.

Per CHATTERJEE, J.—The executing Court had inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the dispute, and any irregularities in the procedure leading to the decree having been waived, the party waiving such irregularities cannot be allowed to deny its validity.

This was an appeal preferred on the 28th of June 1910 against the order of H. E. Ransom, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 23rd of March 1910, reversing the order of Babu Ram Chandra Mullick, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 23rd of August 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgments of Coxe and Teunon, JJ.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Satis Chandra Mukherjee and Lalit Mohun Ghose for the Appellant.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose, Tarak Chandra Chakraverty, Dwarka Nath Mitter and Satindra Nath Mukherjee for the Respondent.

The appeal first came on for hearing before Coxe and Teunon, JJ., who differed in opinion.

The dissentient JUDGMENTS were as follows :—

COXE, J.—The facts of the present case are as follows :—The Appellant obtained a decree against the Respondent in the Calcutta Small Cause Court in 1893. This decree was transferred for execution to the Subordinate Judge of Nadia. Apparently for several ensuing years the Appellant endeavoured in vain to enforce it. The last application for execution to which I need refer was filed in 1906. This was objected to by the Respondent. The parties ultimately agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. The arbitrator gave his award on the 18th March 1907 and it ran as follows :—“The judgment-debtor withdraws his objection and the decree-holder agrees to take the decretal amount by instalments as follows : Rs. 400 to be paid within two months from the date and Rs. 400 more to be paid within the course of one year. The remainder of the decretal amount will have to be paid in two years more in half shares. In other words half the remainder must be paid within the year 1315 and the other half within the year 1316, B. S. The costs incurred in the execution of the decree will be borne by the parties themselves. Under the circumstances I consider the arrangement fair and recommend that the Court will be pleased to confirm the same. • In the event of non-payment the decree-holder will be at liberty to execute the decree and to realise the money by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property.” On receiving the award the learned Subordinate Judge, dealing with case which related to the objection of the judgment-debtor, ordered “That the award is approved by the Court and this case is disposed of in terms thereof. The judgment-debtor withdraws from the objection, which is therefore rejected and the case is dismissed." And the same day the Subordinate Judge, dealing with the case which related to the decree-holder's application for execution passed an order to the effect that "The award is approved and accepted by the Court, and in terms thereof the original decree is modified and a decree is to be substituted as set forth in the award and agreed upon by both parties. This execution case is dismissed in terms of the said award." About a year and a half later, on the 25th August 1908, in the case relating to the objection of the judgment-debtor, a formal decree was drawn up to the effect that the case be decreed in terms of the award.

The judgment-debtor seems to have paid the first instalment and on the 31st March 1909 the decree-holder applied for execution of this decree of 1908 with respect to the second instalment. The Courts below have refused this application and the decree-holder appeals.

It is argued on his behalf that the order of the 18th March 1907 extinguished the original decree and amounted to a new decree which can be executed in the ordinary course. The decisions in Jhabar Mahomed v. Modan Sonahar (2), Hukum Chand Oswal v. Taharunnessa Bibi (3), Tukaram v. Anant Bhat (4), Belchambers v. Sarat Chandra Ghose (5) were cited on behalf of this argument. Now no doubt when the original decree is completely superseded by a subsequent contract, the cases cited are authority that that contract is not rendered void by sec. 257A of the Code of 1882, so as to bar a subsequent suit upon it. There is no case however in which such a contract has been recognised in execution and in Jhabar Mahomed v. Modan Sonahar (2), it was held that such a contract could only be enforced by a fresh suit. And even where the question is not one of execution but of a subsequent suit the test whether the contract is enforceable or not turns on the point whether the judgment-debt, qua judgment-debt is or is not put an end to [Venkata Subramania Ayyar v. Koran Kannan Ahmed (6), followed in Gopal Sahu v. Brij Kishore Persad (7) as well as in Belchambers v. Sarat Chandra Ghose (5)].

Now I do not think that the arbitrator's award in this case extinguished the former decree. The concluding words, "In the event of non-payment the decree-holder will be at liberty to execute the—and to realise the money by attachment and sale" (where the missing word appears to be "decree"), indicate that the arbitrator contemplated the execution of the original decree in the event of non-payment. The decree to which reference is intended can hardly be the decree which the arbitrator expected to be drawn up on the award. I do not think he expected any such decree to be drawn up. The words occurring a little before, "The costs incurred in the execution of the decree," certainly refer to the original decree. It seems to me therefore that the award so far from extinguishing the former decree and substituting a new contract therefor, merely made an alteration in the time of payment and intended that that payment should be enforced in execution of the original decree. Nor is the matter carried further by the order on the judgment-debtor's objection. The order on the petition for execution however does go further. It provides that the "original decree be modified and a decree be substituted as set forth in the award." But apart from the fact that the modification of the original decree is not necessarily inconsistent with the supposition that the new decree is to be enforced by execution of the old decree, the new decree which was long afterwards drawn up was simply in accordance with the award. If the award therefore did not extinguish the old decree it could not be extinguished by the terms of the order of the 18th March, which found no place in the ultimate decree. It appears to me therefore that the so-called decree of August 1908 merely provided that the sums payable under it were to be realised in execution of the decree of 1895, and if the execution of that decree was barred, the existence of the subsequent decree would not save the execution from the operation of sec. 230, C. P. C.

Nor can the order be regarded as a "subsequent order" within the meaning of sec. 230. Sec. 210 shows how an order of that kind can be made. It can only be made by the Court which passed the decree; and the section lays down in express terms that save as provided in that section and sec. 206, no decree shall be altered at the request of parties. This direct and emphatic provision of the Code cannot in my opinion be evaded. It seems to me that the order now under consideration derives whatever value it may have from the fact that it was passed by consent of parties, and sec. 210 seems to me to deal definitely with this question of consent of parties and to lay down under what circumstances effect may and under what circumstances effect may not be given to such consent.

Next it is argued that the decree of August 1908, whether it be good or bad, cannot be questioned by the executing Court. In the view that I take of that decree this question does not arise, as I hold that that decree, as it stands, does not justify the execution of anything but the original decree. The point, however, has been fully argued and I think that I should refer to it. No doubt an execution Court cannot go behind a real decree, Moharaja of Bhartpur v. Rani Kanno Dei (8). But I am not prepared to hold that no order which may bear the name of a decree can be questioned in execution. The decree now before us is not a decree in a suit. The number it bears, "56 miscellaneous," is not the number of a suit under sec. 206 of the Code. In place of the "particulars of the claims" required by that section appears the judgment-debtor's objection to the execution and the relief sought is the dismissal of the application for execution. It has been argued that the order may be regarded as analogous to an order under sec. 526 or to one under sec. 258. It may be analogous to an order under sec. 526 but in my opinion it is not such an order and cannot be so treated. And I know of no authority which justifies the execution of an order recording a payment under sec. 258.

It appears to me that this so-called decree is a mere pretence. The Subordinate Judge had no power to sanction an agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt, he had no power to extend the period of limitation and he had no power to alter another Court's decree. He could not do these things by calling his order a decree and by forcing it with considerable difficulty into the form of a decree. The judgment-debtor is in my opinion entitled to show that this order is not a decree at all but merely an illegal order, in the garb of a decree, sanctioning an arrangement which could not be enforced in execution.

Thirdly, it has been argued that the judgment-debtor is estopped by his conduct from contesting the present application and from pleading that the order of August 1908 is not a decree. But as this order, if it could have any effect at all, could only obtain that effect by defeating the provisions of sec. 257A and sec. 230 no question of estoppel can arise. And of course if the view that I take of the first point be correct, this third point does not really arise.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal but in the circumstances without cost.

TEUNON, J.—In this case it appears that on the 24th of June 1895 the decree-holder Appellant obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, against the judgment-debtor, Respondent.

The decree was transferred under the provisions of sec. 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia, and in that Court in 1906 the decree-holder made his 7th application for execution. The judgment-debtor preferred certain objections and in the proceedings arising out of his petition and the decree-holder's application the matters in dispute between the parties were on their application referred by the Court to arbitration. Before the arbitrator the parties came to terms and, on the 18th March 1907, the arbitrator submitted to the Court the following report :—

"Both parties have appeared before me. They are nearly related to one another and at my suggestion they have very properly made an amicable settlement of the (sic? their) disputes. The judgment-debtor withdraws his objection and the decree-holder agrees to take the decretal amount by instalments as follows : Rs. 400 to be paid within 2 months from this date and Rs. 400 more to be paid within the course of one year. The remainder of the decretal amount will have to be paid in two years more in half shares. In other words half the remainder must be paid within the year 1315, and the other half within the year 1316, B. S. The costs incurred in the execution of the decree will be borne by the parties themselves.

"Under the circumstance I consider the arrangement fair and recommend that the Court will be pleased to confirm the same. In the event of non-payment the decree-holder will be at liberty to execute the (?) and to realise the money by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property. The signatures of the decree-holder and judgment-debtor are affixed."

As for statistical purposes the decree-holder's application for execution and the judgment-debtor's petition of objection had been separately numbered, the Subordinate Judge proceeded on the arbitration report to pass two orders. The order recorded on the order-sheet of the case arising out of the judgment-debtor's petition is as follows :—"The arbitrator has filed his award. Judgment-debtor's pleader intimates that no objection will be preferred on either side as it is based upon compromise. It is not necessary to grant time for filing of objections.

"It is ordered that the award be approved and this case is disposed of in terms thereof. The judgment-debtor withdraws from the objections which are therefore rejected and the case is dismissed."

On the order-sheet attached to the proceedings on the application for execution the order runs as follows :—

"In this case (No. 56 of 1906), the judgment-debtor took certain objections to the execution. The matters were referred to arbitration. The arbitrator has filed an award based upon the amicable settlement of the parties. The award is approved and accepted by the Court and in terms thereof the original decree is modified, and a decree is to be substituted as set forth in the award and agreed upon by both parties. This execution case is dismissed in terms of the said award, each party bearing his own costs."

Though recorded on two order sheets the two orders are obviously orders in one and the same matter and must be read together. In the result we find that the judgment-debtor's petition of objection, and the decree-holder's application for execution of the decree of 1895 were alike dismissed, and an order made that in place of the subsisting original decree there should be substituted a decree in modified terms based on the arbitrator's award.

These orders were passed on the 18th March 1907 and on the 25th August 1908 were embodied in a formal decree signed by the decree-holder but apparently not by the judgment-debtor's pleader.

This decree recites the decree-holder's application for execution, the judgment-debtor's objections, the reference to arbitration, the report on award of the arbitrator and finally declares that the decree is in accordance within the said award.

The decree-holder now applies for execution of this decree of the 18th March 1907 and 25th August 1908. The application states that the first instalment due on the 18th May 1907 had been paid, and no further payment having been made, execution is sought in respect of the second instalment.

The judgment-debtor without denying the payment of the first instalment objected (1) that execution of the decree of 1895 was barred by limitation. (2) That the reference to arbitration and the arrangement or compromise made in 1907 were contrary to law, and (3) that the orders and decree based on the arbitrator's award were made without jurisdiction, and were therefore null and void and incapable of execution.

The Sub-Judge held that the original decree of the Court of Small Causes had been adjusted, or extinguished, and that the validity of the substituted decree could not be questioned in execution proceedings.

On appeal the District Judge held that the Court of the Subordinate Judge to which the decree of the Small Causes Court had been sent for execution had no power to substitute another decree in place thereof, and that the decree so substituted was therefore a nullity, and incapable of execution.

The decree-holder now appeals to this Court, and on his behalf it is urged that the decree of 1895 should be regarded as extinguished or adjusted by the proceedings of the 18th March 1907, that this adjustment was certified to the Court by the decree-holder, and that the decree thereupon made by the Court of the Subordinate Judge upon the arbitrator's award should be regarded as one made substantially in accordance with the provisions of secs. 525 and 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882. It is also urged that the Respondents are estopped from questioning the orders made by the Subordinate Judge on the 18th March 1907.

On behalf of the Respondents, judgment-debtors, it is contended that the proceedings before the arbitrator represent merely an agreement to give time, that such agreement is void by reason of the provisions of sec. 257A of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that if the orders of the 17th March 1907 are to be regarded as orders made under sec. 210 of the said Code, they were made without jurisdiction, that even if the agreement extinguished or superseded the original decree, the remedy of the decree-holder was by suit, and not by application in execution, and lastly that the procedure prescribed in secs. 525 and 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, not having been followed, the orders of the 18th of March 1907, and the formal decree in pursuance thereof cannot be regarded as orders and a decree made under the provisions of those sections.

Now, if we have in the present case merely an agreement to give time, it cannot be disputed that by reason of sec. 257A of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that agreement is void. Similarly if we have merely an agreement, or contract, extinguishing and superseding the original decree there can be no question that the decree-holder Appellant's remedy was by suit.

Thus the questions that arise for determination are :—

(1) Whether the orders of the 18th March 1907, and the decree in pursuance thereof should be regarded as orders and a decree made under sec. 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and (2) if not, whether the orders of the 18th March 1907 should be regarded as orders made under sec. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, whether the Respondents are estopped from questioning the said order and whether the original decree as modified by those orders can now be executed.

At first sight it might seem that in his report of the 18th March 1907, the arbitrator makes no award, but merely informs the Court of an arrangement arrived at by the parties. But it is clear that the Court to which the report was submitted interpreted the arbitrator's expressed approval of the arrangement as an award, and that the parties then and since accepted this interpretation. Even in his present petition of objection the judgment-debtor speaks of the arbitrators' award or award, and I am of opinion that we should not now place any different construction upon the arbitrator's report.

Secs. 506 to 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, do not appear to contemplate references to arbitration by the Court in execution proceedings, and this indeed is or was one of the contentions of the judgment-debtor Respondent. The present reference may therefore be taken as one made without the intervention of any Court.

As already found, an award was made on the reference, and the report of the arbitrator contained a prayer that the Court should be pleased to confirm the award.

Though submitted or handed to the Court by the arbitrator the application was signed by the decree-holder, and may therefore be regarded as in effect the present Appellant's application that the Court should pass the orders, in accordance with the award. It is true that the Court did not register and number the application but the provision in this behalf appears to be one made mainly for statistical purposes, and the Court's failure to comply therewith is not in my opinion an omission which should be regarded as affecting the essential character of the application as a suit, or as prejudicing the rights of parties.

It is true also that the Court did not issue notice to the other party to the arbitration, that is the judgment-debtor Respondent, but that also, it appears to me, is at most an irregularity and cured in the present instance by the fact that the judgment-debtor had himself signed the application, had notice and intimated to the Court through his pleader that he had in fact no cause to show. By the orders of the 18th March 1907, the Subordinate Judge thereupon in effect pronounced judgment according to the award, and the decree now sought to be executed followed.

In this view, no question of jurisdiction arises, for the submission to arbitration and the making of the award were both within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge within whose jurisdiction also both parties reside.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the orders and decree of the 18th March 1907 should be regarded as order and a decree made under sec. 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that they superseded or extinguished the decree of 1895, and that the decree sought to be executed is capable of execution.

I may here notice the suggestion that even if the orders and decree of the 18th March 1907 are to be regarded as order and a decree made under sec. 526, even so they and the arbitrator's award should be construed as providing merely that on failure to pay the sums specified the decree-holder shall be at liberty to realise by execution of the original decree. As that decree is barred execution has become impossible.

I am unable to accept this view. If and in so far as it refers to the original decree, the decree of March 1907 may be said to incorporate that decree, and in so far as read with the award it provides that certain sums shall be paid, on or before certain specified dates, is in itself a decree to be enforced and executed. If it be said that this was not the intention of the parties or the arbitrator, the reply is that the order of the 18th March 1907 was made in the judgment-debtor's presence and that his remedy was by appeal.

But I am not prepared to accept the view that the decree of the 18th March is in excess of the award. The substantive portion of the award was that the original decretal amount should be treated as the whole sum due and should be paid on four specified dates. The somewhat obscure sentence following upon the prayer that the award should be confirmed may be treated as surplusage and was apparently so regarded by the Court to which the award was submitted. As, in the view I have taken, the decree sought to be executed is one made under sec. 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and is capable of execution I need not discuss the second question.

For the reasons given I should decree this appeal with costs.

[Owing to this difference of opinion the case was laid before the Chief Justice for reference to a third Judge. Under secs. 98 and 108 of the Civil Procedure Code, their Lordships stated the point of law on which they differed in the following terms :—

"Should the award and the order of the 18th March 1907 be regarded and treated

as an award and order under secs. 525 and 526 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, and should the decree of the 25th August 1908 be executed as a decree made in accordance with an award made under the said section."]

The JUDGMENT OF CHATTERJEE, J., to whom the point was referred was as follows :—

CHATTERJEE, J.—The decree-holder obtained a decree for Rs. 1,360 in the Calcutta Small Cause Court in 1895 and had it transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia for execution. The seventh application was made in 1906 and was entered as Execution Case No. 108 of 1906 and the seventh objection by the judgment-debtor was numbered as Misc. No. 56 of 1906. Pending this execution the parties applied for referring all matters in dispute between them to the arbitration of Babu Prosanna Kumar Bose, a local pleader, and the Court made the reference accordingly. Before the arbitrator the parties agreed to certain terms under which the decretal amount as it then stood was to be paid in certain instalments failing which the decretal amount could be recovered by the attachment and sale of the properties of the judgment-debtor. The arbitrator asked that the agreement might be confirmed and his report was signed by both the parties. The Judge passed a fresh decree in accordance with this report. The first instalment of Rs. 400 under the new arrangement was paid on the 15th May 1907 just within 12 years of the original decree and the formal decree was signed on the 25th August 1908. The decree-holder then applied for executing this decree on the 31st March 1909 for the second instalment and the judgment-debtor at once turned round and objected that the decree of 1895 was the only decree that could be executed and the later decree was ultra vires so that execution was barred under sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first Court allowed execution to proceed but the District Judge on appeal accepted the objection of the judgment-debtor. On second appeal by the decree-holder there has been a difference of opinion between the two learned Judges before whom the appeal was heard and hence this reference under secs. 98 and 108 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act V of 1908. The decree-holder contended before the learned Judges (1) that the Nadia Court was within its jurisdiction in passing a new decree and its action had in any case warrant under secs. 525 and 526 of the old Civil Procedure Code, (2) that a decree having been already passed the executing Court had no jurisdiction to go behind the decree, (3) that the judgment-debtor was estopped from making the objection that he now made.

Mr. Justice Coxe overruled all these objections but Mr. Justice Teunon was of opinion that the first ground was good and did not therefore think it necessary to go into the two other grounds. The point in difference has been stated by the learned Judges as "should the award and the order of the 18th March 1907 be regarded and treated as an award and order under secs. 525 and 526 of the C. P. C., 1882, and should the decree of the 25th August 1908 be executed as a decree made in accordance with an award made under the above sections?" The reference is limited in scope in accordance with the provisions of the new Code and I have to deal with this limited question only. This question must however be determined in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case by reference to the peculiar relative positions in which the parties have placed themselves by their conduct and subject to the limitation imposed on permissible contention by reason of such conduct. So approaching the case I think that the judgment-debtor cannot be heard to say that the arbitration initiated at his instance was not an arbitration, that the award consented to by him was not an award or the decree passed in his presence and submitted to by him was not a decree. The Subordinate Judge of Nadia was perfectly competent to deal with the execution case and to dispose of all disputes relating to the execution of the decree. He had therefore what is called inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter. If he could make a reference of the dispute to an arbitrator, the proceedings were in due course of law. If he could not the reference was an irregularity which could be waived and the party so waiving the irregularity would be barred by his own conduct from complaining of such irregularity afterwards. But supposing the whole action of the Court in reference to the arbitration was ultra vires and null and void, there was nothing in law to prevent the parties from appointing an arbitrator to settle their differences and then the award of the arbitrator would be one within sec. 525 and the decree under 526. Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Ledgard v. Bull (1) says "The District Judge was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit if it were competently brought and their Lordships do not doubt that in such a case a Defendant may be barred by his own conduct from objecting to irregularities in the institution of the suit. When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, the parties cannot by their mutual consent convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him. But there are numerous authorities which establish that when in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the Defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the ground that there were irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time would have led to the dismissal of the suit." Applying these principles to present case I hold that as between the parties to the case there was an award of the arbitrator which may at the least be a private award under sec. 525, the Court purported to pass a decree which on the above view would be one under sec. 526 of the C. P. Code and the propriety of such a decree cannot be called in question by the judgment-debtor in execution. In the result, therefore, I answer the question asked in the affirmative. The decree-holder is entitled to the costs of this hearing and I assess the same at 2 gold mohurs.

"Appeal No. 308 will be decreed. The order of the District Judge will be set aside and the execution will proceed. The Appellant will be entitled to his costs of this Court, which we assess at two gold mohurs, and of the lower Appellate Court"].

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 20, r. 11, and Or. 34, r. 6—Personal decree against mortgagor—Court's discretion to direct payment by instalment—Judicial discretion—Second appeal.

In making a decree under Or. 34, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code against a mortgagor personally, the Court may direct the payment of the decretal amount in instalments under Or. 20, r. 11 of the Code.

Whether or not the Court exercised a sound judicial discretion in making the order cannot be reviewed in second appeal.

BALGOBINDRAM BHAKAT v. CHHEDILAL SAHA (2) distinguished.

This was an appeal from an order of E. Panton, Esq., District Judge of Burdwan, dated the 23rd of July 1910, confirming an order of Babu Achinta Nath Mitta, 1st Munsif of Burdwan, dated the 23rd of April 1910.

The Appellant mortgagee applied under Or. 34, r. 6 for a personal decree against the Respondents mortgagors for the balance of the mortgage-debt which remained undischarged after the mortgaged properties had been sold in pursuance of a decree for sale obtained on the mortgage. The Respondents prayed for an order under Or. 20, r. 11 allowing them to pay the amount by instalments. The Munsif having acceded to this prayer, the decree-holder appealed to the District Judge who in dismissing the appeal observed as follows :—

"The Appellant obtained a mortgage decree against the Respondents. The original debt was Rs. 400 with interest this amounted to Rs. 1,600. Rs. 700 was realised by sale of the mortgaged property. The Munsif in decreeing the suit for the balance ordered its payment by monthly instalments of Rs. 10, on default of two consecutive instalments the whole amount to fall due. . . . There is evidence that the judgment-debtors are men of small means and taking the circumstances into consideration I am unable to hold that the Munsif in making the order did not exercise a sound discretion. It is contended that the decree being a mortgage decree, Or. 20, r. 11 does not apply to it. But it is a decree for the payment of money and in my view there is no force in the argument."

The decree-holder preferred this second appeal.

Babu Kshetra Mohun Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Shorashi Charan Mitra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the decree-holder against an order of first Court, confirmed by the lower Appellate Court, allowing the judgment-debtors to pay by instalment of ten rupees per mensem, the amount decreed under Or. 34, r. 6 corresponding to sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

It is urged that Or. 20, r. 12, which provides for payment by instalment, is not applicable to the case of decrees in mortgage suits, and that in the circumstances of this case, the order for payment by instalments, postponing the satisfaction of the decree for a term of about seven years, is bad as not passed in the exercise of a proper judicial discretion.

No reported authority cited to us is in point. The case of Shankarapa Dargo v. Danapa Virantapa (1) was decided before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and, no doubt, it lays down that the indulgence granted by sec. 210 of the former Code of Civil Procedure only applies in cases to which the section strictly applies, that is to say, in cases where decrees are passed in money suits. There is an observation, however, in the judgment of Melvill, J., from which we gather that a decree for payment by instalments may be passed where the decree is against an agriculturist personally, though not a decree for the recovery of money by the sale of the agriculturist's immoveable property. In the present case, there can be no question that the decree passed against the judgment-debtor is a personal decree; it is, also, a decree for the payment of money.

Or. 20, r. 11 says—"Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may, for any sufficient reason at the time of passing the decree, order that the payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments, with, or without interest, notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under which the money is payable." The rule does not say—"where and in so far as the decree is passed in a suit for the recovery of money"; nor does the 'contract' under which the amount decreed was payable exclude an original mortgage contract. In the circumstances of Or. 34, r. 6, the decree is no longer directed against the mortgaged property; but in virtue of the contract, it binds the judgment-debtors personally. The decree has been passed under Or. 34, r. 6 in accordance with the judgment, and the general provisions relating to judgments and decrees embodied in Or. 20 undoubtedly cover the decree, based on an antecedent judgment, which is allowable under Or. 34, r. 6.

Furthermore, the decree now passed must be executed under the general provisions of the Code, and we cannot regard Or. 34 as self-contained. We cannot say that because there are no provisions for payment by instalments in the Or. 34, the general provisions of Or. 20, r. 11 do not apply. Viewing the decree as it appears to be, a decree for the payment of a definite sum of money, we think that it was open to the lower Appellate Court to pass the order it has passed in favour of the judgment-debtors. The first contention, therefore, is overruled.

The second contention is one which we cannot entertain in second appeal. The case relied on, Balgobindram Bhakat v. Chhedilal Saha (2) was not a second appeal, but a rule in which the judgment of a Small Cause Court Judge, permitting the decretal amount to be paid by instalments, was sought to be modified, and the learned Judges held that the discretion under Or. 20, r. 11 must be exercised in a judicial manner. We think that, in second appeal, the question of discretion cannot now be gone into. It is, perhaps, somewhat anomalous that the decree-holder should be kept out of his money for seven years; but, on the other hand, he has already recovered a substantial sum nearly double the amount of his original debt. So that the hardship complained of is more apparent than real.

The appeal, accordingly, fails and is

APPEAL NO. 211 OF 1911.

HOLMWOOD, J.	}	MEHER SARDAR and
SHARFUDDIN, J.		others, ¹
1911,		v.
19, April.		THE KING-EMPEROR.

Fury trial—Misdirection—Citation of rulings in the charge to the jury—Right of private defence, when trespassers have begun cutting crop.

When trespassers began cutting and carrying away crop grown by the person in possession, reasonable apprehension to the property having already commenced, the right of private defence of the latter commenced at the same time; and it was misdirection on the part of the Judge to leave it to the jury to say whether the fact that the police station was only 9 miles off from the place of occurrence did not take away that right. The reference in such circumstances to his civil remedies also amounted to misdirection.

No rulings or authorities should be cited by the Judge in his charge to the jury nor should they be asked to differentiate or form any opinion whatever on any authorities. Such procedure confuses the minds of the jury and constitutes misdirection.

This was an appeal presented on the 16th of March 1911 by the above-named accused Appellants against the conviction and sentence passed upon them by the Court of Session of Khulna (Mr. T.^c C. Mukerjee) on the 13th of February 1911.

The accused who were seven in number were charged with the following offences: (1) that on the 5th November 1910 at Raipur, they formed an unlawful assembly with 8 or 9 others with the common object of enforcing the right or supposed right of the accused Meher Sardar with respect to a plot of 5 bighas of land in Raipur, of which the eastern half was claimed by the complainant and the other half by Kefatulla Sana, and of assaulting the complainant and his party with lathis and causing hurt to them, and that as in prosecution of those objects hurt was caused to complainant Mangal Biswas, Amenuddi and Barkatulla (who had since died from the effects of the injuries), they committed the offence of rioting punishable under sec. 147, I. P. C., (2) that on the same date and at the same place, they were members of an unlawful assembly with the common object as specified in the first charge, and that as in prosecution of those common objects Kader Sardar, Kobil Sardar and others struck Barkatulla with lathis and Ibrahim with a wooden pole, and thereby inflicted injuries with the intention of causing death and which in fact caused the death of Barkatulla, they committed the offence of murder punishable under sec. 302, I. P. C., read with sec. 149, I. P. C. To these charges another under sec. 326 read with sec. 34, I. P. C., was added against accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4, Ibrahim, Kader and Kobil, at the instance of the public prosecutor.

It appears that one Piyar Sardar was the registered tenant of the disputed plot. Complainant, Mangal Biswas and Barkatulla (deceased), it was alleged, occupied the eastern half of the plot while the western half was in possession of Kafatulla, descendants of Badal (Piyar's brother). The case for the prosecution was that complainant and his brother Barkatulla went, on the 19th Kartic, to cut paddy from the eastern half of the plot when accused with others came to the field with lathis; that the accused asked complainant to desist from cutting the paddy; that the complainant not minding them there was an altercation and under orders of Meher the accused Kader struck Mangal, accused Kobil and Kader struck Barkatulla with their lathis and that Barkatulla fell down and shortly after died. .

The complainant lodged information at Satkhira Thana which resulted in a police investigation. The accused were sent up before a Magistrate and he, after a preliminary enquiry, committed them to take their trial before the Court of Session.

The Sessions Judge agreeing with the jury found them guilty.

Against the conviction and sentence passed against them, the present appeal was preferred.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah for the Appellants.—The Judge's charge contained a number of misdirections; submits that when the accused had grown the crops and were in possession of the lands, they were entitled to resist force by force. Therefore the charge of unlawful assembly must go. The right of private defence of property moreover extends to the taking of a man's life under the circumstances mentioned in sec. 104, I. P. C. Therefore even if Kader and Kobil be charged under sec. 326, the Judge should not have told the jury that there was no right of private defence when the thana was only nine miles off. A Judge, again, is to explain the law to the jury. He should not ask them to consider the effect of rulings.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed for the 'Crown.—Although possession was with the accused yet there is no evidence that the accused were in such imminent danger of person or property as to be justified in taking a man's life. Therefore even if the charge of unlawful assembly fails the conviction under sec. 326 upon Kader and Kobil must in any case stand.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah in reply.—The complainants were more than four in number and their action was robbery in the eye of law and therefore my clients were justified in using violence even to the extent of taking a man's life.

This is an appeal from the conviction and sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Khulna upon seven persons. Agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury he found them guilty under sec. 147, I. P. C, and directed that they be rigorously imprisoned for one year and six months each under that section. The accused Kader Sardar and Kobil were further found guilty by the jury under sec. 326 and they were sentenced to be rigorously imprisoned for three years under that section, the sentences were to run concurrently with those passed under sec. 147.

The jury found incidentally that possession whether rightly or wrongly was with the first accused Meher Sardar and therefore following the direction of the Judge they must have found that Meher Sardar and his party had the right of private defence against the taking of their crops. They were therefore justified in using sufficient force to get rid of these people and prevent their stealing their crops and the learned Judge clearly misdirected the jury when he left it to them to say whether the fact that the police station was only 9 miles off the place of occurrence did not take away their right of private defence; for the right of private defence of property commences when reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences and if persons have begun to cut and carry away your crop it cannot be said that you are bound to go nine miles to fetch the police. The reasonable apprehension of danger to the property having commenced the right of private defence has also commenced. The same consideration applies to the remedies in the Civil Court to which the learned Judge referred. The cutting and the removal could not have been prevented at the moment by the institution of any suit, and the learned Judge practically directed the jury that by taking the law into their own hands they formed themselves into an unlawful assembly and it is on this misdirection that the jury have found them all guilty under sec. 147. We notice that he has cited and commented on a number of rulings of this Court and told the jury that it was for them to say whether any of those rulings are exactly on all fours with the circumstances of the present case. This is also a misdirection. No rulings or authorities are ever to be cited to the jury nor are they to be asked to differentiate or form any opinion whatever on any authorities. It is for the Judge and the Judge only to tell the jury what the law is, and before he tells them what it is he may consult as many authorities as he pleases and those authorities are no doubt binding upon him. The minds of the jury should never be confused by having a number of conflicting authorities or indeed any authorities laid before them. In this case the Judge not only confused the jury by laying before them a number of conflicting authorities and leaving it to them to choose between them but as we have seen he has misdirected them as to the law of the right of private defence. We have no doubt that the accused persons had the right of private defence in this case and that they did not exceed it except in so far as certain persons fractured the skull of one Barkatulla with lathis. This was a wholly unnecessary proceeding and quite unjustified. But as the assailants were exercising the right of private defence they cannot have formed members of an unlawful assembly.

The convictions and sentences under sec. 147, I. P. C., against all the Appellants must therefore be set aside and they must all be acquitted and released with the exception of Appellants Nos. 3 and 4, Kader Sardar and Kobil alias Kobeluddi, who have been further convicted by the jury under sec. 326 on the finding that it was they who struck Barkatulla the two blows on the head which the medical evidence shows fractured his skull. In so doing they undoubtedly exceeded the right of private defence and the verdict of the jury must be upheld. But we think the sentence must be reduced to one of eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment in each case.

We accordingly direct that the accused Kader Sardar and Kobil alias Kobeluddi be sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment under sect 326, I. P. C. The other Appellants will be discharged.

tical purposes, and the Court's failure to comply therewith is not in my opinion an omission which should be regarded as affecting the essential character of the application as a suit, or as prejudicing the rights of parties.

It is true also that the Court did not issue notice to the other party to the arbitration, that is the judgment-debtor Respondent, but that also, it appears to me, is at most an irregularity and cured in the present instance by the fact that the judgment-debtor had himself signed the application, had notice and intimated to the Court through his pleader that he had in fact no cause to show. By the orders of the 18th March 1907, the Subordinate Judge thereupon in effect proceeding to the award, held to be executed

Please substitute previous issue (Naward were both of jurisdiction on to arbitration f the Subordinate Judge within whose jurisdiction also both parties reside.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the orders and decree of the 18th March 1907 should be regarded as order and a decree made under sec. 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that they superseded or extinguished the decree of 1895, and that the decree sought to be executed is capable of execution.

I may here notice the suggestion that even if the orders and decree of the 18th March 1907 are to be regarded as order and a decree made under sec. 526, even so they and the arbitrator's award should be construed as providing merely that on failure to pay the sums specified the decree-holder shall be at liberty to realise by execution of the original decree. As that decree is barred execution has become impossible.

I am unable to accept this view. If and in so far as it refers to the original decree, the decree of March 1907 may be said to incorporate that decree, and in so far as read with the award it provides that certain sums shall be paid, on or before certain specified dates, is in itself a decree to be enforced and executed. If it be said that this was not the intention of the parties or the arbitrator, the reply is that the order of the 18th March 1907 was made in the judgment-debtor's presence and that his remedy was by appeal.

But I am not prepared to accept the view that the decree of the 18th March is in excess of the award. The substantive portion of the award was that the original decretal amount should be treated as the whole sum due and should be paid on four specified dates. The somewhat obscure sentence following upon the prayer that the award should be confirmed may be treated as surplusage and was apparently so regarded by the Court to which the award was submitted. As, in the view I have taken, the decree sought to be executed is one made under sec. 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and is capable of execution I need not discuss the second question.

For the reasons given I should decree this appeal with costs.

"Should the award and the order of the 18th March 1907 be regarded and treated

as an award and order under secs. 525 and 526 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, and should the decree of the 25th August 1908 be executed as a decree made in accordance with an award made under the said section.”]

The JUDGMENT OF CHATTERJEE, J., to whom the point was referred was as follows :—

CHATTERJEE, J.—The decree-holder obtained a decree for Rs. 1,360 in the Calcutta Small Cause Court in 1895 and had it transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia for execution. The seventh application was made in 1906 and was entered as Execution Case No. 108 of 1906 and the seventh objection by the judgment-debtor was numbered as Misc. No. 56 of 1906. Pending this execution the parties applied for referring all matters in dispute between them to the arbitration of Babu Prosanna Kumar Bose, a local pleader, and the Court made the reference accordingly. Before the arbitrator the parties agreed to certain terms under which the decretal amount as it then stood was to be paid in certain instalments failing which the decretal amount could be recovered by the attachment and sale of the properties of the judgment-debtor. The arbitrator asked that the agreement might be confirmed and his report was signed by both the parties. The Judge passed a fresh decree in accordance with this report. The first instalment of Rs. 400 under the new arrangement was paid on the 15th May 1907 just within 12 years of the original decree and the formal decree was signed on the 25th August 1908. The decree-holder then applied for executing this decree on the 31st March 1909 for the second instalment and the judgment-debtor at once turned round and objected that the decree of 1895 was the only decree that could be executed and the later decree was ultra vires so that execution was barred under sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first Court allowed execution to proceed but the District Judge on appeal accepted the objection of the judgment-debtor. On second appeal by the decree-holder there has been a difference of opinion between the two learned Judges before whom the appeal was heard and hence this reference under secs. 98 and 108 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act V of 1908. The decree-holder contended before the learned Judges (1) that the Nadia Court was within its jurisdiction in passing a new decree and its action had in any case warrant under secs. 525 and 526 of the old Civil Procedure Code, (2) that a decree having been already passed the executing Court had no jurisdiction to go behind the decree, (3) that the judgment-debtor was estopped from making the objection that he now made.

Mr. Justice Coxe overruled all these objections but Mr. Justice Teunon was of opinion that the first ground was good and did not therefore think it necessary to go into the two other grounds. The point in difference has been stated by the learned Judges as “should the award and the order of the 18th March 1907 be regarded and treated as an award and order under secs. 525 and 526 of the C. P. C., 1882, and should the decree of the 25th August 1908 be executed as a decree made in accordance with an award made under the above sections?” The reference is limited in scope in accordance with the provisions of the new Code and I have to deal with this limited question only. This question must however be determined in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case by reference to the peculiar relative positions in which the parties have placed themselves by their conduct and subject to the limitation imposed on permissible contention by reason of such conduct. So approaching the case I think that the judgment-debtor cannot be heard to say that the arbitration initiated at his instance was not an arbitration, that the award consented to by him was not an award or the decree passed in his presence and submitted to by him was not a decree. The Subordinate Judge of Nadia was perfectly competent to deal with the execution case and to dispose of all disputes relating to the execution of the decree. He had therefore what is called inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter. If he could make a reference of the dispute to an arbitrator, the proceedings were in due course of law. If he could not the reference was an irregularity which could be waived and the party so waiving the irregularity would be barred by his own conduct from complaining of such irregularity afterwards. But supposing the whole action of the Court in reference to the arbitration was ultra vires and null and void, there was nothing in law to prevent the parties from appointing an arbitrator to settle their differences and then the award of the arbitrator would be one within sec. 525 and the decree under 526. Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Ledgard v. Bull (1) says "The District Judge was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit if it were competently brought and their Lordships do not doubt that in such a case a Defendant may be barred by his own conduct from objecting to irregularities in the institution of the suit. When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, the parties cannot by their mutual consent convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him. But there are numerous authorities which establish that when in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the Defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the ground that there were irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time would have led to the dismissal of the suit." Applying these principles to present case I hold that as between the parties to the case there was an award of the arbitrator which may at the least be a private award under sec. 525, the Court purported to pass a decree which on the above view would be one under sec. 526 of the C. P. Code and the propriety of such a decree cannot be called in question by the judgment-debtor in execution. In the result, therefore, I answer the question asked in the affirmative. The decree-holder is entitled to the costs of this hearing and I assess the same at 2 gold mohurs.

"Appeal No. 308 will be decreed. The order of the District Judge will be set aside and the execution will proceed. The Appellant will be entitled to his costs of this Court, which we assess at two gold mohurs, and of the lower Appellate Court"].

RULE NO. 4784 OF 1911.

ABDUL KARIM ABU
AHMED KHAN GHAZNAVI
WOODROFFE, J. and another, Defendants, TEUNON, J. } Petitioners,
1911, } v.
5, September. } ABDUS SOBHAN CHOU-DHRY and ors., Plaintiffs, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 92—Government if may empower a Judge to try a particular suit pending before another Court.

A suit for the administration of a public charity under sec. 92, Civil Procedure Code, was properly instituted before the District Judge. Subsequently the Government by a notification empowered a Subordinate Judge to try that suit and the District Judge thereupon transferred the suit to the said Subordinate Judge.

Held—That as the notification was directed to a particular Judge and purported to deal with a particular litigation which was at that date already pending before another Court it was not such a notification as was contemplated by sec. 92, Civil Procedure Code.

Held further—That the Subordinate Judge had therefore no jurisdiction to try the suit and the District Judge had no power to transfer the suit to him.

This was a Rule granted on the 23rd of August 1911, against an order of Babu
Behari Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 15th of August 1911.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

The suit was instituted by the Plaintiffs for the proper administration of an alleged wakf estate under the provisions of sec. 92, Civil Procedure Code, in the Court of the District Judge of Mymensingh. After the suit was pending in that Court for some time, the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam on the 12th July 1911 upon a representation made by the District Judge and forwarded by the High Court issued the following notification empowering Babu Behari Lal Chatterjee, a Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, under sec. 92, Civil Procedure Code, to try the suit.

"No. 1110 J. Babu Behari Lal Chatter-jee, Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, is empowered under sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure to try or dispose of Suit No. 1 of 1910 instituted by Nawab
Abdus Sobhan Choudhry and others against Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan and others, Defendants, pending in the Court of the District Judge of Mymensingh."

On the 18th July after this notification was received, the then District Judge transferred the suit to Babu Behari Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge. The case came on for hearing before that Court on the 15th August 1911 when the Defendants raised preliminary objections on the grounds inter alia that the notification of the Local Government was illegal, that the Local Government had no authority under sec. 92 of the Code to empower a Court to try a part-heard suit, and that there was no authority in the Local Government to empower a Court to try a particular suit.

The Subordinate Judge overruled these objections. Against this decision of the learned Subordinate Judge the Defendants moved the Hon'ble High Court which issued this rule.

D. Ragh Behari Ghose (with him *Babu
Akhal Bandhu Guha* for the Petitioners.—
The order is wholly illegal. First, the notification authorises Babu Behari Lal Chatterjee to try the suit. Under sec. 92 the

ABDUL KARIM ABU AHMED KHAN GHAZNAVI v. ABDUS SOBHAN CHOUDHRY.

Government can only empower a Court but Babu Behari Lal Chatterjee is not a Court. Secondly, the power which the Government can give must be one to try all suits and not any particular suit and certainly not a suit pending in another Court. The Government has really purported to transfer the suit. The Eastern Bengal and Assam Government has certainly no authority to transfer a pending suit from one Court to another.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Babus Umesh Chandra Ghosh and Nares Chandra Sen-Gupta) for the Opposite Party submitted that the general power of Government included the particular power. So the Government could empower a Court to try a particular suit as well as a whole class of suits. The Government had not purported to transfer the suit. What they had done was only to create another Court of competent jurisdiction and once such Court was created it was the District Judge who transferred the suit as he had power to do under sec. 24. If the Plaintiff had withdrawn the suit from the District Judge's Court and presented it before Babu Behari Lal Chatterjee it would be perfectly legal. The objection therefore even if valid was highly technical there being no question that the suit was properly instituted and that the Subordinate Judge would undoubtedly have jurisdiction but for a technical defect.

Dr. Ghose for the Petitioners was not called upon to reply.

WOODROFFE, J.—This Rule must, I think, be made absolute, because the notification of the 12th July 1911 was not such a notification as was contemplated by

sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was a notification directed to a particular Judge and purported to deal with a particular litigation; and that litigation was, at the date of the notification, already pending in the Court of the District Judge. It follows that the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh was not competent to try or dispose of the suit and the District Judge had no power to transfer the suit to a Court which was not then competent to dispose of it. In, however, making this rule absolute I desire to make it clear, in order to avoid any possible objection in future, that the District Judge has, notwithstanding anything that has hitherto been done, power to try this suit. The result of our holding that the Subordinate Judge was not competent to try the suit is that the District Judge effected nothing by his order of transfer and therefore the suit remained where it was originally instituted. The District Judge, therefore, has jurisdiction to try the suit; and we think, having regard to the circumstances of the case and also to the waste of time that has been involved by reason of the infructuous proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, that this case should be heard as soon as possible, that is to say as soon as the Judge can conveniently hear it.

We may also say, having regard to the statements made to us, that if there is pressure of work in the Judge's Court, an application may properly be made by him for assistance in carrying on his work as District and Sessions Judge.

In the circumstances of the case the Rule is made absolute, without costs.

Let the record and this order be sent down at once.

Rule made absolute.

APPEAL NO. 211 OF 1911.

HOLMWOOD, J.	}	MEHER SARDAR and
SHARFUDDIN, J.		others,
1911,		v.
19, April.		THE KING-EMPEROR.

Jury trial—Misdirection—Citation of rulings in the charge to the jury—Right of private defence, when trespassers have begun cutting crop.

When trespassers began cutting and carrying away crop grown by the person in possession, reasonable apprehension to the property having already commenced, the right of private defence of the latter commenced at the same time; and it was misdirection on the part of the Judge to leave it to the jury to say whether the fact that the police station was only 9 miles off from the place of occurrence did not take away that right. The reference in such circumstances to his civil remedies also amounted to misdirection.

No rulings or authorities should be cited by the Judge in his charge to the jury nor should they be asked to differentiate or form any opinion whatever on any authorities. Such procedure confuses the minds of the jury and constitutes misdirection.

This was an appeal presented on the 16th of March 1911 by the above-named accused Appellants against the conviction and sentence passed upon them by the Court of Session of Khulna (Mr. T. C. Mukerjee) on the 13th of February 1911.

The accused who were seven in number were charged with the following offences: (1) that on the 5th November 1910 at Raipur, they formed an unlawful assembly with 8 or 9 others with the common object of enforcing the right or supposed right of the accused Meher Sardar with respect to a plot of 5 bighas of land in Raipur, of which the eastern half was claimed by the complainant and the other half by Kefa-tulla Sana, and of assaulting the complainant and his party with lathis and causing hurt to them, and that as in prosecution of those objects hurt was caused to complainant Mangal Biswas, Amenuddin and Barkatulla (who had since died from the effects of the injuries), they committed the offence of rioting punishable under sec. 147, I. P. C., (2) that on the same date and at the same place, they were members of an unlawful assembly with the common object as specified in the first charge, and that as in prosecution of those common objects Kader Sardar, Kobil Sardar and others struck Barkatulla with lathis and Ibrahim with a wooden pole, and thereby inflicted injuries with the intention of causing death and which in fact caused the death of Barkatulla, they committed the offence of murder punishable under sec. 302, I. P. C., read with sec. 149, I. P. C. To these charges another under sec. 326 read with sec. 34, I. P. C., was added against accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4, Ibrahim, Kader and Kobil, at the instance of the public prosecutor.

It appears that one Piyaar Sardar was the registered tenant of the disputed plot. Complainant, Mangal Biswas and Barkatulla (deceased), it was alleged, occupied the eastern half of the plot while the western half was in possession of Kafatulla, descendants of Badal (Piyaar's brother). The case for the prosecution was that complainant and his brother Barkatulla went, on the 19th Kartic, to cut paddy from the eastern half of the plot when accused with others came to the field with lathis; that the accused asked complainant to desist from cutting the paddy; that the complainant not minding them there was an altercation and under orders of Meher the accused Kader struck Mangal, accused Kobil and Kader struck Barkatulla with their lathis and that Barkatulla fell down and shortly after died.

The complainant lodged information at Satkhira Thana which resulted in a police investigation. The accused were sent up before a Magistrate and he, after a preliminary enquiry, committed them to take their trial before the Court of Session.

The Sessions Judge agreeing with the jury found them guilty.

Against the conviction and sentence passed against them, the present appeal was preferred.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah for the Appellants.—The Judge's charge contained a number of misdirections; submits that when the accused had grown the crops and were in possession of the lands, they were entitled to resist force by force. Therefore the charge of unlawful assembly must go. The right of private defence of property moreover extends to the taking of a man's life under the circumstances mentioned in sec. 104, I. P. C. Therefore even if Kader and Kobil be charged under sec. 326, the Judge should not have told the jury that there was no right of private defence when the thana was only nine miles off. A Judge, again, is to explain the law to the jury. He should not ask them to consider the effect of rulings.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed for the Crown.—Although possession was with the accused yet there is no evidence that the accused were in such imminent danger of person or property as to be justified in taking a man's life. Therefore even if the charge of unlawful assembly fails the conviction under sec. 326 upon Kader and Kobil must in any case stand.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah in reply.—The complainants were more than four in number and their action was robbery in the eye of law and therefore my clients were justified in using violence even to the extent of taking a man's life.

This is an appeal from the conviction and sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Khulna upon seven persons. Agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury he found them guilty under sec. 147, I. P. C, and directed that they be rigorously imprisoned for one year and six months each under that section. The accused Kader Sardar and Kobil were further found guilty by the jury under sec. 326 and they were sentenced to be rigorously imprisoned for three years under that section, the sentences were to run concurrently with those passed under sec. 147.

The jury found incidentally that possession whether rightly or wrongly was with the first accused Meher Sardar and therefore following the direction of the Judge they must have found that Meher Sardar and his party had the right of private defence against the taking of their crops. They were therefore justified in using sufficient force to get rid of these people and prevent their stealing their crops and the learned Judge clearly misdirected the jury when he left it to them to say whether the fact that the police station was only 9 miles off the place of occurrence did not take away their right of private defence; for the right of private defence of property commences when reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences and if persons have begun to cut and carry away your crop it cannot be said that you are bound to go nine miles to fetch the police. The reasonable apprehension of danger to the property having commenced the right of private defence has also commenced. The same consideration applies to the remedies in the Civil Court to which the learned Judge referred. The cutting and the removal could not have been prevented at the moment by the institution of any suit, and the learned Judge practically directed the jury that by taking the law into their own hands they formed themselves into an unlawful assembly and it is on this misdirection that the jury have found them all guilty under sec. 147. We notice that he has cited and commented on a number of rulings of this Court and told the jury that it was for them to say whether any of those rulings are exactly on all fours with the circumstances of the present case. This is also a misdirection. No rulings or authorities are ever to be cited to the jury nor are they to be asked to differentiate or form any opinion whatever on any authorities. It is for the Judge and the Judge only to tell the jury what the law is, and before he tells them what it is he may consult as many authorities as he pleases and those authorities are no doubt binding upon him. The minds of the jury should never be confused by having a number of conflicting authorities or indeed any authorities laid before them. In this case the Judge not only confused the jury by laying before them a number of conflicting authorities and leaving it to them to choose between them but as we have seen he has misdirected them as to the law of the right of private defence. We have no doubt that the accused persons had the right of private defence in this case and that they did not exceed it except in so far as certain persons fractured the skull of one Barkatulla with lathis. This was a wholly unnecessary proceeding and quite unjustified. But as the assailants were exercising the right of private defence they cannot have formed members of an unlawful assembly.

The convictions and sentences under sec. 147, I. P. C., against all the Appellants must therefore be set aside and they must all be acquitted and released with the exception of Appellants Nos. 3 and 4, Kader Sardar and Kobil alias Kobeluddi, who have been further convicted by the jury under sec. 326 on the finding that it was they who struck Barkatulla the two blows on the head which the medical evidence shows fractured his skull. In so doing they undoubtedly exceeded the right of private defence and the verdict of the jury must be upheld. But we think the sentence must be reduced to one of eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment in each case.

We accordingly direct that the accused Kader Sardar and Kobil alias Kobeluddi be sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 326, I. P. C. The other Appellants will be discharged.

Appeal allowed.

N.B.—On the return of the Judges proceeding to Delhi the routine of the 20th November will be resumed.

WE ACCORD OUR MOST HEARTY AND LOYAL WELCOME to their Majesties the King-Emperor and Queen-Empress who landed in Bombay on last Saturday. The visit of His Majesty to the Indian Empire is a unique event both in the history of this country and of England as well. We have great hopes, therefore, that the visit of the King-Emperor will prove of great constitutional importance and of lasting benefit to the Indian people in other ways.

IT IS NEEDLESS FOR US TO GO INTO THE HISTORY of the origin and the gradual development of British power in India on the present occasion. We are quite on sure grounds in saying that the Sovereignty of India vested in the British Crown for good in 1858 by the Parliamentary Statute of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108 and the Royal Proclamation known as the Mutiny Proclamation of that year (see Ilbert, 1st edn., p. 101). Since then the Royal Titles Act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 10) authorised the assumption of the title of Emperor of India by the Sovereign. It is, therefore, not absolutely necessary that the Emperor of India should be crowned in India.

BUT THE ASSUMPTION OF THE TITLE OF EMPEROR of India was celebrated by a Durbar at Delhi by the then Viceroy Lord Lytton. Following this precedent a similar Durbar was held by Lord Curzon after the Coronation of His Late Majesty King Edward VII. These Viceregal Durbars are of little constitutional importance except in so far as they go to establish the suzerainty of the King-Emperor over the Indian Princes and Rulers. As for the relationship as established between the Sovereign and the Indian subjects by the Proclamation of 1858, the Viceroys at those Durbars took no step forward for a progressive fulfilment of the pledges given under this Charter, which has rightly been described as the Magna Charta of India. We may observe in passing that almost every thoughtful Indian subject felt at the time of the last Durbar that Lord Curzon committed a very serious blunder in not referring to this Proclamation on behalf of His Majesty. The mischief of it has however been annulled by the re-affirmation of the Proclamation by his late Majesty at the Jubilee of the Proclamation on 1st November 1908.

HIS LATE MAJESTY ON THIS OCCASION CONFIRMED by Royal Proclamation the title that the Proclamation of 1858 had popularly acquired in this country viz. "The Great Charter," thus dissipating to the winds the views of some enemies of Indian progress that the Proclamation of 1858 was a mere embodiment of a few pious wishes and was of no constitutional importance (see. 13 C. W. N., p. i). His Majesty's Indian subjects have always understood paragraph 9 of the Great Charter of 1858 to confer on them the same status of citizenship as belongs to British subjects in any other part of the Empire. That they were right in their views is also confirmed by his late Majesty's Proclamation of 1st November 1908 (Ibid, p. ii) which referred approvingly to their claim of equal citizenship. It has also been maintained by the intellectual section of His Majesty's subjects in India that the equality of citizenship guaranteed by the Charter of 1858 carries with it the incidental right to representative government and His late Majesty's Proclamation of 1908 not only lends an express recognition to that view but also goes on to convey to us the assurance that "the political satisfaction of such a claim will strengthen and not impair existing authority and power."

WE MUST ADMIT THAT THE EXISTING FORM OF Government in India, which is more or less absolute in its character, is a heritage that has come down to us from the Indian Rulers. It is only in 1858 that the British Crown assumed direct Sovereignty over India and solemnly pledged to bind itself to the Indian subjects by the "same obligations of duty" as to all its other subjects, which in other words meant the defining of their status as one of equal citizenship. The fulfilment of this obligation implied the modification of the autocratic form of Government that existed before. All this could not be done in a day but could only be accomplished, as it is gradually being done, in course of time. But what the people of India feel with regard to the matter is that the constitutional pledges of this great Charter should not be allowed to be ignored or their fulfilment regarded by those who have been charged with the Government of this country.

THE PROCLAMATION OF 1858 ALSO, AS A MATTER of fact, embodies in it the Royal Oath for India. In paragraph 3 it calls upon all subjects within the Indian "territories to bear true allegiance" to the Crown and its "heirs and successors." In paragraph 9, the Crown reciprocates by binding itself to the Indian subjects "by the same obligations of duty which bind us to all our other subjects," and the oath portion of it comes in where it declares that the obligations "by the blessing of the Almighty God, we shall faithfully and conscientiously fill." The binding obligations of the oath and the duty clause of the Great Charter makes the King-Emperor as much a constitutional monarch of India as His Majesty is a constitutional King of Great Britain, Ireland and the Dominions beyond the Seas. We have, therefore, good reasons to be proud of the position that India occupies in the constitutional framework of the British Empire. His Majesty the King-Emperor's genuine sympathy for his Indian subjects is well known and the desire of doing lasting good to them is indeed very strong in the Royal mind. We have every reason to hope therefore that His Majesty's Proclamation of the 12th of December next will ever be memorable in the history of India and will mark a new era in the constitutional progress of the country.

ALTHOUGH THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA exercises all the executive functions of the Crown yet his presence in India is in no way likely to affect the position and powers of the Governor-General in Council or of the Viceroy. As a matter of fact all the responsible duties of the Governor-General in Council are performed with the previous sanction of the Secretary of State. There is no statutory obligation on the Secretary of State to consult his Council on any question relating to India before coming to a decision. He is no doubt responsible to the Cabinet and through the Cabinet to the Parliament. So he can while in India give his assent to any measure proposed by the Government of India provided he is confident that the measure would meet with the approval of the Cabinet.

THE EXERCISE OF THE FUNCTIONS AND AUTHORITY of the Governor-General in Council would thus be more facilitated than otherwise by the presence of the Secretary of State in India. It must not also be supposed that the presence of the Secretary of State will overshadow in any way the dignity and position of the office of the Viceroy. The Secretary of State is only a representative of the executive functions of the Crown, but the Viceroy can alone in his person represent the State and ceremonial functions of the Crown in India. But the presence of the King-Emperor would obviously affect the Viceroy's position as such. Hence the order of His Majesty in Council that the powers and position of the Governor-General or, more properly speaking, of the Viceroy will remain as before during the presence of the King-Emperor in India.

THE ORDER IN COUNCIL MUST THEREFORE BE taken to refer more to the ceremonial State functions than to the constitutional power of the Governor-General. For the most important powers and duties of the Governor-General are of statutory authority and do not seem to be any wise affected by the presence of the Sovereign in the country. Even such powers as are vested in the Government as the representative of the Crown and independently of any statute is vested not in the Governor-General alone but in the Governor-General and Council. So that powers like that of granting pardon or of making treaties and arrangements with Asiatic States, if they are at all affected by the presence of His Majesty in India, are not touched by the Order in Council in question which only refers to the powers, &c., of the Governor-General. So that the only important respect in which the position of the Governor-General during His Majesty's stay here might have been affected would seem to be as regards the powers exercised by him as representing the Sovereign as the Fountain of Honour and his position as Viceroy in connection with State ceremonials. These however do not exhaust all contingencies that may possibly require the benefit of this order, inasmuch as the Governor-General has generally all such powers, prerogatives, privileges and immunities appertaining to the Crown as are consistent with the law in force in India, and but for such order complication might possibly arise with respect to any one of such residuary prerogatives, should occasion arise for its exercise. The Order in Council however altogether excludes such possibility besides maintaining the dignity and position of the Viceroy unaffected by the presence of the Sovereign in person.

THE DEATH OF MR. JUSTICE GRANTHAM REMOVES from the English Bench a Judge who unlike his colleagues used to give expression to strong political views from the Bench. It was not long ago that Mr. Asquith, from his place in the House of Commons, strongly deprecated his conduct in this respect. The deceased Judge was of an old type of a Tory gentleman and was on the whole a very fair judge on questions unconnected with politics. He had a distinguished career at the Inns of Court and achieved some record victories at Parliamentary elections before he was elevated to the Bench in 1886. But for his impulsive nature his judicial career would have been a greater success.

WE PUBLISH BELOW A VERY INTERESTING ACCOUNT of the legal aspects of Coronation in Hindu India. Coronation is a convenient term to use by reason of its present day associations, though the wearing of the Crown did not play any important part in the abhiseka anointing of a Hindu Sovereign, where religious ceremonies, the ascent to the throne and the oath formed the important elements. The account given in the Mahabharata of the Coronation oath and its earlier history points to a remarkable element of likeness between Indian customs of such distant date and the English custom which prevails to this day.

CORONATION OATHS OF HINDU SOVEREIGNS.

[By MR. KASHI-PRASAD JAYASWAL, B.A. (OXON), BAR-AT-LAW.]

The coronation of Hindu Sovereigns was a sacrament, yet it came more under the realm of the lawyer than that of the ritualist. There is an interesting story in the Hindu epic the Mahabharata to illustrate this view. On the occasion of Yudhishtira's assuming imperial dignity at Indraprastha (Delhi) most of the princes in the assembly of princes and people (1) were greatly dissatisfied on a point of precedence. The Pandavas had decided to honor Krishna as the first guest. Krishna was the most remarkable figure of the time, but his was not a crowned head. He belonged to the Vrishnis, occupying the territory now called Kathiawar, who had a republican constitution. The great rulers of India treated him with contempt (2). Shishupala, King of the Chedis of the South, gave vent to the feeling of the dissatisfied party. In reproaching the Emperor for the great error in the sacred ceremony, he is made to say :

"Sons of Pandu, you are ignorant ! you do not know what law is ! The Gangeya (Bhishma) (3) has also little knowledge and therefore he has transgressed the Smritis." [Shabha Parva, xxxvii, 3].

Thus, it would appear, a correct apprehension of the procedure of the coronation ceremony was supposed to fall within the province of law. And there were reasons for this supposition.

(1) "Despatch soon messengers to invite all * * Invite all the Brahmanas of the kingdom, all the owners of land, all the Vaisyas and all the respectable Shudras." Shabha Parva, xxiii, 41, 42.

(2) The story only reflects one of the numerous struggles which went on in India between tribal republics and newly founded monarchies of the sixth century B. C. The Buddhist Jatakas furnish several recorded instances.

(3) Bhishma, the eldest of the Kurus, acted as Director of Ceremonies.

The office of the monarch, his duties and obligations, had always been a subject of Hindu Law. His position is precisely described in the Smritis, and, he is consequently brought under the law. This is quite in keeping with the general attitude of the Hindu mind towards the majesty of law. Law, to the Hindu lawyer, was eternal. Even Gods, in his eyes, were subject to Law; the King a fortiori could not be exempt from it (4). Hence constitutional laws were laid down in a special chapter in the Smritis called the Rajadharma (the Law of the King). The office of the King being defined by law, coronation was naturally viewed as a matter within the knowledge of the lawyer.

There was another legal aspect of the Hindu coronation. In performing this sacrament the King-elect had to utter certain promises in the form of oaths. Oaths, though originally a sacerdotal institution, came early within the domain of Hindu jurisprudence.

A complete detail of the coronation ceremony is to be found neither in any of the ritualistic works nor in any of the legal treatises. The sacerdotal Shrauta Sutras concern themselves purely with particulars of the Vedic texts to be repeated and other functions of a ritualistic nature; the legal Smritis pre-suppose the knowledge of the ceremony, they only casually mention the abhisheka (the anointing). But "Coronation" consisted of more than the repeating of the mantras and the sprinkling of waters. It was coupled with a number of other functions which had a popular customary origin. Among these was the taking of the Coronation Oath. Specimens of these oaths are preserved in the great encyclopaedia of Hindu civilization, the Mahabharata, and there is reason to believe that the sacred vows were more or less stereotyped.

(a) "Do you swear from your heart, by word of mouth and in fact, 'I will take care of and tend the country, regarding it as the Deity and this ever and always.'

(b) " 'I will act unhesitatingly according to the law as prevails here and in accordance with the policy of the Ethics of Government. I will never act arbitrarily.' " (5).

These two were the fundamental solemn promises made by one who would the next moment become King by the answer given to him in the traditional phrase 'Let it be so' (एवमस्तु). That these were the stereotyped forms may be inferred from the fact that the portion embodying them is declared to be of the 'Shruti authority of the highest order' (श्रुतिरेवा परा lix, 110), amongst men.'

(4) Cf. 'Law is the King of Kings, far more powerful and rigid than they; nothing can be mightier than law.' (Vedic Text translated by Sir William Jones—Vayavahara Darpana).

To these oaths were added others to suit circumstances, as is evidenced by one appended to them in the Mahabharata, (Verse, 108), which stands out on account of its incongruous style and subject-matter.

The Coronation oaths seem to have had a popular origin. Prior to the rise of large monarchies, and more so, that of the Empire (300 B. C.), the normal constitution of the states in India was republican which had grown out of the tribal assembly-system of the Vedas. These republics have been found in the vernacular literature of the 6th century B. C. by Pali Scholars, and that their strength was actually measured by Alexander is recorded by Greek writers. Some of them survived the Empire or perhaps reasserted themselves and came down up to the 4th century A. D. It appears that there obtained a system of oath-taking amongst these little republics. On the model of the Government of the republics certain corporate institutions were constituted in the country. The Buddhist brotherhood was copied by the Buddha from the Lichchavi constitution. Trade guilds (shreni, sangha) were called little sovereignties, merchant companies were similar bodies. The Buddhist sangha took a vow, the guilds and merchant companies had their vows (समयाश्रयत्वाः, 15 C. W. N. ccxci). These corporate bodies being descendants of republics, the feature of oath may be presumed in their parents; and the Coronation oaths may have been substantially the same as those administered to the head of a republic (6). Indeed they bear distinct traces of a higher ideal of social life than that generally seen under Hindu monarchs. The doctrine which regarded the country (भौम) as God was surely different from that which treated the inhabitants of the country as mere children (पुत्राः).

'How originated the word Raja, O Bharat, as it is generally used. Having hands and arms and neck like others, subject like others to the same kinds of pains and pleasures.....in fact, similar to others regarding all the attributes of men, why does one man, viz., the King, govern the rest of the world containing many brave and intelligent persons, (Shanti, lix, 5-8)?

This was the question put by Yudhisthira which elicited from Bhishma this history of Coronation Oaths. "There must be some mighty reason for all this because it is seen that the whole world bows down to one man as if to a god." The 'mighty reason' was explained by Bhishma with a historical account of the institution of Hindu monarchy. 'There was no monarchy and no monarch,' he related, in early times, and that then the people protected one another by law. As they thus lived, they found in time that mutual co-operation was not sufficiently powerful and law itself began to suffer. These men in consultation with Gods decided to elect a Monarch. The Gods gave them Virajas who however refused to be king. His three successors followed as 'Lords,' the fourth one 'built an empire and became arbitrary.' Evidently they had not taken any oaths, coming, as they were, from Gods to men. The fifth Lord of Divine origin, called Vena, proved to be quite 'unlawful' to the people, and he was removed. Thereupon now the sages elected a man called Prithu, a relation of the head of a frontier-tribe, the Nishadas. He promised faithfulness and the above oaths were administered to him. He was anointed, and as he 'pleased the people' he was called the 'Pleaser' (Raja).

Such is an historical theory devised to explain the Hindu coronation oaths and the institution of Hindu monarchy. Law underlies the whole theory and is dominant in the oaths themselves. The legal position of the Hindu King was that of a constitutional monarch, bound by contractual oaths, made supreme under the ægis of law and held responsible to law in theory and to his council in practice.

STEVENS' ELEMENTS OF MERCANTILE LAW. Fifth Edition. By Herbert Jacobs, B. A., Barrister-at-Law. Butterworth & Co., London and Calcutta.

The Law of Contract is the foundation on which the whole superstructure of Mercantile Law has been built. The general principles of the law of Contract and of the closely allied subjects of Agency, Partnership, Sale of Goods, Carriage of Goods, Shipping, Insurance, Suretyship, Guarantee, are very clearly and concisely explained in this handbook. Further, the outlines of Company Law, the law relating to Cheques, Bills and Negotiable Instruments, Patent, Trade-mark, Copyright, Bankruptcy, Arbitration, are also well presented under the respective headings. The chapter on Stock Exchange Transactions as also those on Arbitration, Patent, Trade-mark and Copyright are new additions and they thoroughly maintain the character of the work aiming at accuracy of statement within a small compass. Although this small volume is intended for students undergoing training as chartered accountants and intending to appear at accountantship examinations in London, yet every one connected with the mercantile line of business will find it a very useful guide with regard to matters dealt with in this book.

THE INDIAN DECISIONS, (Old Series), Vol. I, Supreme Court Reports, Bengal. T. A. Venkasawmy Row, Madras. Law Printing House, Mount Road. 1911.

Mr. Venkasawmy Row, the nephew of the late Mr. Sanjiva Row, has been ably following up his uncle's schemes of legal publication and the present is not the least remarkable of the lines along which those schemes have developed under his hands. The present volume contains a verbatim reprint of (1) Morton's Reports, 1774 to 1841, (2) Big-nell's Reports, 1830 to 1831, (3) Montrieux's Reports, 1846 and (4) Fulton's Reports, 1835 to 1844. Although the cases reported in these volumes are still living authorities, they have long ceased to be accessible to the general body of legal practitioners, and Mr. Row has done a real service to the profession in reprinting them and thus making them accessible to all. The excellent get up of the compilation adds to its attractiveness.

THE INDIAN DECISIONS, (New Series). Allahabad. Vol. I, January 1875 to May 1880. Madras. The Law Printing House, Mount Road. 1911.

The present compilation shows rather greater originality than the one just noticed. The decisions of the Allahabad High Court and of the Privy Council on appeal from that Court reported whether in the official or the non-official reports and passed within the dates above specified are reprinted in this volume in the chronological order. As the compiler has not yet obtained the permission of Government to reprint the reports from the Indian Law Reports, he has had to limit himself to reprinting the judgments only from those reports, and he has also had to rewrite the head-notes. There is in this volume as in the one already noticed a full subject-index and tables of cases. There is no question that the book as a whole with its chronological arrangement of decisions will be found useful.

In this booklet the Record-of-Rights procedure followed by Settlement Officers popularly known as "Settlement," is explained in easy Bengalee.

The information regarding the different stages of the work is accurate and in the course of explanation the suggestions conveyed both to landlords and tenants as to what is to be done by them before the commencement of the settlement work, during its progress and up to its completion will be found very useful by them. Every zemindar's amla who is not well-acquainted with the English language and the law will do well to read this little work.

This is a fairly reliable summary of the most salient features of Roman law, intended to assist students in preparing for their examinations. There is a glossary of terms which as well as a reprint of the Calcutta University B. ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Hill. Before JUSTICES DARLING, COLERIDGE AND HAMILTON. 23rd October 1911.

This was an appeal against a conviction for felonious wounding. The case for the prosecution was that a police-constable saw the Appellant in a street behaving in a peculiar manner and when he spoke to the prisoner he was s'abbed. The Appellant's story was that he acted in self-defence after he had been struck by the constable. The trial Judge suggested that the Appellant was insane, and undefended as the Appellant was, he was not allowed to state his defence at all. In the summing up the trial Judge asked the jury to find whether or not he was insane. The jury found him insane and brought in a verdict of guilty. The Appellant contended that he was entitled to have his defence however weak left to the jury. The Court allowed the appeal and quashed the conviction. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Darling observed :—

The Appellant was indicted for felonious wounding, and did not deny the wounding, but said he did it in self-defence. Therefore there was a question whether, if entitled to defend himself at all, he used force more than sufficient to protect himself against the officer's violence. It might be that the defence was a thoroughly bad one, but it ought to have been left to the jury. The only question in fact left was whether or not the Appellant was insane.

The Court had no means of going into the question whether he was insane or not since the decision in Rex v. Machardy (T. E. R. 1911). Speaking for the present members of the Court, they would wish a reconsideration of that case, which was a decision of a majority only. In their opinion the present case did not come within the exception in the proviso to sec. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, for it was a miscarriage of justice if a prisoner's defence, however weak was not left to the jury—Rex v. Dinnick (74 J. P. 32). No doubt the Recorder thought he was acting in the Appellant's interest, and that he had found a better defence for him than he had found for himself.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Sloddart v. Union Trust, "Ltd." Before LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS, BUCKLEY AND KENNEDY. 24th October 1911.

Assignment of a chose in action—Whether the Defendant can rely on fraud of the assignor in an action by the Assignee—Assignee's notice or knowledge of fraud, if material.

This was an application by the Plaintiff for judgment or a new trial. The Plaintiff, an assignee, sued to recover money from the Defendant alleged to be due in respect of a certain contract of sale to the assignor. The defence was that the sale was void for fraudulent misrepresentations. The jury found that there were misrepresentations and that the Defendants suffered damage which was assessed. At the trial the Jury was not asked whether the Plaintiff when he took the assignment had notice of the fraudulent misrepresentations as the result of which the contract was made. The Court below gave judgment against the Plaintiff who appealed. The Court allowed the appeal. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said :—

It was not suggested that counsel on either side asked to have this question of knowledge put to the jury. In dealing with this case he was therefore bound to treat it that this was a contract entered into for good consideration and that there was an absence of any knowledge on the part of the Plaintiff of any fraudulent misrepresentations. He must treat him as an innocent assignee for value, and the question arose whether under those circumstances there was anything either in law or in equity which prevented the Plaintiff from succeeding, taking into consideration the facts found by the jury.

On the authorities he was bound to say there was nothing which would prevent the Plaintiff from recovering and also under sec. 25, sub sec. 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, which provided that "any absolute assignment, by writing under the hand of the assignor of any debt or other legal chose in action . . . shall be . . . effectual in law (subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority over the right of the assignee if this Act had not passed)." Under these circumstances the old difficulties had been done away with as to choses in action not being assignable, and that the assignee could not bring his action in his own name but only in the name of the assignor. The result of that sub section was that a Plaintiff would not have been restrained in equity from enforcing the debt of which he was assignee if he was an assignee for value without notice of the fraud. That seemed to be the effect of the authorities. He was bound to confess that he gave effect to them with some reluctance.

He hoped that he might have found in Young v. Kitchen (L. R., 3 Ex. D., 127) and in the judgment of Lord Hobhouse in The Government of Newfoundland v. Newfoundland Railway Company (13 A. C., 199) sufficient to enable him to say that the assignee here when he brought his action so far stood in the shoes of the assignor, that the Defendants could rely as defence on the fraud of the assignor. Unfortunately he could not say that here, and it was right that he should give the reason. The limitations seemed to him to be those which were stated by Baron Cleasby in Young v. Kitchen at p. 130 thus:—"The Judicature Act, 1873, sec. 25, sub-sec. 6 (1), says that the assignment of a debt or other legal chose in action shall be subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority over the right of the assignee if this Act had not passed, that is, subject to all equities which would be enforced in a Court of Equity." It would not be true to say that in a Court of Equity a Defendant could not in any case set up a defence based on fraud inducing the contract. He thought that he could not in any case set up a defence based on fraud including the contract. He thought that he could set up the defence that the particular contract ought to have been set aside and cancelled on the ground of fraud, but whether he could have done so or not in the present case was immaterial because he had not in fact done so, as he had so acted with reference to the subject-matter of the contract that he could not put it back in statu quo.

The only question here was whether the Defendants were in such a position that they could not rely on the fraud. In his opinion they could not. The matter had been discussed at length in the Court below and there was a finding of the jury to the effect that it was Price who was guilty of the misrepresentations. He did not think it was entirely consistent with justice that an assignee of a chose in action, even though innocent, should be able to bring this action without any regard to the fraud of the assignor. Such a proposition was not true as regards chattels; unfortunately it was true of choses in action. But as regards these it was not invariably true. The Newfoundland case laid down that unliquidated damages might now be set off against an assignee if flowing out of and inseparably connected with the dealings and transactions which also gave rise to the subject of the assignment.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.	} BHAGWATI PRASHAD SINGH, Appellant, Petitioner, v. BIJAI BHADUR SARAN PRASHAD SAHAI and 2 others, Respondents.
LORD ROBSON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMER ALI. 1911, 31st, October.

Special leave—Admissibility and proof of documents, not substantial question of law.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned. The Petitioner, as Plaintiff, instituted the present suit against the Respondents, as Defendants, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur. The plaint alleged inter alia that one Suraj Bali Singh, a Hindu, died childless on the 6th day of July 1874, leaving him surviving as his heir his widow Gajraj Kunwar, the third Respondent, who took a Hindu widow's estate in the property left by the deceased; that on the 2nd day of August 1907, Gajraj Kunwar executed a deed, whereby she purported to make a gift of the properties left by her late husband to the 1st and 2nd Respondents, who were the sons of one Mussamat Bansraj Kunwari, deceased; that the said deed of gift recited that the said Bansraj Kunwari was the daughter of the 3rd Respondent and her late husband and the 1st and 2nd Respondents were consequently their grandsons. The Petitioner alleged that the said Bansraj Kunwari was in fact the daughter of one Bir Bhadar Singh, a brother of the Petitioner; that the Petitioner was the next reversionary heir of the said Suraj Bali Singh, and that Gajraj Kunwar had no power to alienate by a deed of gift the property left by her late husband, but she executed the said deed, dated the 2nd day of August 1907, with a view to defeat the Petitioner's reversionary right. He prayed for a declaration that the 1st and 2nd Respondents were not the grandsons; Suraj Bali Singh and that the said deed of gift dated the 2nd day of August void.

Gajraj Koer filed her written statement denying that the Petitioner was the next reversionary heir of her late husband Suraj Bali Singh, and alleging that the said Bansraj Kunwari was her late husband's daughter, and that the 1st and 2nd Respondents were their grandsons. She also pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation and that she was the absolute owner of certain properties comprised in the deed of gift.

On the 28th day of January 1908, the 1st and 2nd Respondents filed a joint written statement wherein they raised the same pleas as those raised by the 3rd Respondent and on the same date all the Respondents through their Counsel admitted that if the said Bansraj Kunwari were not the daughter of the said Suraj Bali Singh, the Petitioner would be his next reversionary heir.

On the pleadings the Subordinate Judge framed the following issues :—

- (1) Is the Plaintiff's claim barred by limitation?
- (2) Was Mussammat Bansraj Kunwari the daughter of Suraj Bali Singh?
- (3) Does the property mentioned in para. 5 of the written statement form part of Suraj Bali's estate?

At the trial the Petitioner objected that certain documents produced by the Respondents were not admissible in evidence on various grounds, but his objections were overruled and the said documents were so admitted.

That after recording the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment on the 6th day of November 1908 and passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs on the 24th day of November 1908. On the 1st and 3rd issues he held that the suit was not barred by limitation and that the property mentioned in para. 5 of the written statement formed part of the estate of the late Suraj Bali Singh. With regard to the 2nd issue he decided that the burden of the proof lay on the Petitioner, who must prove that Bansraj Kunwari was not the daughter of Suraj Bali Singh and that the Petitioner failed to discharge the onus that lay upon him. With regard to the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the Petitioner he was of opinion that the latter did not bear directly on the question as to the parentage of the said Bansraj Kunwari, and that the former was fully rebutted by the documentary evidence adduced by the Respondents.

Against the decree of the Subordinate Judge the Petitioner appealed to the High Court. He contended inter alia that in considering his witnesses' evidence as to the parentage of Bansraj Kunwari, the learned Subordinate Judge misunderstood the scope of sec. 30 and overlooked the provisions of sec. 50 of the Indian Evidence Act, that the copy of the Patwari's report of 1874 was not admissible in evidence and the learned Subordinate Judge erred in relying upon it in support of his conclusions; that the entries in the copies of the khewats of one particular year 1292 Fasli relied upon by the Subordinate Judge were not admissible in evidence, and, even, if they were admissible in evidence, they were of no value as they were not corroborated by the production of khewats for previous years and were contradicted by the copies of the khewats of other years; and that the written statement of Mussammat Gajraj Kunwar, the 3rd Respondent, had not been duly proved, and was not admissible in evidence against the Petitioner.

On the 7th day of April 1910, the said High Court delivered its judgment and passed a decree dismissing the Petitioner's appeal with costs. The learned Judges, who heard the appeal, were of opinion that there was a conflict of testimony in the case and that where such a conflict existed it was satisfactory to have documentary evidence as a guide. They then relied upon the documentary evidence of the Respondents hereinbefore referred to and came to the conclusion that the decision of the lower Court that Bansraj Kunwari was the daughter of the late Suraj Bali Singh was not wrong.

The High Court refused to grant leave to appeal on the ground that there was no question of law involved and their decree was one affirming the decree of the Court below. Hence this petition.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (Mr. Parekh with him) submitted that the appeal raised substantial questions of law as to the admissibility and proof of certain documents.

Their Lordships rejected the petition.

Mr. Edward Dalgado, Solicitor for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CARNDUFF, J.—In this case five persons were placed before me in the dock, all charged with dacoity. Four of them pleaded guilty, while the fifth pleaded not guilty. I recorded the former plea and indicated my acceptance of it by directing that, in accordance with my usual practice, the accused be brought up for sentence at the end of the Sessions. The fifth is now on his trial alone, and the question has been raised whether certain statements made by the others can now be proved and taken into consideration against him under sec. 30 of the Evidence Act. Taking the same view as was taken in Queen-Empress v. Pahuji (1), I am of opinion that this cannot be allowed.

No. 62 OF 1910.

JENKINS, C. J. } AMLOOK CHAND PARAK

Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), Or. 41, r. 20—Application for leave to add one as party Respondent—Court's discretion—Mortgage decree—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 88 and 89—Order for sale, application for—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. II, Arts. 181, 182, 183—"Enforce a judgment," meaning of—Execution.

The fact that the time for preferring an appeal has expired does not preclude the Appellate Court in a fit case from adding a party to the suit whom the Appellant has failed to bring in as Respondent as a party Respondent under Or. 41, r. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code.

An application made on the 3rd July 1909, for an order absolute for sale by a mortgagee who had obtained the preliminary decree on his mortgage in the High Court on the 16th December 1886, was barred by Art. 183 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), or the corresponding article of Act XV of 1877.

The application was one to "enforce a judgment" within that article.

The meaning of the word "enforce" is not limited to realization by execution but may have a wider meaning.

AMLOOK CHAND PARAK v. SARAT CHUNDER MUKERJEE.

This was an appeal from an order made by Mr. Justice Fletcher, dated the 13th day of May 1910, on an application made in Suit No. 477 of 1886, for an order that the Plaintiff be at liberty to add Upendra Lall Bose as a party Defendant and that the Plaintiff be at liberty to proceed to sell, pursuant to the decree made in the suit on the 16th December 1886, an undivided quarter share of the Defendant Sarat Chunder Mukerjee of and in the premises No. 30 formerly No. 49, Clive Street, in the town of Calcutta, and Nos. 2 and 3, Bishoo Babu's Lane, Kidderpore, and the family dwelling-house at Kidderpore, and that all necessary and usual directions should be given.

It appeared that by a mortgage, dated the 25th January 1886, and made between the Defendant of the one part and the Plaintiff of the other part the Defendant mortgaged his $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the properties in question to the Plaintiff. The Defendant alleged that no consideration money was paid by the Plaintiff to him.

On the 10th December 1886, the Plaintiff instituted this suit against the Defendant to enforce the said mortgage. On the 16th of December 1886, the parties consented to a decree in the following terms :—

"It is ordered and decreed with the consent of the Plaintiff by his Counsel and of the Defendant in person that the Defendant do at the end of 6 months from the date hereof that is on the 15th of June 1887, on the middle floor of the Court House opposite the Registrar's room pay to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 25,382-8-0 with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent per annum until payment. And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that upon payment as aforesaid the Plaintiff do reconvey or re-transfer the properties comprised in the mortgage in the plaint in this suit mentioned free from incumbrances done by him or any person claiming by from or under him. But in default of such payment as aforesaid it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the properties comprised in the said mortgage be sold with the approbation of the Registrar. * * * * And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the money to arise from such sale be paid into Court to the end that the same may be duly applied in payment of the said sum of Rs. 25,382-8-0 with interest thereon as aforesaid. And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that if the money to arise from such sale should not be sufficient for the payment in full of the said sum of Rs. 25,382-8-0 with interest thereon as aforesaid the Defendant do pay to the Plaintiff the amount of deficiency together with the Plaintiff's costs of this suit."

The Defendant did not pay the said sum of Rs. 25,382-8-0 to Plaintiff "at the end of 6 months" from the decree.

On the 8th of April 1903, the Defendant purported to sell his share in the premises No. 30, Clive Street, to one Norendra Krishna Bose and on the 1st of December 1903 Norendra transferred his interest to Upendra Lall Bose who in the beginning of January 1908 as attorney for the said Defendant, Sarat Chunder Mukerjee, is alleged to have proposed to the Plaintiff Appellant that he should enter satisfaction of the decree in this suit and offered to pay to the Petitioner Rs. 1,000 which he subsequently raised to Rs. 2,000 and who alleged that he had spent large sums of money on the property.

The only step taken by the Plaintiff to enforce the decree until the present application was an application for execution on a tabular statement dated the 2nd of May 1887. Next came the present application made more than 23 years after the date of the decree.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti, B. C. Mitter and N. Sincar for the Appellant.

This is an application under the Transfer of Property Act for an order for sale. It has been decided over and over again by this Court on appeals from Courts subordinate to it that there is no period of limitation within which an application for an order of sale may be made under that Act. The Court is therefore bound to make an order for the sale of the property.

Messrs. S. P. Sinha and P. R. Das for the Defendant-Respondent.

In the present case his Lordship has to decide what is the effect of the consent decree in the suit. That portion of the decree which orders the Defendant to pay to the Plaintiff Rs. 25,382-8-0 on the 15th June 1887, is the real substantial portion of the decree, the rest of the decree being purely conditional on the Defendant failing to obey the order to pay the amount on the 15th of June 1887. The application is merely to enforce the decree and that being so it is barred by Art. 180 of the Limitation Act, 1877, as not being made within 12 years from the 15th June 1887. The argument of the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant that the present application could be made at any time after the decree even if it be more than 100 years is an alarming one.

Mr. S. R. Das for the Respondent, U. L. Bose, supported.

JENKINS, C. J.—The Appellant is a mortgagee, and the mortgage under which he claims is dated the 25th of January 1886. On the 16th of December 1886, he obtained a decree on his mortgage by consent. On the 3rd of July 1909, he made the application out of which the present appeal arises : and by the application, he asks that he may be at liberty to add Upendra Lal Bose as a party Defendant to the suit, and that thereafter he may be at liberty to proceed to sell, pursuant to the decree made in this suit on the 16th of December 1886, an undivided quarter share of the Defendant Sarat Chunder Mukerjee of and in premises No. 30 formerly No. 49, Clive Street, Calcutta, and Nos. 2 and 3, Bishoo Babu's Lane, Kidderpore, and the family dwelling-house at Kidderpore, and that for the purpose of such sale all necessary directions may be given to the Registrar. Mr. U. L. Bose's position is that on the 8th of April 1903 he became a purchaser of the Clive Street property, and in his affidavit he states that "he is a bona fide purchaser for full market value, that he had no notice of the Plaintiff's claim, that he had laid out large sums of money with borrowed funds in the improvement of the property and that other persons besides himself have got an interest therein and that it would be extremely hard if after the lapse of 23 years the Plaintiff is allowed to assert a claim which he had given up years ago."

The case was heard by Mr. Justice Fletcher, the parties before him being the applicant, the mortgagee, on the one side, and on the other, the mortgagor and Mr. U. L. Bose who resisted the application with success. From the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher the present appeal has been preferred ; and, I will, at the outset deal with a point taken on behalf of Mr. U. L. Bose. His name does not appear as a Respondent, and, therefore, it is maintained, as against him the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher cannot be touched. But it appears that the Appellant, according to his lights, made every effort he could to make Mr. U. L. Bose a party Respondent. He may not have proceeded in the most approved manner, still undoubtedly he was anxious to have Mr. U. L. Bose as a Respondent, and naturally anxious. Having failed in his endeavour because, he says, he could not persuade the Court officers to grant the necessary process, he has applied under r. 20, Or. XLI that Mr. U. L. Bose may be added as a Respondent here. It has been suggested that the Court has not power to do that inasmuch as the time for appealing has elapsed. Counsel has even been able to cite a case which he thought bore out that view, but I think the case has been misunderstood and it merely amounts to this that it is a question for the Court in its discretion to determine in each case whether or not it will make an order contemplated by r. 20, Or. XLI. I have indicated the circumstances under which it became necessary to make the application in this case, and I think that the Appellant certainly is entitled to ask that Mr. U. L. Bose should be made a party, and that therefore the order to that extent should go. Therefore, I propose to deal with this appeal on the footing of Mr. U. L. Bose being a Respondent before us.

It will be seen that the two critical facts are, first, that the decree on the mortgage was made so far back as the 16th of December 1886, and that the present application is made in 1909. Those dates have naturally prompted the Respondents to raise a plea of limitation and to suggest that there must be some mode of limiting litigation. The question that we have to decide is whether the applicant is right when he contends that he is, so far as this application goes, free from the law of limitation.

Now the decree first provides for a personal decree against the mortgagor, and this is followed by a provision for the return of documents and so forth on payment in accordance with this personal decree. Then there is a provision that in default of payment there is to be a sale of the property, and it is further ordered that if the money realised by such sale shall not be sufficient for the payment in full of the sum of Rs. 25,382-8 as. with interest, that being the amount for which the personal decree was passed, then the Defendant should pay to the Plaintiff the amount of the deficiency together with the Plaintiff's costs. The decree is in a sense peculiar, and that has led to a contention before us on the part of the Respondents that it does not come within the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act in general or of secs. 88 and 89 in particular. No doubt, if those sections be read literally, that is so. On the other side it is contended that the decree comes within the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, and it is on that ground principally that it is contended in the light of the cases that the present application is not barred.

For the purpose of my judgment I will assume that this decree is within the Transfer of Property Act, and I prefer to put it on that broad ground rather than to seek minute distinctions, though I can quite see that the decree does encourage the distinctions which have been suggested.

Now if it be a decree, as the Appellant before us contends, under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, and was such a decree in 1886 when it was passed, then it is clear, that no further decree was to follow on it. All that was to follow on it was, under sec. 89, an order for sale :— It is no use our looking into expressions in the cases, for the purpose of determining this ; the Act itself is clear and plain. It provides in sec. 88 that there shall be a decree for sale. Sec. 89 provides that if such payment, that is the payment contemplated by the decree, 'is not made, the Plaintiff or the Defendant, as the case may be, may apply to the Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass an order that such property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned, in sec. 88; and thereupon the Defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished.' Now, what is, speaking generally, the nature of that order for sale? In Horendra Lal Roy Choudhuri v. Maharani Dasi (1), there was a decree for sale, substantially as there was here, and the Respondents in that case, the mortgagors, being in default, the Appellant petitioned for an absolute order for sale. Lord Davey in disposing of the case says in the course of his judgment, "under the circumstances it is not surprising that the Respondents were not able to find the money on the stipulated day; and thereupon the present Appellant presented a petition for realization of his entire decree by sale of the mortgaged properties." He goes on to say, in describing what had been done by the learned Subordinate Judge who acceded to the application: "The learned Subordinate Judge in the first instance gave the Appellant execution for the whole amount of his decree." So that, at any rate, it appeared to the Privy Council and to Lord Davey in that case that an application for an order for sale was a petition for realization by the mortgagee of his decree.

Now this case falls within the provisions either of Art. 183 or Art. 181 of the Limitation Act, it does not fall within the provisions of Art. 182. Art. 183 deals with an application "to enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction or an order of His Majesty in Council," and provides a period of twelve years from when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of realising the right." If this case comes within Art. 183, it is free from the embarrassment of the conflicting decisions which have arisen under Art. 182. If and so far as this can be regarded in the words of Lord Davey, as 'an application for realization of a decree,' it is not unfair to say that it is an application to enforce a judgment. The word "enforce" has a fairly obvious meaning. We have been referred to one or two dictionaries as to what its meaning is. But I take it to be clear, even apart from the dictionaries, that the word "enforce" is not limited to realization by execution but may have a wider meaning. So even if it can be said that the present proceeding is not strictly in execution but is a form of judicial relief under a decree, it still would legitimately come within the expression "to enforce a decree,"—And it seems to be manifest that it is either a proceeding in execution or a proceeding for judicial relief under a decree; and I see no reason why Art. 183 should not apply. If that be so, then it follows that this application is out of time.

I do not propose to make more than a passing reference to the argument that has been addressed to us in relation to Art. 181.

There have been brought to our notice numerous cases on Art. 181 and Art. 182—Arts. 178 and 179 of the former Limitation Act which they reproduce—with a view to showing that these articles did not apply in the past to an application under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that by parity of reasoning they could not govern applications under the substituted provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this connection it has been a matter of argument and of considerable contest before us as to whether this case is to be decided by reference to the old Code and the old Limitation Act, or by reference to the new Code and the new Limitation Act, both of which came into operation on the 1st of January 1909. If the view I have expressed as to the application of Art. 183 be right, no question of this kind arises inasmuch as the Plaintiff in 1886 obtained a decree which required no supplemental decree, but required only an order. Had the decree been an incomplete one and required a further decree, then having regard to the way in which Acts in reference to procedure are to be construed, possibly the provisions of the present Code would have been applicable. But, be that as it may, I fail to follow the line of reasoning which would suggest that Art. 181 would still not have presented a bar to the application for this further decree. One object in view when the present Code was passed was to end, as far as possible, the conflict of decisions which embarrassed the Courts, and among those conflicting decisions were those which dealt with two points:—First of all, whether an application for an order under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was an application in execution or not, and, secondly, whether, if it was not an application in execution, Art. 181 constituted a bar on the ground that the application was one not contemplated by Code of Civil Procedure. Those were not the only points that were sought to be set at rest, but those were prominent among them. And, the Act indicates that the scheme whereby these two sets of conflicts were to be composed was, in the first instance, by making it clear that an application which was to follow on a preliminary decree for sale, was not to be an application in execution, inasmuch as the next step under Or. XXXIV, r. 5 is not for an order for sale but for a decree for sale. And the mode in which the other conflict was composed was by taking the provisions as to mortgage suits out of the Transfer of Property Act and bringing them within the Civil Procedure Code, so that it would no longer be possible to contend that Art. 181 applied on the ground that these applications are not under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. I am aware that there is an opinion expressed in Madhub Moni Das v. Pamela Lambert (2), which it may be difficult to reconcile with this, but it is not a decision, for as I read the judgment in that case, the learned Judges expressly refrained from deciding the point which was a necessary preliminary to its becoming a point calling for actual decision. It could only be a point for decision if and when it was decided that the new Code applied. But so far from there being any such decision, the learned Judges not only expressly refrained from deciding this, but the decision actually passed by them in effect negatived the view that the case fell under the new Code, for in conformity with the terms of the application out of which the appeal arose they decided that there should be an order absolute and not a final decree for foreclosure. I have referred to this matter, as I desire for future consideration, when the point actually arises for decision, whether or not Art. 181 presents a bar to an application for a final decree, whether it be under r. 5 or r. 3 of Or.

ANLOOK CHAND PARAK v. SARAT CHUNDER MUKERJEE.

XXXIV when that application is made beyond the time contemplated in Art. 181, for as yet there has been no actual decision on this point in the view I take of the case reported in Midhub Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (2).

The result is that for the reason which I have indicated in the earlier part of my judgment, I think Mr. Justice Fletcher rightly decided that the present application was barred, and that therefore this appeal should be dismissed with costs: Mr. U. L. Bose is entitled to a separate set of costs.

(2) 15 C. W. N. 387 (1910).

All the essential incidents of a lease of immovable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent must be embodied in one or more documents duly registered.

Provisions about the amount of rent, the time of payment thereof and the consequences of default relate to essential incidents of the lease.

SUBRAMANIAN CHETTIAR v. ARUNACHALAM CHETTIAR (2 relied on).

The case of RAJA DURGA PROSAD SINGH v. RAJENDRA NARAIN BAGCHI (1) has therefore been correctly decided in so far as it determines that a document embodying an agreement for reduction of rent under a previously existing lease registered as required by sec. 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act, requires registration.

A document which varies the amount of rent to be paid under an existing lease registered as required by sec. 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act, as also the incidents of such payments, viz., the date of payment and consequences of default of payment, requires registration.

This was an appeal preferred on the 31st of January 1908, against the decree of Babu B. B. Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Purlia, dated the 24th of September 1907.

The appeal came on for hearing before Woodroffe and Caspersz, JJ., who on 11th of August 1910 referred certain points arising therein for decision by a Full Bench.

LALIT MOHAN GHOSH v. THE GOPALI CHUCK COAL CO., LD.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows :—

WOODROFFE AND CASPERSZ, JJ.—This suit is brought by the Plaintiffs as heirs of the late Nanda Lal Ghose to recover royalties in respect of a coal mining lease held by the Defendant. The original lease, dated 25th July 1896, was by Nanda Lal Ghose in favour of certain persons forming the Kurkend Coal Syndicate. This syndicate assigned its rights under the lease to the New Kurkend Coal Syndicate Ltd., a joint stock company, on the 13th November 1899. The latter company attorned to the lessor and paid royalties to him in terms of the original lease. Subsequently and on the 22nd December 1903 the rates of royalty were by a registered deed of that date altered. The royalty payable as so altered was 6 annas per ton for steam coal, soft coke, hard coke and steam rubble, three annas per ton for B. B. rubble and dust free instead of the sliding scale provided for in the original lease. This document confirmed the original lease in other respects including the terms under which royalty was payable quarterly and if not paid, interest was chargeable on all sums unpaid at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. The New Kurkend Coal Syndicate worked under this arrangement but does not appear to have done well, the royalty for 1905 became overdue, and the liquidation of the company became necessary. Then at the close of 1905, and the commencement of 1906 negotiations (which were subsequently embodied in letters) took place with a view to the payment of the overdue royalty and the reduction of the rates of future royalties on coal. On the 18th January 1906, Messrs. McLeod and Co., Managing Agents of the colliery, wrote to the proprietors as follows :—

" New Kurkend Coal Syndicate
The 18th January 1906.

Babu Nanda Lal Ghose.

Dear Sir,

as a permanent arrangement to hold good from the 1st January 1906. As regards the royalty due for the year 1905, we have to thank you for agreeing to allow this to remain over until it is convenient to make payment which we will make as soon as possible. As explained to you, it may be necessary to put the existing company into liquidation and to make over the property to another company, but in terms of our lease from you, you will duly be advised of any arrangement that may be contemplated. We beg to thank you for patiently listening to the declaration of the company's position and our views as (torn) for your considerate treatment as evidenced by the reduction in royalty you have made and the accommodation as regards back royalty due.

We are, Dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

This was followed by a letter from the proprietor, dated the 20th January 1906, on which is based the main argument in the appeal.

LALIT MOHAN GHOSH v. THE GOPALI CHUCK COAL Co., LD.

Dear Sir,

I am in receipt of your letter, dated the 18th instant. Since my interview with your Mr. N. A. McLeod I have consulted my lawyers about my position regarding the royalty due for the year 1905 in case it may be necessary for you to put the existing company into liquidation and make over the property to another company, and I have been advised that it would not be at all safe for me to allow this sum to remain over until it is convenient for you to make payments.

So I beg to inform you that I shall be glad to help you in your present difficult situation by reducing and altering the royalty to be charged on coal raised at this property to the under-mentioned rates.

Steam coal	...	4½ annas.
Rubble	...	4½ "
Dust	...	2 "

Hard and soft coke, as in the deed, as a permanent arrangement not to hold good from the 1st January 1906 as you say but from the date on which you will pay me the royalty due for the year 1905, and on condition of your paying me the royalty hereafter monthly.

If you, however, fail to make payment of the royalty consecutively for 3 months, this letter will be cancelled, and I shall be entitled to the rates of royalty as stipulated in our deed.

Yours faithfully,
Nanda Lal Ghose."

The effect of this letter is as follows : The royalty for steam coal is reduced from 6 annas to 4½ annas. The rates for soft coke and hard coke remain the same. The rate for steam rubble is reduced from 6 to 4½ annas. The rate for B. B. rubble is enhanced from 3 to 4½ annas per ton and on dust which was originally free is imposed a new charge of 2 annas per ton. The above changes affect the rate only and the result of such changes in fact has been according to past working to reduce the total royalty payable. The second alteration which this agreement effects is as to date of payment of royalty which is to be paid monthly and not quarterly as heretofore.

As a necessary effect of such alteration a third is effected. The original term as to the payment of interest on royalty in arrear after the quarterly date disappears, as the royalty is to be paid monthly. In lieu, however, of this a new and fourth term is embodied, viz., that if there is a failure to pay royalty for three consecutive months the agreement is cancelled and royalty becomes payable according to the terms of the existing lease. It has been contended for the Respondent that the condition that the agreement has to come into effect not from the 1st January 1906, but from the date on which the royalty for the year 1905 was paid was waived. In our opinion this is not so. That royalty was fixed by a letter of the 27th January 1906 at Rs. 10,000. Of this Rs. 8,000 was paid on the 31st January. The fact that Nanda Lal Ghose gave on the 3rd February time to pay up the balance does not affect the matter. This waived his demand for immediate payment only. But the agreement for reduced royalty, if enforceable, would not come into operation until the payment was made which was on the 28th June 1906. On this point we agree with the lower Court. On the 20th February 1906 Nanda Lal Ghose died. In March and April his heirs (it is said in ignorance of the facts) received royalty at the reduced rates mentioned in the letter of their father of the 20th January 1906 to which we refer as the agreement. They were then informed that negotiations were taking place for the transfer of the lease to the Defendant company. On the 20th June 1906 the New Kurkend Coal Syndicate, which was then in voluntary liquidation, and its liquidator assigned the colliery lease to the Defendant company. That deed which was registered recites that the original lease of the 25th July 1896 had been ultimately modified by the document of the 22nd December 1903 and the covenant by the Defendant company in favour of the assignor was to pay the rent or royalty mentioned in such last-mentioned document. By inadvertence, however, the company's solicitors overlooked the fact that the document of the 22nd December 1903 had itself been modified by the agreement of the 20th January 1906. In June the company offered payment of royalty for the months of March, April and May at the reduced rate provided for in the agreement and this offer was repeated as regards subsequently accruing royalties. The Plaintiff refused, however, to accept them and claimed payment according to the terms of the document of the 22nd December 1903. On the 24th August 1906 the New Kurkend Coal Syndicate and its liquidator attempted to repair the omission to which we have referred and by a registered document, dated 24th August 1906, reciting the agreement of the 20th January 1906 and the fact that it had been inadvertently omitted from the assignment of the 20th June 1906, assigned to the Defendants the full benefit of such agreement (which was set out in the schedule) to the intent and purpose that the assignment effected by the principal indenture might, with effect from the date when the agreement came into operation, be read and construed as if in and by the same indenture the properties, rights and premises comprised in the lease of the 25th July 1896 had been expressly assigned with the full benefit of and subject to as well the said agreement as the agreement of the 22nd December 1903 with full power and authority for the company to specifically enforce the said agreement.

It has been suggested that this transfer was ineffectual because at its date the company had been wound up and the liquidator discharged. No such issue was raised in the lower Court. No order of discharge has been produced. Under sec. 187 of the Companies Act the syndicate would not have been dissolved until three months after the sending in of the accounts. Mr. McLeod seems in his evidence to have wrongly assumed that he was discharged when he sent in his account. We hold that this contention fails.

As we have said the Plaintiffs refused the Defendants' money. We are satisfied that under the circumstances there was a sufficient tender by the Defendants.

The Plaintiffs worked for some time apparently under the idea that the Defendant company would sue for specific performance. But as the company were apparently advised that this was not necessary and did not sue, the Plaintiffs instituted this suit claiming the recovery of Rs. 7,863-4-15 as royalty on the basis of the rates contained in the document of the 22nd December 1903. The Defendant company set up the subsequent agreement of the 20th January 1906, and claiming that reduced rates are chargeable under that agreement, have paid into Court the sum of Rs. 6,657-6-6. The lower Court has accepted this view of the case subject to the modification that it has considered, and as we think rightly, that if reduced rates are payable they are so payable only from the date when the back royalty for 1905 was paid.

The Appellant has raised a number of objections which we deal with before treating of the substantial question which we desire to refer to the Full Bench. In our opinion, if other consideration than that involved in the substitution of agreements is necessary, the letter of the 20th January 1906 on its face shows consideration as for instance in the substitution of monthly for the previous quarterly payments. The agreement was not, as contended, a mere personal agreement with the New Kurkend Syndicate of which it was not intended that the Defendant company should have the advantage. The correspondence shows that the royalty was reduced with the object of inducing some other substantial company to work the colliery. Nor in our opinion does any question arise as to the parties not being ad idem over the matter. There was no question as to the meaning of the terms of the letter of the 20th January 1906. The difference which has arisen between the parties, and which as stated has been decided against the Defendants, was due to the latter's contention that the term as to the date when the reduced royalties were to come into operation had been subsequently modified by later correspondence. We hold with the lower Court that that is a mistaken view of the effect of such correspondence. It is then said that the assignment of the 22nd June 1906 was inoperative because it was an assignment of a mere right to sue. But such a right must be distinguished from a right which (as here) arises out of an interest. What was here assigned was the benefit of an agreement in connection with and arising out of the lease held by the Defendant company. It has been nextly said that the agreement is inoperative because there has been default in payment of royalty for three consecutive months. If the Plaintiffs have rightly refused to take the money offered by the Defendants the question does not arise, but if they have wrongfully refused (and they have been offered the money) they cannot set up such wrongful refusal to bring the clause of forfeiture into operation.

The substantial question in this case is whether the agreement of the 20th January 1906 required registration or not. If it did, the Defendant company took nothing by the subsequent assignment of its benefit to them.

If that agreement constitutes a lease as the Appellants contend, then under sec. 17, cl. (d) of the Registration Act, it should have been registered. And on this ground documents containing the essential elements of a lease such as the area of the land, the nature of the interest conveyed, the duration of the tenancy and the rental have been held to be leases and as such requiring registration [see Biraj Mohinee Dasee v. Kedar Nath Kar-mokar (3), Raja Durga Prosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (1)]. In our opinion, however, the document is not a lease but an agreement which modifies the conditions of a lease in three particulars, viz., the amount of rent or royalty, the period at which rent or royalty is payable, and the result of default of payment of rent or royalty. The variations thus touch the question of rent or royalty only. But then it is further contended for the Appellants that assuming that it is not a lease and that it can be treated merely as an agreement for reduction and payment of rent it is in effect an agreement purporting to limit and create an interest in immoveable property under cl. (b) of sec. 17 and requires registration. For the Respondent company it is contended, firstly, that cl. (b) of sec. 17 does not affect leases or (apparently) matters touching leases which are governed by cl. (d) and, secondly, that if that be not so the letter does not affect an interest in immoveable property and fall within cl. (b). Rent or royakty though derived from land are, it is argued, not interest in immoveable property within the meaning of cl. (b). Reliance is placed on Satyesh Chunder Sircar v. Dhunpat Singh (4), where it was held that an agreement which did not operate as a lease but was merely a variation by way of abatement of rent did not require registration. In Obai Goundan v. Ramalinga Ayyar (5), it was held following the last case that a document given by the owners of land to his tenant varying the terms of tenancy with reference to the amount of rent to be paid, is not an instrument relating to an interest in immoveable property and does not require registration. The principle of these cases was approved and applied in Hara Prosad Das v. Ram Narain Chowdhury (6). The Bombay case cited [Shrinivasbhat v. Waman Narsingh (7)] seems to have been to a similar effect though the decision was otherwise justifiable on the ground that the agreement related to a matter of a value less than Rs. 100.

Learned Counsel for the Appellant has contended that the decisions of this Court referred to are obiter dicta. It may be a question whether if that be so the same observation does not apply to the case on which he has relied [Raja Durga Prosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (1)]. In that case it was held that the document in fact constituted a lease which we hold not to be the case here and it was further held that there was no consideration. The learned judges however went on to say that even if that document in question could be treated merely as an agreement for reduction of the rent it was in effect an agreement purporting to limit an interest in immoveable property and thus required registration. The learned Judges base their decision on certain English cases dealing with the Statute of Frauds and on inferences derived from the Privy Council decision in Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2). They distinguished the cases of Satyesh Chunder Sircar v. Dhunpat Singh (4) and Beni Madhub Gorani v. Lal Moti Dassi (8) holding as regards the first-mentioned case that were it not that the agreement had been admitted in the plaint, the Court would have held that the document required registration. But this does not appear to us to be so, for what the Court stated was that had there been no admission the question of registration would "arise" and be "important." It, however, then held that it was not necessary that the agreement in question should be registered.

In this conflict of authority we refer to the Full Bench the determination of the following questions:—

been correctly decided in so far as it determines that a document though not amounting to a lease requires registration if it be an agreement for reduction of rent under, a previously existing registered lease.

2. Does a document which is not a lease but which varies the amount of rent to be paid under an existing registered lease as also the incidents of such payments, viz., the date of payment and consequences of default of payment, require registration.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babus Jogesh Chandra Dey, Mohendra Nath Roy, Narendra Nath Sett and Srish Chunder Dey) for the Appellants.

The amount of rent is an essential term in the lease. The argument on the other side is, that you can vary one such term one day, another the next day, and so on, and yet the lease would remain the same. Sanderson v. Graves (9), per Lord Bramwell, p. 247, Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2). The object of sec. 107, Transfer of Property Act, is to have the whole of the terms of a lease put in a registered document. You cannot gather the terms of a lease partly from a registered and partly from an unregistered instrument. The question in the last cited case would not have arisen if payment of rent was but a collateral personal agreement. See arguments before the Judicial Committee in Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2) reported in 12 Mad. L. R. 479-483. The question is, did the agreement in question affect the incidents of the tenure in any way?

I would show there is not. The earliest case is Bajinath v. Putsohee (10).

If the document did not require registration as being a lease, registration would be necessary because it affects an interest or benefit arising out of land. Refers to sec. 3 of the Registration Act (definition of immoveable property), also to sec. 17 (b). Rent not due (or future rent) is an interest in immoveable property. Venkaji v. Shidramapa (11), Mangala v. Subbia (12) ; Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (6th Ed.), pp. 219-220, 336 ; Donellan v. Read (13).

Again "Rent" is a first charge on the tenure (assuming for the present that royalty is rent). A document affecting the amount of the charge should be registered.

Registration was necessary because, moreover, it was a sale of an interest in land. Gawan v. Christie (14), Munro v. Didcoll (15). Rights conferred are not incorporeal rights.

The decisions of this Court which seem to support a contrary view are distinguishable.

Satyesh Chunder Sircar v. Dhunpat Singh (4). The agreement to accept reduced rent was admitted by the lessors in the pleadings (see sec. 65, Evidence Act). None of the cases referred to by Ghose, J., were cases on the Transfer of Property Act. Obai Goundan v. Ramalinga Ayyar (5), whilst purporting to follow the case in Satyesh Chunder Sircar v. Dhunpat Singh (4), goes beyond it, and cannot be treated as authority. Hara Prosad Das v. Ram Narain Chowhury (6) was a case of a dowl. There was no question of abatement and it follows the Full Bench case, Luchmissur v. Dakko (16). Sirat Chandra v. Nritya Gopal (17), Beni Madhub Gorani v. Lal Moti Dussi (8) is a peculiar case. The document was a collusive one the object of which was to induce other tenants to pay a higher rent. The case has been distinguished in Raja Durga Prosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (1) and Lakhatulla v. Bishwambhar (18).

Your Lordships are not in any way embarrassed by a long line of cases in which a different rule from that I am contending for has been laid down. This is not one of those cases where title to real property will be disturbed if a long series of decisions was overruled.

Mr. Bagram (with him Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee) for the Respondent.

The contract in question does not affect title to immoveable property. The Registration Act does not touch contracts. The essential part of an interest which is transferred by a lease is the right to enjoy. "Rights or benefits to arise out of land" means proprietary rights or interests which one person has over the lands of another. Rights like rent which the owner himself has in his own land, cannot be so described.

"Leases" are separately dealt with in cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act. Cl. (b) has nothing to do with leases. A lease may be for service, e.g., as engineer.

Can such service be described as fit to arise out of the land?"

The Privy Council in Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2) merely decided whether the term, as to payment of the money was included in the lease, or in other words whether the two documents were part and parcel of one. The arguments of Counsel and observations of Judges in course of argument should not be referred to as authorities. I do not contend that all the component elements in the lease should not be incorporated in the registered instrument. Many of the terms must however be of a purely contractual character, and there is, I submit, nothing to prevent the parties from varying the obligations arising thereunder. The right to enjoyment and the duration of the lease make up the interest which is transferred by the lease and a lease in its essence is a transfer of an interest in property. Moreover by cl. (d) of sec. 17, the registrability of a lease is made to turn on the duration. If rent had been treated as an interest affecting immoveable property then a lease for two months at a rent of Rs. 10,000 would require registration contrary to the provisions of the Registration and the Transfer of Property Acts. What must be registered under cl. (b) of sec. 17 of the former Act is some interest in the property which is measurable in value of Rs. 100, not money or rent. Decisions which lay down that rent is a benefit to arise out of land is based on a misapprehension. A rent charge created in favour of one person in another person's land may be such an interest not rent which the owner derives from his own land, Southwell v. Scotter (19). There is nothing to prevent the duration part and the money part in a transaction to give a lease from being put in two different documents. •The former may require registration, the latter will not. Premium is mentioned in the definition of lease. But the Privy Council expressed a doubt whether the premium must be specified in the document.

A letter varying rent is admissible under sec. 92, Evidence Act.

Rent is not regarded as property in the Transfer of Property Act. Burjorji v. Muncharji (20).

Suppose the rent is commuted. Must this also be registered as an essential part of a lease?

The two Acts deal with transfer of rights in rem not with rights in personam. Freedom of contract as to these latter is left untouched.

There is a substantial current of authority in my favour and Dr. Ghose's endeavour to distinguish them has been unsuccessful.

The decision in Raja Durga Prosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (1) is based on the argument before the Privy Council in the case of Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2), an argument based on English precedents and Statute of Frauds cases, not on a proper interpretation of the Indian Statutes.

Nor can mining leases be treated as being sales and not leases. All the incidents are those of a lease with this difference that under a mining lease you can consume the property. Moreover parties have throughout treated it as a lease.

Rent is not a charge under the Transfer of Property Act.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE draws attention to para. 8 of the lease.]

It is charged on our property not on the demised property.

Dr. Ghose in reply. The policy of the Legislature is to introduce a public system of registration of transfer of interests in land. The whole policy would be defeated if the rent reserved could be left out. From the document it further appears that a registered document was in the contemplation of the parties.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THEIR LORDSHIPS was as follows :—

The questions referred for decision to the Full Bench have been framed as follows :—

(1) Has the case of Raja Durga Prosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (1) been correctly decided in so far as it determines that a document, though not amounting to a lease, requires registration if it be an agreement for reduction of rent under a previously existing registered lease?

(2) Does a document which is not a lease but which varies the amount of rent to be paid under an existing registered lease as also the incidents of such payments, namely, the date of payment and consequences of default of payment require registration?

It is necessary to premise at the outset that the original lease in the case before the Court, dated the 25th July 1896, and varied by a registered deed, dated the 22nd December 1903, was compulsorily registrable under sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act and sec. 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act. The answers to the questions propounded consequently depend upon the construction of these two sections. Sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that a lease of immoveable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument. The plain intent of the section is that all the essential incidents of a lease of this description must be embodied in one or more documents duly registered. It is not necessary to attempt, on the present occasion, an exhaustive enumeration of all the essential incidents of such a lease: it is sufficient to hold that provisions about the amount of rent, the time of payment thereof, and the consequences of default, relate to essential incidents of the lease. This view receives support from the terms of sec. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, and is involved in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Subramaniam Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2). The answer of the Full Bench to the questions referred are, therefore, as follows:—

(1) The case of Raja Durga Prosad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (1) has been, for the reasons given here, correctly decided, in so far as it determines that a document embodying an agreement for reduction of rent under a previously existing lease registered as required by sec. 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act, requires registration.

(2) A document, which varies the amount of rent to be paid under an existing lease registered as required by sec. 17 (a) of the Indian Registration Act, as also the incidents of such payments, namely, the date of payment and consequences of default of payment requires registration.

The case will be returned to the Division Bench, with this expression of opinion. The costs of the hearing before the Full Bench will abide the result of the appeal—hearing fee, five gold mohurs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 12, 13, 167—Suit for rent—Unregistered transferee of permanent tenure who has paid landlord's fee, if necessary party—Sale in execution of rent-decree obtained against recorded tenant only—Decree, if money decree only—Benamdars if necessary parties—Notice to annul incumbrances signed by Deputy Collector—Validity.

The transfer of a permanent tenure is completed upon payment of the landlord's fee prescribed by sec. 12 irrespective of its acceptance by the landlord and thereupon the landlord is bound to look to the transferee for payment of rent accruing due since that date.

It is not necessary in such a case that the transferor himself should have had his name registered in the landlord's books.

Where the landlord sues for such arrears of rent without making the transferee a Defendant, the decree obtained in the suit only operates as a decree for money.

The mere circumstance that a notice under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, is signed by a Deputy Collector does not invalidate such notice, if he acted on behalf of the Collector.

The landlord is not bound to join in his suit for rent, as party Defendants, persons who are merely benamdars.

This was an appeal preferred against a decree of Babu Asutosh Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 19th of July 1907, confirming that of Babu Pramatha Krishna Singha, Munsif of Barisal, dated the 4th of May 1904.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The substantial question of law raised in this appeal is one of some novelty and turns upon the true construction of sec. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The circumstances under which the question has been raised are of some complexity, but may be briefly narrated in so far as it is necessary to state them for our present purpose. The Plaintiff is owner of a zemindari which bears No. 2694 on the revenue roll of the Collector of Backergunge. Under the zemindari is a transferable taluk known as Kamdeb Guha, which was in existence so far back as 1810, but has not been traced back to the time of the Permanent Settlement. On the 20th June 1898, the Plaintiff purchased the taluk at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained by him in a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent. The sale was confirmed on the 4th April 1899, and possession delivered to the purchaser on the 29th July following. The Plaintiff was, however, unable to obtain actual possession of all the lands, as the Defendants alleged that they were in occupation on the basis of under-tenures created by the talukdars. The result was that on the 29th August 1900 the Plaintiff had notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act served through the Collector, and on the 15th April 1903 commenced the present litigation for ejectment of the Defendants on the ground that their subordinate interest, if any, had been extinguished and they were consequently trespassers in possession. The Defendants resisted the claim on various grounds amongst which it is sufficient to mention two, namely, first, that the decree obtained by the Plaintiff in the suit for recovery of rent instituted by him in 1895 had not the characteristics of a rent-decree, and consequently, the sale in execution thereof had not affected the under-tenures; and, secondly, that the notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were not in accordance with law, and were, therefore, ineffectual to extinguish the interest of the under-tenure-holders. The Court of first instance made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff; upon appeal the District Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court, the decree of the District Judge was reversed, and the case remanded for reconsideration. After remand, the Subordinate Judge has affirmed the decision of the original Court. The Defendants have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that as some of the owners of the taluk were not made parties to the suit of 1895 for recovery of arrears of rent, the decree cannot operate as a decree for rent, under the Bengal Tenancy Act; and¹ secondly, that as the notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were not in conformity with the provisions of the law, the under-tenures have not been annulled.

GIRIS CHANDRA GUHA v. KHAGENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE.

In so far as the first of these questions is concerned, the case for the Defendants was that certain persons of the name of Chandra Kanto Basu, Raj Kumar Guha the Chakrabarties and the Kanjiballis, who had an interest in the taluk, ought to have been but were not joined as parties to the rent suit. The learned Subordinate Judge has found, with regard to the first two of these persons, that they were benam-dars and had no beneficial interest in the taluk. The landlord, therefore, was not bound to join them as parties Defendants, and the true character of the decree obtained by him cannot be affected by their absence from the suit. Joy Govind v. Moumtha Nath (1). In so far as the Chakrabarties and the Kanjiballis are concerned, he has not found whether in 1895 they had any subsisting interest in the taluk, although there are isolated expressions in his judgment which may indicate that he was not impressed with the soundness of the position attributed to them. He has held, however, that their absence from the suit for rent could not affect the character of the decree as they were said to have been representatives in interest of persons who had never registered themselves in the books of the landlord. The view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in substance is that if a person interested in a transferable tenure was not registered in the books of the landlord, and if subsequently to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, his interest was sold in execution at the instance of a creditor, the purchaser could not claim to be joined as a party Defendant to a suit for rent, even though he might have paid the fees prescribed by sec. 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act read with the provisions of sec. 13. To put the matter in another way, the view of the Subordinate Judge is that as a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against the registered tenant would be operative against an unregistered co-sharer of the tenant, the purchaser of the interest of the unregistered co-sharer occupies no higher position. In the case before us, at a sale held in execution of a decree for rent against the recorded tenants, the taluk was purchased in 1864 by one Gagan Chandra Das who transferred the same to four persons on the 13th September 1864. Of these four persons, two, Gokul Guha and Ramsagar Guha, were registered in the books of the landlord; the other two, Chandrakala and Krishnapriya, were not so registered. There were successive devolutions of the property by reason of sales in execution of decrees for rent obtained by the landlord against the recorded tenants or their representatives, but the details are not necessary for our present purpose. It is sufficient to state that the representatives of the unrecorded tenants executed a mortgage in 1871; the mortgagee enforced the security and brought the property to sale when it was purchased by one Chandra Kumar Basu on the 22nd June 1887. There was another mortgage in 1882 for the satisfaction whereof a share of the taluk was sold in execution in 1888, when the Chakrabarties and the Kanjiballis became interested in the property. It will be observed that the sales we have mentioned took place after the provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act had come into operation, and consequently, the fee prescribed by sec. 13 was paid. The question, therefore, arises whether if it is established that the Chakrabarties and the Kanjiballis were persons beneficially interested in the taluk, the omission to make them parties in the suit of 1895 affected the nature of the decree.

Sec. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that upon a sale in execution of a permanent tenure under a decree other than a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the Court shall require the purchaser to pay into Court the landlord's fee prescribed by sec. 12. It cannot be disputed that the transfer in favour of the purchaser is completed upon payment of the fee irrespective of its acceptance by the landlord. Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Kristo Lal Singh (2), Chintamani Dutt v. Rash Behari Mondul (3) and Mohesh v. Saroda (4). It follows consequently, that as soon as the title of the purchaser has been perfected, the landlord is bound to look to the transferee for payment of rent which has accrued due since that date. No doubt, as contended by the learned Vakil for the Respondent, sec. 13 does not expressly lay down what consequences are to follow from a compliance with its provisions, nor does it define the results which follow from failure to comply with them. But the object of the framers of the section is, in our opinion, perfectly plain. Under the law as it stood before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the landlord was entitled to look to his recorded tenant for all rent until the name of the transferee had been recorded in his books. Sham Chand v. Brojonath (5), Fatit v.

Hari (6). Consequently, difficulties of the gravest character arose when the landlord demanded an exorbitant registration fee or when the transferee was called upon to prove that the landlord had notice of the transfer and had refused to recognise his rights. Sec. 13 as framed removes both these difficulties; a prescribed fee has to be paid by the purchaser and the notice is to be served upon the landlord by the Collector, so that if the procedure laid down in sec. 13 is followed, the fact of the sale is duly notified to the landlord. But it has been argued that the operation of sec. 13 ought to be restricted to cases in which the transferor has his name registered in the books of the landlord. We may observe incidentally that the question could arise only where, as here, the interest of the transferor was acquired before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. In our opinion, the language used by the Legislature in sec. 13 cannot rightly be restricted in the manner suggested. Sec. 13 applies to transfers of all permanent tenures, and it is immaterial whether the name of the tenant at the time of the sale has or has not been previously recorded in the books of the landlord. In fact, if the narrow construction suggested by the Respondent, were adopted, the policy of the Legislature at the time when the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, might be completely nullified. It is well known that at that time there were many tenures the holders of which had not been able to get their names registered in the books of the landlord, and if the cases of all these tenures were, for all time to come, excluded from the operation of the beneficial provisions of sec. 13, the very object of the framers of the statute would be defeated in a large number of instances. Such unrecorded transferees were, in no sense, trespassers and were entitled to recognition at the hands of the landlord. [Sarkies v. Kali Kumar (7), Nobeen Kishen v. Shib Persad (8), Bhooputee Roy v. Umbica Churn (9); sec. 27, Act X of 1852, sec. 26, Act VIII of 1869, B. C.]. In fact, the unrecorded transferee of a transferable tenure is a tenant, though his name is not on the books of the landlord. Azgar Ali v. Asaboddin Kazi (10). The difficulty, which was created under the old law, of which an illustration may be seen in the case of Khetter Mohan v. Pran Kristo (11), is completely avoided under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and if the landlord, in spite of notice that the tenure has passed into the hands of a transferee who has deposited the fee, chooses to bring a suit for rent against the recorded tenant, he does so at his own risk, and has no reasonable ground for complaint if it ultimately turns out that the suit has not been properly constituted and the decree made therein cannot operate as a decree for rent. When a landlord finds that the name of one person is borne on his books as that of the tenant, but the fee has been paid and notice served at the instance of a purchaser of the tenure as the property of a person whose name has not been registered [see sec. 13 and form of notice under that section, Appendix I, Schedule I, Form 4], there is no reason why he should not join the transferee as a party Defendant to a suit for rent, along with the recorded tenant if he thinks necessary, so as to avoid possible future dispute as to the frame of the suit and the effect of the decree. It is worthy of note that if a different interpretation were adopted as to the scope and effect of sec. 13, the operation of the other sections, similar in scope, for example, sec. 15, may be needlessly restricted. To take one illustration: after the death of A, the registered tenant, his heir B might die before he could take action under sec. 15; upon the analogy of the argument of the Respondents, the heir of B could not avail himself of the provisions of that section. We are therefore not prepared, for the reasons explained, to restrict the operation of sec. 13 in the manner suggested. If we were to accede to the contention of the Respondent, we should have to read in sec. 13 "a permanent tenure held by a registered tenant" in place of the words "a permanent tenure." We must consequently hold that the reason given by the Subordinate Judge in support of his conclusion cannot be maintained. If the Chakrabarties and the Kanjiballis were interested in the tenure at the date of the institution of the rent suit of 1895, inasmuch as they were not joined as parties Defendants, the decree could operate only as a decree for money. Ananda Kumar v. Hari Dass (12). It is necessary, therefore, to remand the case so that the Subordinate Judge may determine whether the persons left out of the suit were really interested in the tenure; and as the true position of the parties was not appreciated in the Court below, the Subordinate Judge will be at liberty to give suitable directions for the reception of additional evidence upon this point.

In so far as the second question is concerned, there is, in our opinion, no substance in it. The learned Vakil for the Appellants has contended that the notice served under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not in accordance with the provisions of the law, because it does not appear to have been signed by the Collector. The notice is not on the record, and it is difficult, in the absence of all materials, to hold that it did not conform to the provisions of sec. 167. We may point out, however, that the mere circumstance that the notice was signed by a Deputy Collector would not invalidate it, if he acted on behalf of the Collector, Mahomed Kazem v. Nafsar Chandra (13) Akhoy Kumar v. Bejoy Chand (14). To bring the present case within the principle of the decisions in Ramdhon v. Surja Narain (15), Mohabut Singh v. Umatul Fatima (16), the Court would have to hold that the Deputy Collector acted in excess of the powers conferred upon him. No such suggestion appears to have been specifically made in the Court below, and the Appellants are not entitled to a remand for the elucidation of this point. The second ground, therefore, cannot be supported.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and the case remanded to him in order that he may determine the question, whether the Chakrabarties and the Kanjiballis had, at the date of the institution of the rent suit of 1895, any subsisting interest in the tenure. If they had, the present suit must be dismissed; if they had no subsisting interest at that time, the suit must be decreed. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

It is conceded that this decision will govern all the other appeals, one of which (2785 of 1907) arises out of a similar suit for ejectment, and, three others (Nos. 2384, 2786, 2787 of 1907), out of suits for rent by the landlord, brought on the assumption that the intermediate tenures have been annulled so as to bring him into direct relation with the under-tenants. These appeals will, therefore, be allowed, the decrees of the Subordinate Judge will be set aside, and the cases remanded for determination of the question mentioned. The cost of these appeals will also abide the result.

We may add that in the case of one appeal (2384 of 1907), a question of res judicata was sought to be argued, but upon examination, it transpired that there was no substance in the contention; we need not therefore examine the matter in detail.

Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), sec. 400—Section to be strictly construed—Association for dacoity—Gist of offence—Kind of evidence sufficient to convict—Approver's testimony—Corroboration—Proof that accused members of a criminal tribe, value of—Previous conviction, value of, when no association established—Acquittal, effect of—Verification, evidence of, best evidence of Magistrate.

The offence contemplated in sec. 400 of the Penal Code is one of a very special character and entirely the creature of statute and should therefore be strictly construed.

KADER SUNDAR v. THE EMPEROR.

THE QUEEN v. MOOKTARAM SIRDAR (2) referred to.

Association for the habitual pursuit of dacoity is the gist of the offence punishable under the section.

Although the evidence need not show the same degree of particularity as to the commission of each dacoity as is required to support a substantive charge of that crime, it must be established for the purpose of conviction under the section that the accused belong to a gang whose business is the habitual commission of dacoity. The special conspiracy must be proved.

EMPRESS v. KURE (3), KING EMPEROR v. TIRUMAL REDDI (4), THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. BONIGIRI POTTIGADU (1) referred to.

Corroboration of the testimony of an approver in a trial under sec. 400 must connect the accused with the offence, viz., the association of a gang of persons for the business of habitually committing dacoity.

The general criminality of a tribe or caste cannot be imputed to individual members operating in gangs where the prosecution is under sec. 400, and the fact that members of the tribe generally were alleged to have been implicated in several dacoity within a period of ten years proceeding the trial was not sufficient proof against the persons under trial when it appeared that the tribe contained within it thousands of human beings.

Where association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity had not been made out the mere fact that some of the accused had been previously convicted of dacoity or theft or had been bound down to be of good behaviour under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., was of no consequence.

The fact that some of the persons undergoing trial for an offence under sec. 400 had once been sent up on a charge of dacoity of which they were acquitted could not be relied on to prove that they were habitual dacoits. No adverse inference can be drawn against accused persons after their acquittal.

THE EMPEROR v. NANI GOPAL GUPTA (5), REX v. PLUMMER (6) followed.

BONAI v. THE KING-EMPEROR (7) distinguished.

Where a confession was verified by a Magistrate, the proper course for the prosecution was to examine the Magistrate himself and not the other verification witnesses whose evidence would be inferior to his.

This was an appeal presented on the 19th of April 1911, against a conviction and sentence under sec. 400, I. P. C., passed upon the accused Appellants on the 15th of February 1911, by Babu Raj Krishna Banerjee, Officiating Additional Sessions Judge of Bogra, agreeing with the opinion of all the assessors.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

tually committing dacoity and he has sentenced Appellants Nos. 2 and 27 to transportation for life and the other Appellants to rigorous imprisonment for seven or five years. The trial of the case occupied two months in the Court of Sessions, but the substantial question for determination is a simple one, namely, whether the approver, Bayan Sandar, has been adequately corroborated in respect of each of the Appellants. Six Appellants Nos. 8, 10, 14, 15, 17, 26 may be excluded at the outset, because the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer intimated, during the hearing, that he was unable to support their convictions. There remain 23 Appellants including two (Nos. 2 and 18) who made confessions in the Magistrate's Court.

The case for the Crown is that the Sandars are a semi-criminal tribe, dwelling in boats, wandering and predatory by habit and instinct, that the Appellants belonged to a gang of Sandars operating during the years 1891—1909, in the districts of Bogra, Pubna, Rungpur, Mymensingh and Rajshahye, and that the numerous dacoities that took place were the work of this gang which, however, did not invariably consist of the same persons but committed dacoities in detachments.

Bayan Sandar, the approver, was convicted in the Gadakhali Dacoity case in February 1909. Subsequently, on the 11th April 1909, he made a detailed confession to a Magistrate of the crimes he had been guilty of, as a member of the gang, and this was "verified" by another Magistrate. On this basis, the 29 Appellants were sent up for trial with the result we have mentioned.

The Sessions Judge, after reciting the history of the initiation of the case and stating the general effect of the evidence of Bayan, proceeds to give, in tabular form, a list of the dacoities and thefts in which Bayan implicated himself and the Appellants who are his relations.

The tabular form gives a list of eighteen criminal occurrences, the date of each such occurrence, the names of the persons implicated by the confession of Bayan and by his evidence in Court, and the documents (first informations, etc.) and the witnesses proving the occurrence. But the numerous witnesses mentioning the Appellants merely say that they are Sandars that they live in boats, and that the boats congregate in bahars, that is in flotillas, at various places in the net work of rivers which constitute a peculiar feature of that part of the country. The witnesses identify the Appellants in one sense, but they do not connect them or any of them with the tabulated occurrences. Identification of this kind does not carry the case for the Crown very far in a prosecution under sec. 400, I. P. C. though no doubt such evidence and the other evidence in this case might be valuable if the proceedings had been for bad livelihood or with reference to the Criminal Tribes Act (now, Act III of 1911). The general criminality of a tribe or caste cannot be imputed to individual members operating in gangs where the prosecution is under sec. 400, I. P. C. See The Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu (1). Similarly, the documents specified do not prove that particular persons were named as having been concerned in any occurrence to which they relate. In seven occurrences only, Sandars were suspected as having committed the offence reported. None were convicted. The utmost that can be said is that Sandars were seen within a distance of three miles from the scenes of the occurrences at or about t time in question. We offer these observations in this place because they have an important bearing in the matter of corroboration of the testimony of the approver, and it is as well to state, at once, the difficulty we feel in dealing with the case.

The Sessions Judge, after discussing some discrepancies in the evidence of Bayan, next proceeds to consider each occurrence from the year 1892 to 1908 when the Gadakhali dacoity, in which Bayan was caught red-handed, was perpetrated. The Sessions Judge explains the nature of the corroboration, which, in his opinion, was sufficient, but we do not find anywhere that he directed his attention to what is legally adequate corroboration, that is, evidence connecting each of the Appellants with each or some of the occurrences. We may mention that the Magistrate who verified Bayan's confession was not examined as a witness, but the inferior evidence of the verification witnesses was recorded and relied on. Even so, the verification does not touch the Appellants.

The Sessions Judge then mentions certain other dacoities and thefts of which the Fulchari dacoity may be taken as a specimen. A Railway Booking Clerk (P. W. 65) says that some persons took 7 or 8 tickets, possibly, bearing consecutive numbers, at the Bogra station for Fulchari on the day in question. We are unable to hold that this fact proves that twelve of the Appellants were the dacoits—in fact, railway tickets must be issued in a consecutive series, and the clerk cannot know who the passengers are—whether dacoits or others. Moreover, Bayan said, in his confession, that only eight persons committed the Fulchari dacoity. The finding of the Sessions Judge is in general terms, that,—“There appears reason to think Sandars committed those dacoities and thefts.” He also says that a large number of Sandars were seen staying with their boats at the different centres of their association; that thefts and dacoities increased in the quarter where they used to stay; that the Sandars were kept under Police surveillance, and their boats used to be regularly searched. It is a fact of importance that no stolen property was ever recovered in any of these searches.

The Sessions Judge concludes his judgment with a consideration of the case of each of the Appellants, by his analysis is not conclusive and does not go beyond his previous estimate of the evidence.

In dealing with the judgment of the Sessions Judge we have inevitably expressed the views we are constrained to adopt on the essential aspects of the case. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer and the learned Vakils for the Appellants have afforded us the greatest assistance in examining the bulky record in which, it is admitted, much irrelevant matter is contained. The arguments of the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer may now be considered in their order, and we proceed to do so.

It is argued for the Crown (1) that evidence proving an offence under sec. 400, I. P. C., need not be of the same quality as in the case of ordinary offences; (2) that in seven dacoities, during the shorter period 1899—1909, Sandars were referred to as being concerned in the same, and that their presence near the scenes of the occurrences affords sufficient corroboration of the story of Bayan; (3) that four of the Appellants (Nos. 7, 9, 21, 25) were sent up but acquitted in the Fulchari dacoity (P. W. 65, 75, 204); (4) that the previous convictions of some of the Ap-

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE HIGH COURT REMAINS CLOSED FROM THE date of the state entry of the King-Emperor George V into the historic city of Delhi on the 7th of December to the day of the holding of the Imperial Durbar there on the 12th of December, both days inclusive. All India is obviously awaiting pronouncements that are likely to be made in the King-Emperor's Proclamation and the Governor-General's announcements that are to follow. There is a wide-spread belief that His Majesty, who has been to India before, has not come out to this ancient land either on any pleasure trip or for any enhancement of personal or political prestige for which there is little to be wished for by the Crowned Head of the British Empire. His Majesty, therefore, must have come on a mission of peace and good-will to the people which would strengthen the bonds of union between the Sovereign and the subjects and spread contentment in the land.

WE OBSERVED IN OUR LAST ISSUE THAT THE visit of King George V to India is not without its constitutional significance to the United Kingdom as well. The King during any prolonged absence from Great Britain could not by exercise of any prerogative right appoint a Regent who can only be appointed by an Act of Parliament. So His Majesty has appointed "Councillors of the State," which may be said to mark an innovation in former practice. In Norman times during the absence of the King his functions were exercised by the Chief Justiciar by virtue of his being the Chief officer of the Crown. Henry III was the first to appoint during his absence "Guardians of the Realm." Subsequent Kings followed this practice and ordinarily appointed the custodis regni without any sanction from Parliament. The Lords Justices, as these guardians of the realm were called, exercised all the prerogatives of the Crown.

BUT OWING TO THE REVOLUTION EFFECTED IN THE modes of communication by modern science it is no longer necessary for the Sovereign to constitute any guardians and justices of the kingdom and invest them with royal authority as was done by George I during his absence in Hanover in 1719. His Majesty, therefore, in constituting the "Councillors of the State" has not considered it necessary to invest them with authority for the exercise of any Royal prerogative. This Council is composed of Prince Arthur of Connaught, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Loreburn (the Lord Chancellor) and Lord Morley. They are prohibited from dissolving Parliament or granting peerages or dignities except under instructions from the King and they are to refrain from acting in any matter or thing on which it is signified by the King, or appears to them, that His Majesty's special approval should be previously obtained. The Royal warrant further provides "any instructions transmitted by Us by telegram or such other means of communication, will have the same effect as if they were given by Us in writing under our sign manual."

SIR JOHN MACDONNELL, THE DISTINGUISHED JUDICIAL statistician and jurist, opened his Quain Lectures on Comparative Legal Procedure by giving an account, amongst other celebrated trials, of the trial of Socrates in Greece. This gives us a fair idea of the method and procedure in Greece in conducting such important trials. Trial in Greece as in ancient Rome took more the form of impeachment before a public assembly than a regular trial held before a modern law Court or the ancient law Courts in India. In Greece every citizen above 30 years of age was considered eligible as a judge. We are told that a Court of 500 such judges were formed for trying the great philosopher for impiety. A magistrate presided over the assembly but he had little power, as all questions relating to the case was determined by votes. The charge or indictment was also singularly vague. Socrates was arraigned for trial before this assembly and the indictment against him was as follows:—"Socrates does evil. He does not believe in the Gods that the State believes in, but introduces other new Deities. He corrupts youth. Punishment death."

THE JUDGES, NO DOUBT, TOOK AN OATH "TO vote according to the laws, to listen with attention to the accuser and the accused and to do what was just." But in an assembly of this kind religious and political prejudices, personal grudge and ill-will materially influenced the members who sat in judgment. Oratory, which used to be cultivated as an art in Greece, always played a great part in influencing judgment at these trials. The prosecutors and their partisans in their impassioned appeals did not hesitate to rouse the religious passion and prejudices of the assembly and this to no small extent swayed the judges in pronouncing their verdict. By the merciless exposure of the absurdity of the old beliefs and superstitions in the market places, Socrates had made many enemies amongst the influential men of the time. Like all the great and true martyrs of this world he stood out for "truth," stubbornly refused in his Apologia to stoop for mercy and did not even hesitate to criticise his accusers. It must have been due to his luminous exposition of truth, his honesty, courage and force of character that 219 members voted in his favour. But as has often happened in world's history, this great apostle of truth fell a victim to the prejudices of his contemporaries. But on his death eternal "truth" again triumphed and made him immortal amongst men for all times to come.

WE HAVE SUGGESTED IN THESE COLUMNS BEFORE the more frequent adoption in India of the Probation system of treatment of criminals. We have great pleasure, therefore, in publishing below the following note on the subject from the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation. As a preliminary to that, as we have observed before, some officers from the Education Department should be trained from abroad for carrying on the work of supervision during the period of Probation.

The system of probation is closely allied to that of the indeterminate sentence, but it is differentiated in this, that it dispenses with imprisonment altogether. The system has spread with remarkable rapidity. Started in Massachusetts in 1875, it has extended itself to thirty-seven States of America, to Great Britain, Germany, Hungary, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Here it is chiefly identified with Children's Courts and juvenile offenders, but in America it has a wider scope and is fast becoming an essential adjunct of the judicial system for all offences not demanding commitment to prison. "It saves the offender," as Sir Ruggles Brise points out, "from the stigma of imprisonment his family from loss of wages, and the public from the expense of the prisoner's support. Certainly nothing could be more unsatisfactory than the present method of short sentences. The futility of it is forced on us in every day's newspaper, and if scientific confirmation were needed it may be found in Prof. Liszt's three famous paradoxes: (1) The probability that any one will commit a crime is greater if he has already been punished than if he had never been punished; (2) the probability that any one will commit a crime increases with the number of punishments he has already undergone; and (3) the probability that a man who is released from punishment will commit a new crime in the shortest possible time increases with the length of sentence he has undergone. But if the probation system is to be effective—this is Sir Ruggles Brise's opinion—it must be worked by officers duly appointed by the State to keep offenders under strict and organised supervision, otherwise the system may only mean immunity for the malefactor.

"INDETERMINATE SENTENCES" WHICH ARE COMMON in America and are also being introduced in England for dealing with old offenders or hardened criminals, seem to suggest that under this new system old offenders are to be shut up in prison for ever. But in reality it means something very different. The following note therefore in the same journal reviewing the report of Sir Ruggles Brise, the British representative at the Eighth International Penitentiary Congress held at Washington, will be found instructive.

At present the treatment most in favour in the States is the "indeterminate sentence." This is strictly a misnomer—there is no "indeterminate sentence" in the sense of a sentence without a limit—a maximum or a minimum. The indeterminate sentence is used as a catch phrase to indicate opposition to the "retributory" element in the punishment of crime. It is for making, not the guilt of the criminal, but his potentiality for reformation, the test for the duration of punishment, and it entrusts the power of judging of this potentiality of reformation not to the judiciary but to boards of parole. This is more than a mere change of method: it marks a new attitude towards crime. In America public opinion is much more tolerant than in the older communities. It is less impressed with the guilt of the offender than the necessity of reclaiming him to honest citizenship. On this attitude towards crime Sir Ruggles Brise offers a very just criticism. "You cannot," he says, "expel human nature with a fork, and moral indignation against the perpetrator of an anti-social act is in human nature, and will demand certainty and fixity of punishment when there is full responsibility for the deed. It is a misnomer and a fallacy to refer to this healthy moral sentiment as a desire for vengeance or as the old classical idea of expiation. In its modern shape it merely expresses the determination of the human consciousness that the system of rights should be maintained and that the person who violates it should be punished." Nevertheless the "indeterminate sentence"—the individualisation of punishment, as it may be called—carried the day at the Congress.

THE GERMAN COURTS OF LAW.

We have noticed in these columns before the German system of legal education (15 C. W. N. cclxxxiv). To appreciate the system of administration of justice in Germany it is necessary to remember that every law student who wishes either to practise as an advocate or enter the judicial service of the State must after passing his legal examinations undergo practical training in all degrees of legal work from that of a ministerial officer of the Court to that of assessors and judges. Naturally even the ordinary judges of very limited jurisdiction in Germany are all very well-trained lawyers. Considering the qualifications and training of the Judges their salaries seem to us to be ridiculously low. But the German view of English legal and judicial remuneration is that it is based on an artificial standard which is disproportionately high compared to other professions.

The number of law Courts and Judges is so very large in Germany that justice may truly be said to have been brought to the door of every German subject. Notwithstanding the low scale of judicial salary, the German exchequer spends quite an enormous sum in the administration of justice. In appreciating the full significance of the figures we furnish below it is necessary to remember that the population of Prussia is nearly equal to that of England and is less than one-half of that of the Presidency of Bengal.

The Department of Administration of Justice is in charge of a Minister of Justice who gets £2,500 annually and an official residence. The IMPERIAL COURT of Leipzig which is the highest Court of Appeal, is not merely the final Court of Appeal for Prussia but for the whole of the German Empire and comprise 100 judges including the President. The Imperial Court may be said to correspond to the House of Lords and Privy Council. But the judicial strength of the Court is something inconceivable under the English judicial system. This Imperial Court is divided into Senates—seven members constituting a quorum. Each of the Senates is bound by the previous decision of another Senate. But should any Senate desire to depart from the principle of law laid down by another Senate, the question has to be submitted for determination by all the other Senates civil and criminal respectively.

In the other Courts, German judges are not bound to follow precedents but only the Code. But as a matter of prudence and convenience they follow the decisions of higher Courts. But it sometimes so happens that a contrary view taken by a judge of the lowest Court is finally upheld by the combined Senates of the Imperial Court.

In Prussia proper there are 14 PROVINCIAL COURTS OF APPEAL, i.e., one for each province and there are 513 Judges for these appeal Courts with a president, who receives a salary of £750. The Courts of Appeal are divided into Senates corresponding to something like Benches here. Five Judges constitute a quorum for these Senates.

Next comes the DISTRICT COURTS of which there are 96 in number with as many Presidents, each of whom gets an annual salary of £520. Connected with these Courts are 373 Directors who preside over divisions consisting of three Judges of whom there are 1,304. These District Courts have unlimited civil jurisdiction. District Courts sitting as Courts of first instance in criminal cases sit in divisions of five members. These Courts sitting as Courts of Appeal in minor cases sit in divisions of three members. In felony cases or cases of more serious crime three Judges sit with a jury of 12 men, one emergency juror attending all the time.

Below the DISTRICT COURTS there are 1,110 LOCAL COURTS with limited jurisdiction of 15. In these Courts there are 3,432 judges who sit and act singly. These judges of the local Courts also sit with two lay assessors to hear criminal cases of a petty nature. Each of the assessors in these cases have the same vote as a judge. Thus it would appear that even in minor criminal cases people have the privilege of a jury trial with the safeguard that the verdict of the majority is always binding on the judge.

In commercial cases too, the judge is always assisted by two commercial assessors and all three have equal votes. Besides the Ordinary Courts there are 240 Trade Courts and 170 Commercial Courts. These Courts determine dispute between employers and the employed.

THE PROCEDURE FOLLOWED in civil cases is far more thorough than under any other judicial system known to us. The essential facts as also the means by which they are to be proved have to be set out in the pleadings and the advocates on each side have also to file their arguments. These papers are submitted to the judges and one or more members of the Court along with the President record their opinions on the case which however are not final. This only familiarises the judges with the facts as well as its legal aspects. The case is then set down for hearing and it is argued before the judges. After argument the judges hold a consultation, and if the decision depends solely on any question of law the decision is given then and there. But if the case depends on any question of facts not admitted then the judges formulate the thema probandi and orders the evidence which it considers essential to be taken by one or more judges. After the evidence is so taken a further hearing is given and the judges after further consultation record their opinion.

It will be interesting to sum up and compare with the figures given the corresponding figures from the English judicial statistics. In England there are 33 High Court Judges, 5 City and 65 County Court Judges and about 300 to 400 other judicial officers such as Stipendiary Magistrates, Chairmen of Sessions, Masters, Referees, Recorders and Registrars. In Prussia, there are 488 Judges of Appeal, 1773 Judges of First Instance with unlimited and 3,425 Judges of First Instance with limited jurisdiction. Altogether there are in Prussia 5,686 men occupying independent judicial capacity.

Justice being both cheap and near at hand in Germany, it is no wonder that the number of civil causes entered in Prussia in a year is about 4,300,000 as against 1,500,000 in England.

The expenditure in Prussia in 1909 under the head of "Law and Justice" was £7,600,000 and receipts £5,200,000. In India the receipts from "Law and Justice" always exceed the expenditure and so is a source of revenue rather than a burden to the State as it is in all other civilized countries of the world. The expenditure in India is about £2,550,000 and the receipts about £3,000,000, in round figures.

Correspondence.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

SIR,—I have the honor to enclose copies of correspondence on the subject of establishment of Arbitration Tribunals at Alipur, Calcutta, and other, important and advanced centres, for favor of your kind consideration, and such advice and instructions as to make the scheme a success.

2. It is sad to reflect how many families are being ruined by litigation, which, is playing havoc in the country. There are a few who are disposed to resort to arbitration for settlement of their disputes, but they are unable to realise their wishes for want of competent and willing arbitrators. The present scheme aims at,

- (1) rendering every facility to suitors to get their disputes settled by the best judicial talents.
- (2) minimising the costs of litigation,
- (3) disposal of cases without loss of time by a simple procedure,
- (4) affording relief to congestion, which amounts to denial of justice in many cases,
- (5) opening a field for the exercise of talents, now lying dormant and useless.

3. With the view of inspiring confidence, the services of such retired judicial officers are sought as had distinguished themselves by their conspicuous services in the district concerned, and still retain full capacity for work, and for the sake of publicity and convenience, the sittings are proposed to be held in the Civil Court premises or close to them. It is also contemplated to hold inquiries on the spot very frequently, and check the proceedings of experts, in cases necessitating their employment by the presiding member personally.

4. I am glad to announce that an Arbitration Board has been established at Alipur, consisting of the following members, and that other highly qualified gentlemen are expected to join it shortly, and that the Board is now engaged in trying a partition suit referred to it by the senior Munsif of Alipur.

1. Mr. Saroda Churn Mitra, Ex-Judge, High Court, Calcutta.
 2. Rai Jogesh Chunder Mitter Bahadur, Presidency Magistrate and retired District and Sessions Judge.
 3. Shamsululama Moulvi Mahomed Yusuff, Khan Bahadur, Vakil, High Court.
 4. Rai Jogendra Nath Mitter Bahadur, retired District and Sessions Judge.
 5. Rai Debendro Chunder Ghose Bahadur, retired Government Pleader, and lately leader of the Bar, 24-Pergunnahs.
 6. Babu Behary Lal Banerjee, retired Sub-Judge.
 7. Babu Promotho Nath Chatterjee, retired Sub-Judge.
5. As institutions for promotion of peace and goodwill the Arbitration Boards might, I venture to suggest, be fitting memorials to commemorate the gracious visit of Their Imperial Majesties, in a tangible and lasting form.
6. May I request also the favour of your kindly making widely known the fact of the formation of the Alipur Board, the services of which are at the command of the suitors of Calcutta, the district of 24-Pergunnahs and the neighbouring districts, either gratuitously or at a low rate of fees.

I have the honor to be

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,
PROMOTHO NATH CHATTERJEE, I

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Actiesselskabet D. "Hercules" v. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Coy. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, BUCKLEY AND KENNEDY. 31st October 1911.

Cause of action—Its place—Jurisdiction—Residence and carrying on of business.

This was an appeal from an order of Lawrence, J. The Defendants were a Canadian Company registered in Canada and formed for building railway across the Atlantic. The Plaintiffs were a company registered in Norway and owners of S. S. "Hercules." The cause of action for a claim for demurrage occurred at Prince Rupert, but the Plaintiffs sued in England on the ground that the Defendants were carrying on their business there. The Defendants objected and moved the Master to cancel the writ which he did. But the Court below reversed that order from which the Defendants appealed. It was contended against the Appellants that since 1904 they had an advisory committee in London which dealt with financial matters relating to the issue of loan capital for the construction of the Railway and that they had a room in England and their name on the door. The Appellants' case was that the raising of money in England was merely a preliminary, and that all business was really done in Canada—Reliance was placed on Badcock v. Cumberland G. P. Company (1893, 1 Ch. 362). The learned Judges dismissed the appeal. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS remarked,

The only question he had to consider was this, whether the financial business of issuing loans was of such a character that he ought to say that although the Defendant company undoubtedly had a board of directors in this country at a fixed residence acting on its behalf and issuing advertisements in the name of the company, it ought to be held not to be carrying on business in this country because it was not carrying on the business of running railway but the business of raising money by the issue of a debenture. In his opinion it was impossible to draw any such distinction. What was done by the London board was to carry on the business of the company. The office was the office of the company, and it did not matter that there was no rent paid for that office. It was the office in which the business of the company was not only carried on, but was also advertised to be carried on.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re Havana Cigar Protection Association, Ltd. Before MR. JUSTICE PARKER. 1st November 1911.

Trade-mark—Havana cigars—Use of Spanish brand name for articles manufactured elsewhere—Deception and false suggestion.

This was an appeal by the Havana Protection Society. The Respondents were a Dutch firm who applied for registration of a trade-mark "Los Alumbradores" affixed to their cigars and tobacco made in Holland under a label. It was opposed by the Appellants on the ground that it was calculated to deceive, for Havana cigars suggested that they were Spanish although they were actually made in Holland. The Controller-General of Patents allowed the registration which gave rise to the present appeal. The learned Judge in the course of his judgment dismissing it observed:—

The applicant's contention, amounts to this: that the use of a Spanish brand name on cigars must suggest, or at any rate is likely to suggest, that the cigars, if not Havana cigars, are at any rate made in some Spanish-speaking country, and that in the case of cigars made in Holland this will be a false suggestion. They admit that cigars, wherever made, may be legitimately described, as to size, shape, and colour, by Spanish words, for this is the common custom of the trade, but they desire to draw the line at Spanish brand name. In my opinion no such line can properly be drawn. It is, of course, possible that a brand name may suggest the country of origin, as I think was the case in Rex v. Phillips (25 T. L. R. 764), where the brand name in question was "Bella de Cuba." It is further possible that the use of a Spanish brand name coupled with the nature of the picture on which it appears, with or without the addition of other Spanish words, may suggest Havana or some other Spanish-speaking country as the country of origin of the goods. This appears to have been the case in Rex v. Butcher (24 T. L. R. 769). But it appears to me that I should be going too far if I hold that every Spanish brand name for cigars made in a country where Spanish is not spoken must contain a false suggestion. If I held this I might be throwing doubt on the propriety of many existing brand names. I might equally well hold that a French brand name for gloves or corsets made in England must necessarily be calculated to deceive.

The applicants also relied on the case of McGlennon's Application (25 Reports of Patent cases, 797), in which Mr. Justice Warrington refused to allow the registration of the outline of a shamrock leaf as suggesting an Irish origin for picture postcards. On reference to that case I find that the learned Judge decided entirely on the evidence before him, and was careful not to lay down any general rule. If I remember rightly, the thistle is and had long been used as their trade-mark for butterscotch and like wares by a well-known firm of English manufacturers. There can, in my opinion, be no such general rule as suggested. Each case must be judged by its own special circumstances. In the present case there is nothing in the label to help the contention that the Spanish brand name suggests the place of origin of the goods, and when I come to the evidence I find that the mark has actually been used in this country for 21 years, during which nearly 20,000 boxes have been sold, and yet there is no suggestion that any one has been actually deceived.

LORD HALDANE.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD SHAW.

LORD ROBSON.

3, November.

THE KING

v.

LOVIT and others.

Situs of moveable property—Application of “Mobilia sequuntur personam,” altered by Statute.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada. The question at issue in the appeal was whether the Defendants as the executors of one L deceased were liable to pay succession duty in respect of money which the testator had placed on special deposit in the St. John's branch of the Bank of British North America. The King's claim was founded on sec. 5, sub-sec. 1, of the Succession Duty Act of New Brunswick, which enacts that “all property, whether situate in this province or elsewhere, other than property being in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and subject to duty, whether the deceased person owing or entitled thereto had a fixed place of abode in or without this province at the time of his death, passing either by will or intestacy, shall be subject to a succession duty to be paid for the use of the Province over and above the fees provided by the chapter of these consolidated statutes relating to Probate Courts.”

To this was subsequently added:—“The provisions of this section are not intended to apply and shall not apply to property outside this Province owned at the time of his death by a person not then having a place of residence within the Province, except so much thereof as may be devised or transferred to a person or persons residing within the Province.” In the Consolidated Statutes for 1908 this sub-section appeared as amended by the word “domiciled” being substituted for “having a place of residence.”

Their Lordships allowed the appeal. LORD MACNAGHTEN in the course of his judgment observed:—

The present case came well within the principles thus laid down, and their Lordships were of opinion that these debts were “property situate within the Province” of New Brunswick. The Defendants, however, contended that the situation of the property was to be determined, not by its actual locality, but according to the principal expressed in the maxim, “Mobilia sequuntur personam.” Personal property of a moveable nature was considered, they said, to follow the person of the owner and was, in contemplation of law, situate wherever he was domiciled. In that view the property was neither in London nor New Brunswick, but in Nova Scotia.

In regard to legacy and succession duties it had been held through a long series of cases that the duties were intended to be imposed only on those who became entitled by virtue of our law. The effect of that principle was to exempt from the payment of legacy or succession duties moveable property situate here which belonged to a testator domiciled abroad, for in dealing with the distribution of such property our Courts acted not on our own law, but on the law of the domicile of the testator or intestate on which the legatee or successor founded his title. Similarly, in the case of moveables situate abroad which belonged to a person domiciled here, our Courts would direct their distribution according to our law and not that of the locality where they were found. The application of this principle might be excluded by the use of apt and clear words in a Statute for the purpose, and the question was whether that had been done in the present case by a Legislature having full authority in that behalf.

Here the Legislature of New Brunswick had expressly enacted that all property situate in the Province should be subject to a succession duty though the testator might have had his fixed place of abode or domicile outside the Province. The Act purported to exclude the application of the maxim, “Mobilia sequuntur personam,” as regarded personal estate within the Province belonging to persons domiciled elsewhere, but to retain it as regards the property of New Brunswick citizens situate outside the Province. The Act under consideration assimilated the tax to the probate duty. It was imposed as part of the price to be paid by the representatives of a deceased testator for the collection or local administration of taxable property within the Province, and, in the view of their Lordships, it was intended to be a direct burden on that property, varying in amount according to the relationship of the successor to the testator.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important ones to be fully reported hereafter).

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., AND N. R. CHATTERJEE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1418 OF 1909. JATINDRA NATH ROY AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. MOZAFER ALI KHAN AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 23rd November 1911.

Rent decree—Direction that mehal in arrears should be sold first, if may be made.

Appeal from a decision of H. E. Ransom, Esq., District Judge of Nuddea, dated the 7th April 1909, modifying a decision of Babu Rajendra Lal Sadhu, dated the 12th November 1908.

The facts material to this report were as follows :—Plaintiffs brought this suit for rent ; some of the Defendants made an application as follows :—“..... If this suit be decreed and if the Plaintiffs try to realise money by the attachment of the moveable properties then these Defendants will be put to shame and shall suffer loss. It is, therefore, prayed that the Court may be pleased to assess damage at a low rate and at first pass a decree against the mehal in arrear and pass an order to the effect that if the whole amount be not realised thereby, the Defendants shall themselves be liable for the same”

The first Court in passing a decree said as follows :—“Considering the allegations disclosed in the petition and the fact that if this prayer be allowed the Plaintiffs will not be put to difficulty, it may be ordered that the land in arrears be sold first to satisfy the decree.” There was a further direction in the decree that if it be insufficient, then the balance might be recovered as personal decree.

The District Judge was of the same opinion.

Some of the Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, Vakil for Appellant, contended that the lower Courts had no jurisdiction to limit the decree as they had done, and the direction in the decree to proceed against the defaulting tenure first should be expunged.

Their Lordships gave effect to the contention.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CASPERSZ AND D. CHATTERJEE, JJ. MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 492 OF 1909. RAJA PROMODA NATH ROY, Appellant v. SARA KHATUN AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard 24th November. Judgment 28th November 1911.

Rent, suit for, by co-sharer making separate collection, making other co-sharers Defendants—Decree passed for money—Execution—Res judicata—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 158B.

The main question in controversy in the case was whether the decree obtained by the Appellant could be executed as a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Court held in the negative and the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

The decree-holder was the owner of 6 annas and the opposite party Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 were the owners of 2 annas of an eight annas mehal which was let out in putni to the ancestor of the judgment-debtors opposite parties. The decree-holder, as such 6 annas owners, brought a suit to recover arrears of rent against the putnidar making the owners of the remaining 2 annas pro forma Defendants, praying for a decree for the entire rent as also, for a declaration that the decretal amount should be a charge upon the tenure in arrears. The Court of first instance held that as the rent for the 6 annas had been separately collected, the co-sharers were not necessary parties and that the claim for their share of the rent was untenable, that the Plaintiffs as part owners could not enforce a lien on the tenure, and ultimately passed a decree for a sum which was to be realised from the assets of the putnidar, Nur Mahomed Khan, who had died in the meantime, his heirs being substituted on the record in his place. This decree was made in April 1907, and there was no appeal against it. When the decree-holder sought to execute the decree as rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act, objection was preferred by the judgment-debtor, Sham Sunnissa Khatun, that the decree was a money decree and must be executed as such. The Court of execution reading the decree by the light of the judgment in the original suit, held the objection to be well-founded.

Held—That the suit was rightly framed as a suit for rent, and a decree properly passed therein would be capable of execution under the special procedure of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Court, however, passed a money decree. No question of res judicata could arise as the question was raised not in another suit but in execution of the decree passed in the same suit. That the provisions of sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no application.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CARNLUFF, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3175 of 1909. NAR-SINGH NARAIN SINGH, Appellant v. AJODHYA PROSAD SINGH AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard 20th and 21st November 1911. Judgment 28th November 1911.

Arbitration—Arbitrator's power to decide matters outside reference—Award, who can object—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 525—Award if can be ordered to be filed in part.

The parties to the proceeding were related to each other, and had a dispute as to a pathway for passage from the land of the Plaintiff and his brother to a village towards the north of the property of the first Defendant. On the 16th July 1908, the matters in controversy which were set out in full detail in a registered instrument of submission, were referred to the arbitration of a gentleman by name Dilkeswar Singh. He made his award on the 31st August 1908. On the 14th September following, the Plaintiff applied under sec. 525 of the Code of 1882 that the award be filed in Court. The Defendants questioned the validity of the submission, imputed misconduct and partiality to the arbitrator, alleged a revocation of the submission before the award was made and contended that the award had determined a question not included in the submission. The Courts below overruled all the objections except one, as entirely unfounded and directed the award to be filed in part. The result was that a modified decree was made in favour of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court and on his behalf the decree was assailed in so far as it modified the award. The arbitrator found in substance that the pathway alleged by the Plaintiff and denied by the Defendants, did, as a matter of fact, exist, but he held that if the thoroughfare was allowed to continue, great inconvenience and injury would be caused to the first Defendant. In that view the arbitrator laid down a new pathway in lieu of the disputed thoroughfare. The Plaintiff was satisfied with the award in that respect but the Defendants objected that the award was in excess of the authority of the arbitrator, inasmuch as the matter covered by the submission was the existence or otherwise of the disputed pathway, and it was beyond the competence of the arbitrator to substitute in lieu thereof a new pathway. This view found favour with the Courts below and they declined to direct the award to be filed in so far as the pathway was concerned.

Held—That an arbitrator is not bound by mere rules of practice which Courts have adopted for general convenience, and he has greater latitude than Courts of law to do complete justice between the parties according to equity and good conscience. The Courts are therefore never astute to entertain technical objections to awards. But an arbitrator cannot go beyond the precise questions submitted: it will not do for him to determine any claims or demands though existing between the parties to the submission, save only those which they have agreed that he shall decide. In each case therefore where a question arises whether the arbitrator has exceeded his authority.

That only the party prejudiced by the exercise of excessive authority by the authority was entitled to object to the award by reason of it. The party in whose favour the erroneous action of the arbitrator operated, could not be heard to impeach the validity of the award on that ground.

That it was not competent to the Court in the proceeding under sec. 525 of the Code of 1882 to direct that the award be filed in part; the Court was bound to refuse the application if in its opinion the award was open to attack in part.

pellants may be taken into consideration ; (5) that the confessions of Appellants Nos. 2 and 18, are sufficient to complete the evidence against them.

(1) Association is the gist of the offence punishable under sec. 400 of the Penal Code, that is, association for the habitual pursuit of dacoity. The subject is fully discussed by Dr. Gour, in his second volume on the Penal Law of India, and he has collected all the cases under the section (pp. 1587—1590). The section is a highly penal one, and, as was said by Phear, J., in The Queen v. Mooktaram Sirdar (2), the offence is "one of a very special character and entirely the creature of statute." The section must, therefore, be strictly construed. Although the evidence need not show the same degree of particularity as to the commission of each dacoity as is required to support a substantive charge of that crime [Empress v. Kure (3)], it must be established, for the purpose of conviction, that the accused belong to a gang whose business is the habitual commission of dacoity. The special conspiracy must be proved—see King-Emperor v. Tirumal Reddi (4). A good illustration of the kind of evidence to be adduced in such a case as this is to be gathered from the judgment of Munro, J., in The Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu (1), and we think that, in the case before us, the evidence under the seven heads (at p. 181 of the report) is almost entirely absent. For instance, it has not been shown that the Appellants move about in batches, have been arrested in batches, and are absent from home in batches, or that the Appellants have been concerned in a large number of dacoities.

(2) It follows from the principles we have just mentioned that the implication of Sandars generally in the number of even seven dacoities spread over the shorter period of ten years, is not sufficient proof against the present Appellants. The tribe or caste of Sandars contains thousands of human beings, and even one bohor or flotilla of fifty boats may include two hundred persons. The approver Bayan has been corroborated to some extent as to the facts of the dacoities, but that corroboration has no tendency to prove that the Appellants were with him on each or some of the occasions. Corroboration of the testimony of an approver must connect the accused with the offence—here, the association of a gang of persons for the business of habitually committing dacoity. In this essential respect, the evidence does not sufficiently support the story of the approver, and we may add that Bayan's deposition, which has been placed before us, is not free from important contradictions which cast doubts on his veracity. We have already noticed the vital fact that no stolen property was found in the possession of any of the Appellants; if stolen or suspicious property had been discovered, that would have been adequate corroboration.

(3) The third contention of the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer may be dismissed with the observation that the acquittal of the accused in Fulchari dacoity can only mean that they had nothing to do with that crime. See the cases of The Emperor v. Nani Gopal Gupta (5), Rex v. Plummer (6). No adverse inference can be drawn against the accused after their acquittal.

(4) The next argument concerns the previous convictions of some of the Appellants. Jadu (No. 23) was twice punished for dacoity. Sabed (No. 4), Rahimuddin (No. 6), Jalal (No. 11), Jadu (No. 23) and Tomiz (No. 24) were bound down to be of good behaviour under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. Lal Chand (No. 19) was convicted for theft and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. These are the previous convictions relied on. They do not carry much weight, though, no doubt, if the association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, had been made out, the past history of some of the Appellants would have been significant, as was pointed out in the case of Bonai v. The King-Emperor (7).

(5) The last contention covers the case of the Appellants who confessed in the first Court (Nos. 2 and 18). We have heard the confessions read out. The Appellants did not admit the existence of a gang. No. 2 spoke of five thefts and five dacoities. No. 18 mentioned only one theft and one dacoity. The confessions were retracted before the Magistrate. In our opinion, such confessions cannot be deemed conclusive where the other evidence in the case is so wanting in precision.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that all the Appellants, including the six exempted by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, are in the same category, and must be acquitted of the present charge under sec. 400, I. P. C. We regret the expenditure of public time in the trial of this case in the Court of Sessions.

The appeal is allowed. The convictions and sentences are reversed. The Appellants will be set at liberty, so far as the present proceedings are concerned.

Appeal allowed.

MIR SARWARJAN, Appellant,

v.

FAKHRUDDIN MAHO-
MED CHOWDHURI

and others, Respondents.

Specific performance—Infant—Contract for purchase of immoveable property by guardian or manager—Mutuality, want of—Position and powers of guardian and manager, if similar.

It is not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property.

The minor in such a case not being bound by the contract there is no mutuality in it, and he cannot on attaining majority obtain specific performance of it.

MIR SARWARJAN v. FAKARUDDIN MAHOMED (2) overruled.

Quære—Whether the position and powers of a manager and those of the guardian are the same.

This was an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 6th December 1906, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Backergunj, dated the 23rd February 1904.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was brought by the first two Respondents and the predecessors in title of Respondents Nos. 3 and 4, (of whom the first was an infant suing by his next friend and duly appointed guardian), alleging that they were respectively the owners by right of inheritance of the property claimed in the plaint and that a purchase thereof at a Court auction by the Appellant's (first Defendant's) vendors was void, and they prayed that declarations be made to this effect. As regards this prayer the suit was dismissed. The Plaintiffs (Respondents) further alleged that before the said Court auction the first Defendant (Appellant) had agreed to reconvey to them the said property at the price which might be paid by him therefor and they prayed alternatively for a decree for specific performance of the said agreement.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for specific performance as prayed by the Plaintiffs, and the decree was affirmed by the High Court on appeal.

The principal questions in the appeal were whether the Appellant entered into the said agreement and was bound thereby, whether the Respondents or any of them were entitled to enforce it, and whether under the circumstances of the case appearing in the evidence specific performance should have been decreed, and if so, on what terms.

The circumstances giving rise to the litigation were as follows: In 1880 the Bamna estate was held in undivided shares by several persons, including Afsaruddin (who was the father of the first Respondent and husband of the second), the third Plaintiff who was represented on the record by Respondents Nos. 3 and 4, the Appellant, and one Nurunnissa, who was sister of Afsaruddin. The last-named sharer had two shares, of which the larger was described as a one anna five gundas share:—this share was mortgaged by her in that year to one Bhim Shaha, and it was with this share that the present appeal was more particularly concerned. In 1881 by agreement between the shareholders separate lands were allotted to each in respect of the several undivided shares and Nurunnissa mortgaged a part of her lands to Uma Churn Guha. On the death of Nurunnissa, which took place about 1898, her property subject to the said mortgages passed to her brother and the Appellant. Her brother died subsequently and was succeeded by Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

In 1887 a suit was brought on the said mortgage of 1880 by Judhisthir in whom the mortgage was vested against the mortgagor and her husband and other persons who had shares in the estate. A decree was passed on 25th February 1887 for Rs. 28,534-2 and further interest: the mortgage was not redeemed; an order for the sale of the mortgage property was made and the mortgagee obtained leave to bid. The sale took place in November 1895, and the property was knocked down to the mortgagee, Judhisthir. The Appellant was under an agreement to pay the decree-holder Rs. 23,000 for the property and for the decree, which remained unsatisfied, and had made a deposit of Rs. 11,000 as part of the price. The balance was paid in 1897 when deeds were executed by the mortgagee, Judhisthir, by which the transaction was completed, and the property and the decree were duly transferred to the Appellant (Defendant No. 1) and his trustee George Garth (Defendant No. 2 in the present suit, by whose assistance he had raised the necessary funds on mortgage as stated below). A formal certificate of sale in respect of the lands was obtained from the Court in 1900.

MIR SARWARJAN v. FAKHRUDDIN MAHOMED CHOWDHURI.

Meanwhile, before the sale under the said mortgage decree, viz., on 25th October 1895, the agreement sued on by the Respondents was said to have been made by the Appellant and Garth. Its terms were set out in the plaint as follows :—

(1) "That the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 would pay half and the Defendant No. 1 would pay half the amount of the Decree obtained by Judhisthir Shaha and others against Nurunnissa Khatun, which had been settled to be purchased by the Defendant No. 1, and both the parties would have equal interest in that Decree.

(2) "That among the mortgaged properties of those judgment-debtors which had been lotted up for sale, such properties as were in possession of any party would be purchased by that party at a small value, that any party would not be able to purchase the property in the possession of another, and that even if he purchased it he should have to give it back.

(3) "That both parties would jointly purchase the other properties and they would partition and take them according as they lie contiguous to their shares."

This agreement was held to be proved by a memorandum, dated 25th October 1895, which was found to have been signed by the Appellant and also by a clerk in the employment of Garth's firm who signed in the name of Garth though not by his directions. The Appellant's case was that none of the clauses of the memorandum had been carried out and no claim under the alleged agreement was made or conveyance tendered to him for execution before suit.

In October 1895 the properties of the minor and his mother (the first and second Respondents) and of the third Plaintiff were in fact in the management of Garth and his partner Wetherell (Defendant No. 3).

In or about 1895 the separate lands forming part of Nurunnissa's estate were brought to sale in execution of a decree on the other mortgage above referred to.

Of these, half was bought by the present Appellant and half by Garth under an arrangement spoken to by the former. A like arrangement with regard to the execution sale of property of Mozaharuddin, who was Nurunnissa's husband, and of Nochoruddin, a distant relative, was deposed to by the witnesses. The property purchased by Garth was agreed to be sold to the Appellant. To carry out the various transactions of the Appellant above referred to, he obtained through Garth, as had been arranged in 1895, a loan of Rs. 75,000 from the Eastern Mortgage Company on a mortgage. Of this sum Garth paid Rs. 13,000 to the credit of Judhisthir, who thereupon executed, as aforesaid, a conveyance of the lands he had bought to the Appellant and an assignment of the decree to Messrs. Garth and Wetherell as trustees for the Appellant. For the purpose of discharging this mortgage in which the said decree of 1887 was included Garth was placed in possession and management of the mortgage premises. About the same time Messrs. Garth and Wetherell appeared to have come to terms with the widow (the second Respondent); and about the 16th August 1897 the third Plaintiff executed a deed of trust conveying his properties to them.

Soon after the sale which had taken place under the said mortgage decree in 1895 steps were taken on behalf of the first Respondent to have it set aside on the ground of alleged irregularities of procedure and inadequacy of price. And when the Appellant applied for the formal confirmation of the sale in 1900 his application was opposed by the Respondents, but the sale was confirmed. Thereupon on the 5th May 1900 the present Respondents filed three petitions under the Civil Procedure Code, sec. 244, with the object of having the sale set aside on the ground that it was attended with various irregularities, having previously on the 20th April 1900 instituted the present suit against the Appellant as first Defendant and Messrs. Garth and Wetherell pro forma Defendants Nos. 2 and 3. In their plaint they set out the facts of the case from their point of view. The prayer of the plaint was as follows: "Failing the above (viz., the prayer for the declaration of the Plaintiffs' title), for a declaration that the Defendant No. 1 is bound according to the contract to execute a kobala in favour of the Plaintiffs at the price paid at the auction sale, and for a decree that the Defendant No. 1 do execute the kobala on receipt of the said consideration from the Plaintiffs." The Appellant defended the suit.

Several issues were fixed for trial of which the only issue now material was as follows:—"Was there any contract between the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for reconveying any property to the Plaintiffs mentioned in Sch. I of the plaint? If so, what were its terms? Is the said contract enforceable by the Plaintiffs against Defendant No. 1."

The Subordinate Judge allowed the Plaintiffs' petitions setting aside the sale and dismissed the suit as according to him the Plaintiffs had been granted, upon those petitions, all the reliefs they were entitled to. From the order granting the petitions the present Appellant appealed.

The Plaintiffs also appealed against the judgment in their suits. The present Appellant's appeal came on first for disposal, and it was decided in his favour, whereupon the High Court on 25th July 1902 ordered on the appeal against the judgment in the suit that it should be remanded for the disposal of the issue aforesaid.

On the 10th February 1904 the suit came on for hearing on the remand, and oral and documentary evidence was given on both sides.

On the 22nd February 1904 the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment for the Plaintiffs. He held that the document of the 25th October 1895 was signed by the Appellant and that he was bound by its terms to convey the properties to the Plaintiffs for the price paid by him for the same and passed a decree to that effect. He said: "Mr. Garth clearly did so contract on behalf of the estates of the Plaintiffs (under his management) and that of Afsaruddin inherited by Plaintiff No. 3 which also had been given over to Mr. Garth in trust. The ekrar of 9th Bhadra, 1288, Ex. (2), also helps the Plaintiffs. And supposing these two contracts to fail, there can be no two sides to the question of equity involved in this case."

Against this judgment and decree an appeal was preferred by the present Appellant to the High Court, and the appeal having come on for disposal before a Division Bench of the High Court judgment was delivered on the 25th July 1906.

The learned Judges agreed with the lower Court that the Appellant had executed the document of the 25th October 1895. On the question whether the Plaintiffs could sue on that document they said:

"The next question is, what authority had Basanta Kumar Guha to execute the deed for Mr. Garth, and what authority had Mr. Garth to execute the deed on behalf of the Plaintiff. Basanta Kumar Guha was the manager for Mr. Garth. He admits he had no special authority to execute the agreement for Mr. Garth, but he informed Mr. Garth as soon as he had executed it for him, and it is clear that Mr. Garth accepted and ratified it. Then Mr Garth was at that time the manager of the estate of the three Plaintiffs. This appears from the evidence of Basanta Kumar Guha and of the Defendant himself. After the execution of the deed of management, the mother of the minor, Plaintiff No. 1, refused to register the deed, and opposed the collection of rent by Mr. Garth, but the deed did not require registration, and her opposition was subsequently withdrawn. The deed was obviously not entered into by Mr. Garth in his personal capacity. It was entered into by him as manager and for the benefit of the Plaintiffs who have accepted and ratified it, and the Defendant No. 1 cannot now, I think, be allowed to resile from it."

They observed that the subsequent conduct of Garth would not seem to have disentitled the Plaintiffs to obtain the relief they now prayed for, and as to the question of the infant Plaintiff's right to enforce specific performance of the contract they made an order referring to the Full Bench the following questions :—

"(1) Can specific performance of a contract validly entered into on behalf of a minor be enforced?

"(2) Has the case of Fatima Bibi v. Deb Nath Shah (1) been rightly decided?"

The case having come on before a Full Bench the learned Judges agreed in saying,

"I think we can only answer the question by saying that if a contract is validly entered into on behalf of a minor and there is mutuality in such contract, it might be specifically enforced. Each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances and it is difficult to lay down any general rule. As regards the case immediately before us, we cannot, sitting as a Full Bench, go into the evidence and decide whether or not this is a case in which specific performance ought to be granted."

Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakaruddin Mahomed (2).

The appeal came on for disposal again before the Division Court (Rampini and Woodroffe, JJ.), and they delivered judgment, dismissing the appeal. Mr. Justice Rampini observed inter alia

"I can only say that I see no reason to dissent from the views already recorded in the referring Order: (1) that the contract was validly entered into, particularly when, as pointed out, it was for the benefit of the minor and was accepted and ratified by him; and (2) for the reason given 'there is no want of mutuality' in respect of this agreement. The third question raised by Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarti is as to whether the contract can be enforced, seeing, as he contends, it renders the minor personally liable. It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to consider this contention, for, as far as I can see, the agreement which is printed at p. 2 of the paper-book in no way binds the minor personally. The material clause in the contract is clause 1. This appears to me to bind only the minor's estate which in this country a guardian or manager of a minor's property can do within the limitations contained in the referring order."

Mr. Justice Woodroffe's judgment was as follows :—

As a lengthy argument has been addressed to us upon the construction which should be placed upon the judgment of the Full Bench, I should like to state what I understand to be its meaning. It is now settled that a minor is incompetent to contract and therefore a contract by him is not voidable but void [Mohori Bibi v. Dharma Das Ghose (3)]. The effect therefore of this would appear to be that relief on a contract entered into by a minor cannot be obtained either by or against him whether by specific performance or otherwise. But a manager or guardian of a minor may enter into a contract on his behalf. If, as in the case cited to us, Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masluddin (4) (where there was an onerous covenant not for the minor's interest and imposing a personal liability on him) a guardian goes beyond his powers, his action does not bind the minor. The result of this is the same as the former case, vis., that a suit based on such a transaction entirely fails as against the minor and no relief whether by specific performance or otherwise can be obtained as against him. There is left for consideration, therefore, the class of cases where a contract is entered into on behalf of a guardian or manager of a minor within the powers of the latter and which binds the ward. The question is, can specific performance be obtained in such cases? The Full Bench has said that a valid contract may be enforced, if there is mutuality.

In saying this I understand it to refer to the case last put. It meant by the term mutuality, as I take it, that if the contract made by a manager is one which binds the minor (a matter to be determined according to the circumstances of each case), then as the contract can both be enforced by or against him in such a case, the Court may decree specific performance. To put it quite shortly, specific performance may be granted if the contract be one which, being within the guardian's powers, binds the minor.

The question then is was the agreement in his case one which bound the minor. We have already found that it did.

It has, however, been further argued by the learned pleader for the Appellant that as the agreement in Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masluddin (4) was held not to bind the minor, so the one in suit does not bind him. He contends it does not bind him, because an agreement for sale and purchase involves a personal liability to pay the price if the agreement is carried out, as also damages in lieu of or in addition to specific performance if the agreement is broken. If this argument be sound, then no contract can ever be specifically enforced by or against a minor, though the Full Bench have held that a contract may, in certain circumstances, be so enforced. The payment of a price is necessarily involved in the notion of a sale, and relief by damages is a natural consequence of all broken contracts. What the Privy Council held in the case cited, was that the guardian who had in that case sold land could not enter into a covenant collateral to the sale binding the minor personally to indemnify the purchaser in certain events, though the question, whether property of the minor could be charged as security for the performance of such covenant, was left open. Every case must be considered with reference to its own facts and there is nothing in the agreement in this suit which in my opinion rendered it not binding on the minors. It is clearly for their benefit though, of course, the Appellant objects to the agreement being enforced against him.

The next contention is also one which, if given effect to, would stultify the decision of the Full Bench. It is first said that Fatima Bibi v. Deb

Nath Shah (1) decided what is stated in the head-note to the report of that case, vis., that a minor in this country cannot maintain a suit for specific performance of a contract entered into on his behalf by his guardian and nextly it is argued that the majority of the Full Bench either approved of this decision or if their dicta on this point be regarded as obiter did not at my rate overrule it with the result that it is still in force. It is certain that the Full Bench could not have meant anything of the kind, for having held that in certain circumstances a contract by a guardian or manager can be specifically enforced, it could not without manifest contradiction have at the same time approved of a decision that such a contract can never be enforced. What I understand by the observations referred to is this;—Norris, J., appears (though as my learned brother has pointed out, erroneously) to have supposed that the contract before him was entered into by the minor himself, for at the conclusion of his judgment he states that in his view of the Contract Act a minor in this country cannot contract at all. What therefore the majority of the Full Bench have said is "that assuming that the facts were as stated in the report" the case was properly decided. That is, assuming the contract was entered into by the minor himself, the case was properly decided. As a matter of fact, however, the contract was entered into by the minor's guardian, a circumstance which appears to have been overlooked by Norris, J., though not by the reporter who drew up the head-note. It is now, however, in my opinion, settled by the Full Bench and other decisions [Khairunnessa Bibi v. Loke Nath Pal (5), Krishnasami v. Sundarappayar (6), Jamsetjee Tata v. Kashi Nath (7)] that relief by specific performance may be given where the contract is by a guardian or manager and binds the minor and this is so notwithstanding the decision in Fatima Bibi v. Deb Nath Shah (1) and the observations in Jugal Kishore v. Ananda Lal (8). As regards the latter case, the observations were obiter for though the contract in question was entered into by the guardian, the case was one in which it was held on facts that the Court should not exercise the discretion it has to grant this form of relief. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs both of the reference and of the appeal.

The High Court accordingly dismissed the appeal. Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. K. Brown, for the Appellant, submitted that the agreement was not enforceable on behalf of or against the minor. There was no mutuality. It is settled law that a minor is incompetent to contract and a contract made by him is absolutely void. It cannot bind him. There is no difference in principle between a guardian and a manager of the minor's property. Neither can bind the minor's estate. In the present case there was no sufficient evidence to show that the contract was authorised by the Respondents or entered into for them or was ratified by them or by Garth.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, for the Respondents, submitted that the agreement was for the benefit of the minor and having been accepted and ratified by the Respondents was valid and binding. There is evidence that before judgment was given the contract had been ratified. It must now be conceded that a contract made by an infant is void, but a contract entered into by a manager on behalf of a minor is enforceable. It was so under the Hindu Law.

“ Their LORDSHIPS’ JUDGMENT was delivered by •

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Backergunj.

All the questions raised in the litigation but one were disposed of before the appeal was taken to the High Court, and when the case was before a Division Bench of that Court that question was made the subject of a reference to the Full Bench.

The reference was in the following terms:—“ Can specific performance of a contract validly entered into on behalf of a minor be enforced ? ”

The reference came before the Chief Justice and four other Judges of the High Court. They agreed in returning an answer which seems to be carefully guarded and is perhaps rather enigmatical. The Chief Justice observed that the question submitted to the Court was “ a wide and far-reaching question.” His opinion was that they could only “ answer the question by saying that if a contract is validly entered into on behalf of a minor, and there is mutuality in such contract, it might be specifically enforced.” The other learned Judges concurred.

The case was then sent back to the Division Bench to be tried out on the merits. The decree under appeal to the High Court was a decree for the specific performance of an agreement for the purchase and the sale of immoveable estate. The agreement was expressed to be made between a Mr. Garth and the Appellant, Mir Sarwarjan. Mr. Garth was at the time manager of the estate of the Respondent No. 1 who was then a minor.

After observing that they had already considered the evidence and had “ come to the conclusions : (1) that it was a contract validly entered into and (2) that there is mutuality with regard to it; for ‘ the agreement made by Mr. Garth with Mir Sarwarjan would seem to be as enforceable against the minor as it is against Mir Sarwarjan,’ ” the learned Judges of the Division Bench stated that they saw no reason to dissent from their views already expressed and recorded “ (1) that the contract was validly entered into, particularly when, as pointed out, it was for the benefit of the minor, and was accepted and ratified by him, and (2) for the reason given 'there is no want of mutuality' in respect of this agreement."

The agreement in question was entered into by an agent of Mr. Garth, without any express authority from him, but there was some evidence that Mr. Garth adopted or assumed to adopt the agreement on behalf of the minor. At any rate it was assumed in both Courts and it was the opinion of the Subordinate Judge that the contract was not intended to bind the manager personally, and therefore it was assumed that it was intended to bind the minor or the minor's estate. It was also assumed that the purchase was an advantageous purchase for the minor. In this judgment and for the purpose of this judgment their Lordships accept all the foregoing assumptions.

The learned Judges of the Division Bench disposed of the question of mutuality at the first hearing in the following terms: "There is no want of mutuality in this case for the agreement made by Mr. Garth with Mir Sarwarjan would seem to be as enforceable against the minors as it is against Mir Sarwarjan. The acts of a guardian in this country bind the minor. There is no difference between his position and powers and those of a manager." No other or further reason in regard to this point was given by the learned Judges when the case was referred back to them.

Without some authority their Lordships are unable to accept the view of the learned Judges of the Division Bench that there is no difference between the position and powers of a manager and those of a guardian. They are, however, of opinion that it is not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property, and they are further of opinion that as the minor in the present case was not bound by the contract there was no mutuality, and that the minor who has now reached his majority cannot obtain specific performance of the contract.

Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, the order of the High Court discharged, and the suit dismissed.

The Respondent No. 1 must pay the costs of the appeal. Any costs paid under the order of the High Court must be repaid, but there will be no other order as to costs in the Courts below.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

APPLICATION SUIT NO. 126 OF 1910.

STEPHEN, J.	}	BASANTA COOMAR
1911.		GOSWAMI
31, January.		v.
		KUMUDINI DASSI.

Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. II, rr. 13, 18 (2)—Affidavit of documents—Inspection—Discovery.

When an affidavit of documents has been filed by one party under Or. II, r. 13 of the Code, the other party is not necessarily precluded from subsequently applying under r. 18, para. 2 of the same Order for further inspection and discovery.

The present application for further discovery and inspection arose out of a suit in which the Plaintiff, a broker, sued the Defendant for the recovery of Rs. 6046-10-6 due to him as commission for a loan negotiation which had in fact not been carried through but in respect of which the borrower and the lender were brought together by the Plaintiff. The suit was instituted on the 8th February 1910 and the intending borrower filed her written statement on the 11th April 1910. She denied all liability.

An order was passed on the 14th April 1910 on the application of the Plaintiff directing the Defendant to file full and sufficient affidavit of documents. The Defendant complied with this order on the 22nd April 1910. Not being satisfied with this affidavit the Plaintiff wrote to the Defendant requesting discovery and inspection of eighteen documents, chief of which were (1) the draft petition of the Defendant which was sent to Messrs. S. D. Dutt and Ghose in April 1908 for their approval in connection with the loan of 6 lacs of rupees and upon which an application for sanction of Court was made on the 8th April 1908, (2) original petition signed and affirmed by the Defendant on the 7th April 1908, and presented before Mr. Justice Fletcher on the 8th but taken back on that date when his Lordship ordered the application to be renewed upon further and fuller materials.

The Defendant failed to comply with this requisition. The Plaintiff then took out summons for an order that the Defendant do disclose and give inspection of 18 documents, particulars whereof had been set out in the list sent her on the 25th May, and in support of this summons filed an affidavit to the effect that these documents were relevant and in her possession.

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri with him Mr. A. K. Ghose for the Plaintiff.—The filing of an affidavit of documents is not conclusive and the question of the relevancy or materiality of the documents of which we seek discovery and inspection does not arise here. Under Or. XI, r. 18 (2) of the Code the Court has discretion to make such an order as is sought. Relies on Nrittomoye v. Subol Chandra (1).

Mr. B. C. Mitter for the Defendant.—Or. XI, r. 18 (2) is the same as English Or. XXXI, r. 18 (2) and according to practice in England once an affidavit of documents is filed the matter is closed. The other party is entitled to no further discovery or inspection. Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co. (2), Mogul Steamship Co. v. M'Gregor Gow & Co. (3), Amarendra Nath Chatterjee v. Kally Kissen Tagore (4); Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XI, p. 61.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—In this case I am asked to make an order upon the Defendant to disclose certain documents and to allow inspection of them. The suit is one in which the Plaintiff sues for commission in respect of a loan which was in fact never effected, but in respect of which the proposed borrower and lender were brought together. The Defendant against whom the order is sought has already filed an affidavit of documents under Or. 11, r. 18. The Plaintiff asks for discovery and inspection of the documents of which he has annexed a list to his affidavit.

He is met by an argument on the part of the Defendant that her affidavit of documents precludes any further application of this kind. This is an argument which I do not think is sustainable in this Court.

Looking at the policy of Or. 11 and the language of r. 18, paragraph 2, I do not think the Defendant is thereby protected from an obligation to an inspection of other documents that may be proved to be in her possession.

Several English cases have been cited before me to show that the Defendant's affidavit of documents is conclusive as to possession and also as to relevancy.

I am not prepared to say that the English practice is to be followed in all respects in this Court, but I have not had any authority cited before me which I consider obliges me to hold that a statement in the usual form that an affidavit of documents mentions all relevant documents is to be taken as an answer to a subsequent application under r. 18.

I therefore cannot suppose that the affidavit of documents under r. 13 precludes an application under a subsequent rule. I have considered the merits of the present application and I consider that most of the demands made in this case are of the nature of a fishing enquiry. Possession as regards the first item in the list annexed to the Plaintiff's affidavit is denied by the Defendant; and such denial as a matter of course must be accepted; the second item is clearly covered by the third. The engrossment there referred to shows that an offer had been made of the loan the negotiations of which form the subject-matter of the suit and I consider that the Plaintiff is entitled to inspection of No. 3; No. 4 has been waived; and as to No. 5, possession has been denied; Nos. 6 and 7, I hold to be privileged; No. 8, I hold to be covered by the affidavit of documents; as to No. 9, possession is denied; as to 11 and 13, I hold that they are not shown to be relevant; as to No. 12, inspection is waived; No. 14 is privileged; Nos. 10 and 15 are covered by the affidavit of documents; as to Nos. 16, 17 and 18, possession is denied.

The result, therefore, is that this application is granted only with regard to item No. 3. The question of costs reserved.

ABBAS and others,
Accused, 2nd Party, Petitioners,

v.

THE EMPEROR on the complaint of Prosunno Dutt.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 107, 145—Dispute as to possession of land—Likelihood of breach of the peace—Proceeding under latter section if only remedy—Successive proceedings under both sections—Proceeding under former against person not in possession.

The fact that there is a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of the peace does not deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction under sec. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where he is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity.

Whether after proceeding under sec. 107 of the Code it will be proper for the Magistrate to act under sec. 145 must depend on the circumstances of each case as it arises.

ABBAS v. THE EMPEROR.

The competence of the Magistrate to proceed under sec. 107 against persons not in possession must depend upon whether as against those persons the conditions specified in the section have been established.

This was a Reference to a Full Bench made on the 27th of April 1909 by a Division Bench (Caspersz and Ryves, JJ.) of certain points arising in the above Rule, which had been issued against an order of Mr. H. K. Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate of Naraingunj, dated the 23rd of September 1908, binding down the Petitioner to keep the peace, which order was confirmed by Mr. V. Dawson, Additional District Magistrate of Dacca, on the 24th of November 1908.

The material facts will appear from the Order of Reference.

THE ORDER OF REFERENCE was in the following terms :—

CASPERSZ and RYVES, JJ.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Dacca to show cause why the order of the Deputy Magistrate, dated the 23rd September 1910, binding down the Petitioners to keep the peace, which order was confirmed by the Additional District Magistrate, on the 24th November 1908, should not be set aside in accordance with the principles laid down in the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1).

The Petitioners are the members of the second party in a certain dispute for land, and the finding of both the lower Courts is that the land is in the possession of the first party, and, in this view of the matter, the Petitioners have been bound down to keep the peace.

The Additional District Magistrate observes, "The Petitioners' contention that sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, was inapplicable, as the subject-matter of the dispute was land, is of no weight : no doubt, the matter could have been more satisfactorily settled by proceedings under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, but the lower Court was in no way acting improperly in taking proceedings under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code. The only important ground of objection is the question whether the evidence before the lower Court was sufficient to justify the order complained against."

On these facts we think that, if the case cited in the rule, Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1), was correctly decided, the order under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be sustained. In that case there was a dispute relating to the possession of a jalkar, and the Magistrate passed an order directing Balajit Singh and others of the second party to execute bonds to keep the peace. Those persons moved the District Magistrate, but he refused to interfere. Thereupon, a Rule was obtained from this Court, and the matter was argued by learned Counsel on both sides. The learned Judges (Mitra and Fletcher, JJ.) relying upon an earlier decision, in the case of Dolegobind Chowdhury v. Dhanu Khan (2), set aside the order binding down the second party. They observed as follows :

Looking to the words used in sec. 107 and in sec. 145, we have no doubt that the proper course for the Magistrate in a case like this was to proceed under sec. 145 of the Code. The words in sec. 145 are mandatory. That section says :—"Whenever a Magistrate of the District . . . is satisfied, from a police-report or other information, that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water . . . he shall make an order in writing, etc., etc. Sec. 107 contains words which are discretionary, the Magistrate may institute proceedings binding down either of the parties." In that view of the matter, the Court set aside the order under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, and left it to the Magistrate, if he thought it necessary, that is to say, if there was still a likelihood of a breach of the peace, to draw up proceedings under sec. 145 of the Code.

It will be observed that Mitra and Fletcher, JJ., did not refer to any of the other cases cited by the learned Counsel in the course of their arguments. These we proceed to notice.

In Sheoraj Roy v. Chatter Roy (3), Ram-pini and Mookerjee, JJ., held that—"Where a dispute relating to possession of land is likely to cause a breach of the peace, a Magistrate has a discretion to proceed either under sec. 107 or under secs. 144 and 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code." A similar view had been adopted in the case of In the matter of the petition of Ekram Singh (4). There Mr. Justice Prinsep, in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed—"We find ourselves unable to pass any order on this application because we are not competent to direct proceedings to be taken under sec. 145, and this is the object that the Petitioner has in view." And the learned Judge agreed with the District Magistrate that the case was not a case for sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code only, and that where both parties contemplate a breach of the peace, it may be necessary to bind them both down. On the other hand, the same learned Judge, sitting with Mr. Justice Wilkins, in the case of Bejoy Singha Neogi

v. Empress (5), set aside an order requiring security from the parties to a dispute for land, and expressed the opinion that the proper course for the Magistrate to have taken was to have instituted proceedings under sec. 145.

In the next case, that relied upon by Mitra and Fletcher, JJ., in the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1), we mean, the case of Dolegobind Chowdhury v. Dhanu Khan (2), the ratio decidendi was that the order under sec. 107 had the evident effect of binding down only one of the parties to the dispute, leaving the other party free without any adjudication upon the question as to which of the parties was in possession. It does not appear whether, in the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1), there had been any adjudication as to the possession of the jalkar, and whether that adjudication was in favour of the first party who were not bound down under sec. 107. But it would appear that the rights of the respective parties to the jalkar had been gone into on the basis of the numerous documents filed. If we are correct in this surmise, the case of Dolegobind Chowdhury v. Dhanu Khan (1) is not an authority for the proposition enunciated in the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1).

The next case is that of Bidhu Bhusan Chatterji v. Anvodi Churn Kanangui (6) which, also, follows the case of Dolegobind Chowdhury v. Dhanu Khan (2). But we observe that here also the question of possession was gone into by the Magistrate and was decided against the second party who were accordingly bound down under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code.

ABBAS v. THE EMPEROR.

In Balai Mahto v. Nobin Manjhi (7), Stevens and Harington, JJ., without referring to any of the authorities, held, on general principles, that when "the apprehension of a breach of the peace was contingent upon the attempt on either side to exercise acts of possession in the disputed land, that would have been very good ground for establishing possession of one party or the other." Consequently, the order binding down both the parties to keep the peace was set aside, though the Magistrate was given liberty to take fresh proceedings according to law.

The next case to which we shall refer is King-Emperor v. Basiruddin Mollah (8) which was referred to by Mr. Justice Fletcher in the course of the arguments in Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1). There was a difference of opinion between the learned Judges in that case and the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerjee, the third Judge who agreed with Mr. Justice Harington, was to the following effect:—"After going through the papers, I am of opinion that, although the mere fact of a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace being a dispute relating to the possession of land may not be sufficient to preclude the Magistrate from taking proceedings under sec. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and to confine his action to a proceeding under sec. 145, yet having regard to the facts found by the Deputy Magistrate in this case, it cannot be said that a case sufficient for the taking of security under sec. 107 has been established." In the opinion of Mr. Justice Brett, on the point of law with which we are now dealing, the Magistrate is not deprived of jurisdiction under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, in a case in which a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace relating to land.

The learned Judges in Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1), relied on the wording of the two secs. 145 and 107; but, with the greatest respect for their opinion, we are unable to appreciate the distinction that they draw. Sec. 145 is so far mandatory that, when a Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land, he shall make an order in writing. That describes the procedure he must invariably adopt; but, in our opinion, it does not lay down any hard and fast rule that, when he is so satisfied, he must take action under the one section and not under the other.

In this conclusion, we are supported by the case of Sheoraj Roy v. Chatter Roy (3), where the learned Judges (Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ.) pointed out that the case of King-Emperor v. Basiruddin Mollah (8) had practically overruled the case of Saroda Prosad Singh v. Emperor (9).

Considerable difficulty would arise if it were held that the proceedings must of necessity be taken under sec. 145 where the dispute concerns land. This may be inferred from the circumstances mentioned in the case of Makhan Lal Roy v. Barada Kanta Roy (10). It was there said that—"proceedings under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be instituted with respect to a dispute between two parties having joint rights to the land in dispute, each claiming exclusive possession thereof;" and it was held that, in such a case, the proper procedure was to bind down both the parties under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code. But if the decision in Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1) is good law, then the order passed in the case of Makhan Lal Roy v. Barada Kanta Roy (10) is clearly wrong, because sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, has no application where a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace is likely to arise out of the holding of land.

We do not think that the Legislature intended to deprive a Magistrate of all power to bind down the parties, or one of them, to keep the peace in regard to those numerous land disputes where the parties are likely to fight over possession or the incidents of possession of land in which they have joint interests.

Upon a review of the authorities, we are unable to follow the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1); and, in the conflict of decisions, we think it necessary, and this course will also be very convenient for the guidance of the mofussil officers, to refer the questions involved to a Full Bench of this Court.

The three points upon which we would invite the opinion of the Full Bench are these :—

Firstly, if there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land, is the Magistrate bound to take action under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, or is he at liberty to proceed under sec. 107, either exclusively, or in addition to proceedings under sec. 145?

Secondly, in the circumstances mentioned, is it competent to the Magistrate, in taking action under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code only, to bind down the members of that party which, upon a summary adjudication as to possession, he finds are not in possession of the subject of dispute? and Thirdly, was the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1) correctly decided?

Notice will be issued to the Opposite Party in this Rule before the hearing of the Reference.

Babu Harendra Narayan Mitter, for the Petitioner, draws attention to the fact that both sections occur in the portion of the Code which deals with the prevention of offences. But sec. 145 occurs in one of the 3 chapters where the method laid down is by suspending people's civil rights. Sec. 145 provides a special jurisdiction with reference to land disputes, traceable so far back as 1793 in Reg. XLIX of that year. The Legislature having prescribed a particular method of terminating a dispute concerning land, the intention should be presumed to have been that this method only should be adopted.

I do not contend that the word "shall" in sec. 145 is actually mandatory, but it undoubtedly imposes a judicial duty. Sec. 107 no doubt is very general in its terms. But in construing the different parts of an Act, when a specific matter is dealt with in a special manner, this special procedure should alone be applied. Sec. 145 prescribes such a special procedure for land disputes. Sec. 197 moreover is limited in its application to wrongful acts and would apparently not cover all cases of land disputes. The word "wrongful" was not in the section as originally framed but was added by reason of the decision in Kashi Chunder v. Hurkishore (11).

sec. 107 in cases of land dispute would ordinarily be very serious to the parties and the Legislature could not have contemplated its application to such disputes. For instance a person who has been ousted only 3 days ago may be bound down. See proviso to cl. (4) to sec. 145. Refers to Queen v. Mohesh (12), Dolegobind Chowdhury v. Dhanu Khan (2), Driver v. Chatter Roy (3), Baisnab Das v. Emperor (16), Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1). Except in two cases the Court actually set aside the order under sec. 107 and held that sec. 145 proceeding would be more proper. Refers also to Mahadeo v. Bisa (17), Emperor v. Ram Baron (18), Debi Prasad v. Sheodut Rai (19), Ramacharlu v. Emperor (20).

The practical inconveniences of applying the provisions of sec. 107 are many. A zemindar may replace the gomastha who has been bound down by another.

The likelihood of breach of the peace is never effectually got rid of except by proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C.

To bind down both parties is bad enough. To bind down one may be worse. Besides the question of possession will have to be gone into in a proceeding under sec. 107. So why not proceed directly under sec. 145? Power of attachment given by sec. 145 would be very useful. By binding down both parties the same object may, to some extent, be attained. But it will surely not promote the ends of justice, to overlook the real cause of dispute and avoid deciding it.

There is in our opinion no conflict between secs. 107 and 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, so that the fact that there is a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of the peace does not deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction under sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where he is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility, or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility.

Whether after proceeding under sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it will be proper for a Magistrate to act under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code must depend on the circumstances of each case as it arises. It may be that after an order under sec. 107 no likelihood of a breach of the peace would continue.

The competence of the Magistrate to proceed under sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against persons not in possession must depend upon whether as against those persons the conditions specified in the section have been established.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 8—Failure of tenant to raise crop—Suit by landlord for recovery of value of his share, if lies in Small Cause Court—"Rent."—"Damages for use and occupation."

Where a landlord brought a suit against his tenant claiming damages for wilfully omitting to raise crops whereby the Plaintiff was deprived of his share thereof:

Held—That inasmuch as the share of the produce to be received by the landlord was ascertained before the commencement of the suit and the term for which the land was let out had not terminated, the claim was in substance one for recovery of rent and the suit would not lie in the Small Cause Court.

This was a Reference by W. H. Vincent, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Mozufferpur, dated the 1st of May 1911, in Suit No. 13 of 1911 of the Court of the 1st Munsif of Mozufferpur.

The Reference was in the following terms:—

"On 30th January 1911 Lalji Panday and others brought a suit in the Court of 1st Munsif, Mozufferpur, exercising Small Cause Court Jurisdiction, against Defendants for damages for the use and occupation of certain lands. The Munsif on the 22nd March 1911 on the objection of Defendants held that the suit was not triable by Small Cause Court and returned the plaint to Plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court.

"I have heard learned pleader in this case and examined the plaint. In my opinion this is not a suit for rent but for damages for use and occupation of certain land and if so it is cognisable by a Court of Small Causes [see Kunjobehary v. Madhub Chundra (1) and Kali Krishna v. Isatonnissa Khatun (2)].

"In these circumstances I think that the order of the Munsif, dated 22nd March 1911, should be set aside and I forward the records for the order of the High Court. Necessary orders as to the costs of this Reference before this and the High Court may also be passed."

This is a Reference under Rule 7 of Order 46 of the Code of 1908 by the District Judge of Mozufferpur and raises questions of considerable nicety and importance.

It appears that on the 30th January 1911 Lalji Pandey and others as Plaintiffs instituted a suit in the Court of the Small Cause Court Judge of Mozufferpur against the Defendants, Barhamdeo Panday and others, for recovery of what was described as damages for use and occupation of certain lands. The substance of the case for the Plaintiffs was that they were the superior landlords of the disputed lands, that the Defendants were in occupation and were bound to cultivate the lands, that they had omitted wilfully to raise any crops and that consequently during the years 1315 to 1318, the Plaintiffs were deprived of their share of the crops. The Plaintiffs, therefore, sought to recover Rs. 29-10-3 as the money value of what would have been their share of the produce which might have been grown on the land. The Defendants entered appearance and on their objection on the 22nd March 1911 the Small Cause Court Judge held that the suit was not triable as a Small Cause Court suit. He, therefore, returned the plaint to the Plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. The Plaintiffs thereupon applied to the District Judge for revision of this order on the ground that the nature of the suit had been misunderstood by the Small Cause Court Judge and that it was as a matter of law cognisable by that Court. The learned Judge has made a Reference to this Court, and has expressed an opinion that upon the decisions in Kunjobehary v. Madhub Chundra (1) and Kali Krishna v. Isatonnissa Khatun (2), the view taken by the Small Cause Court Judge could not be supported.

At the hearing of the Reference the authorities on the subject have been clearly analysed and placed before us with great care by the learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs while the case for the Defendants (who have not entered appearance) has been presented by Moulvi Mahomed Mustafa Khan who at the request of the Court undertook to argue the case as amicus curiæ; and we are indebted to him for the very full and able argument that he has addressed to us.

The question for decision is, whether the suit is excluded from the cognisance of the Small Cause Court by reason of Art. 8 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887. That article provides that a Small Cause Court shall not take cognisance of a suit for recovery of rent other than house rent. On behalf of the Plaintiffs it has been contended that the suit is for the recovery of damages and is consequently cognisable in a Court of Small Causes. On behalf of the Defendants the contrary view has been presented that if the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover any sum, that sum is in the nature of rent, and a claim in respect thereof must be enforced in the ordinary Civil Court.

In a case of this description the essential point to be ascertained is the status of the Defendants. If the Defendants are servants or labourers employed by the Plaintiffs, the suit must be treated as one for damages. On the other hand, if the Defendants are tenants, it is conceivable that the claim may be one for rent. This fundamental distinction was pointed out by this Court in Sreenath Dutt v. Dwary Dhalli (3). In that case, it was ruled that where the cultivator is a mere servant of the landlord, a suit for damages will lie against him in a Small Cause Court, but if the cultivator is a tenant to whom the landlord has sublet the land, a suit for non-fulfilment of the contract by the tenant will lie under the Rent Act. This principle appears to have been recognised in the case of Kade Mandul v. Ahad Ali Molla (4), and if the distinction is borne in mind it is not difficult to reconcile the cases mentioned in Shoma Mehta v. Rajani Biswas (5). In this case it was pointed out that a suit for produce rent or its money value is a suit for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and not a suit for damages for breach of contract and is, therefore, not cognisable by a Small Cause Court. The learned Judges observed that this view was in accord with that taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Tajuddin Khan v. Ram Parshad (6), and that the previous decisions of this Court in the cases of Luchmun Pershad v. Hoolas Mahtom (7), Mullik Amanutali v. Ukloo Pasi (8), Jumnadoss v. Gawsee Miah (9) did not militate against this view. We, therefore, start with the position that the status of the Defendants has first to be determined, because if they are not tenants the claim against them cannot possibly be for rent, although it does not follow that if they are tenants, the claim must necessarily be for rent.

In the case before us, the plaint taken as a whole indicates, we think, that the Plaintiffs have treated the Defendants as tenants. No doubt, they stated that they called upon the Respondents to quit the land when they found that they omitted to cultivate it in due course and that the Defendants neither quitted the land nor brought it under cultivation. But it is to be observed that the claim has been laid in respect of the crops for four years and it has further been restricted to the one-half share of the whole produce which is explicitly described as the malik's share. These circumstances indicate that the Plaintiffs had treated the Defendants as tenants. If their case was that the tenancy had been terminated, the suit ought to have been brought for recovery of the value of the entire crop on the footing that the Defendants were trespassers in occupation and in that event the claim for any period in excess of three years would at once have been barred by the plea of limitation. If then the Defend-

It has been suggested by the learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs that the suit is one for damages for use and occupation. In our opinion, that view cannot be supported. A suit for damages for use and occupation can be maintained against a tenant who has occupied the premises by the permission or sufferance of the landlord, though the terms of the tenancy have not been settled with precision [Rochester v. Pierce (10), Kanailal v. Nitai Chund (11)]. In these circumstances, the law implies a contract or promise by the tenant to pay to the landlord a reasonable sum for such use and occupation. [Hiiter v. Silcox (12) and Churchward v. Ford (13)]. In the case before us, if the allegations of the Plaintiffs are accepted, the terms of the tenancy have been settled with perfect accuracy. Their allegations are that the tenants agreed to cultivate the land and to pay them a half-share of the produce that might be raised by due diligence. Consequently, although in the event of the failure of the tenant to deliver one half-share of the produce, the Court may be called upon to investigate the quantity and the money value of the crops, there is no uncertainty as to the terms of the contract between the parties. It follows, therefore, that the suit cannot be treated as one for damages for use and occupation. This clears the way for determination of the question, whether the suit is one for rent. Now the definition of rent, as given in sec. 3, cl. (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is, whatever, is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. It is clear therefore that the share of the crops which the Defendants are alleged to have undertaken to deliver to the Plaintiffs was rent. They have failed to deliver the crops, and the Plaintiffs seek to recover the money value thereof. Is the nature of the relief which the Plaintiffs seek altered by the failure of the Defendants to perform their part of the contract? In our opinion the answer ought to be in the negative. The learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs did not dispute that if the Defendants had grown the crops in due course and had appropriated them for their own purposes, a suit by the landlords to recover the value of their share of the crops could be treated only as a suit for rent. But he urges that the matter is different when the Defendants fail to raise the crops. We are unable to accept the suggested distinction as well-founded on principle. The position of the landlord is precisely the same whether the failure of the tenants to deliver the crops is due to the fact that they have misappropriated the crops themselves or have failed by reason of want of diligence to raise them at all. In either event, the landlords are entitled to be indemnified and the money which they recover from the tenants represents the compensation paid by the tenants to them on account of the use and occupation of the land held : that is, it is rent. It is not necessary* for us to hold that whenever the tenant fails to raise the crops contrary to the terms of his contract, the sole remedy of the landlord is to recover the value of the crops. The landlord may sometimes have an additional remedy ; for instance, if by reason of the failure of the tenant to cultivate the land, the land itself is deteriorated in value or if it relapses into jungle, the landlord may well be entitled to claim damages and such damages may, in the contingency mentioned, very well represent the costs of reclamation. The answer to the question, therefore, whether the suit is one for damages or for rent must depend when the nature of the claim put forward. If what the Plaintiffs claim is the money value of the crops to be delivered by the tenants to the landlords on account of use and occupation of the land held by them, its true nature, in our opinion, is rent. This view is in accord with that taken by this Court in the case of Panchu v. Nagendra (14) in which it was ruled that the money value of services not performed by the tenant is in the nature of rent and a claim in respect thereof can be enforced only in the ordinary Civil Courts. The learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs has placed much reliance upon the case of Vira Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (15). That case, however, is of no assistance to him. There the Defendant had ceased to be a tenant and the suit brought against him was for damages for use and occupation of the land held by him as a trespasser. Suit of that description is obviously cognisable in a Court of Small Causes, and a similar principle appears to have been accepted in Bhoobun Mohun v. Chandernath (16). In the case before us, as we have already explained, the tenancy has not yet been terminated. The Defendants are still tenants in occupation and consequently the sum claimed by the Plaintiffs, if recoverable at all, is recoverable only as rent and not as damages for use and occupation.

The answer, therefore, which we give* to the Reference is that the view taken by pauper. The Plaintiff is a shebait. He has brought this suit for recovery of endowed property against one who claims to be the alienee of that property against three of his co-*shebait*s who purport to have aliened that property and a fifth person and whose capacity in this suit is not very clear. The Plaintiff is neither in his personal capacity nor as shebait possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint. Therefore he is a pauper within the meaning of Or. XXXIII of the C. P. C. Being a pauper he is entitled to sue as such and is not disentitled by the mere fact that the *shebait*s whom he is compelled to sue may be possessed of sufficient means for payment of the prescribed fee. In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law : and the Rule should be made absolute with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170
(3)—Previous purchaser not made Defendant if may deposit.

A person who had purchased a permanent tenure long prior to the institution of the suit in which a decree for rent was obtained by the landlord is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Such a person was permitted to, make the deposit when it appeared that previous deposits made by him were withdrawn by the landlord.

JOTINDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. DURGA DABE (1) approved.

RADHIKA NATH SARKAR v. RAKHAL RAJ GAYEN (2), JUGAL MOHINI DAS v. SRINATH CHATTERJEE (3) distinguished.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of September 1911, against an order of the Munsif of Nilphamari, dated the 7th of July 1911, holding that the claimant (Petitioner) had no right to make a deposit under sec. 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the deposit made by her was invalid and of no effect whatever and directing that the sale of the property do take place.

The facts as found by the Munsif were as follows :—

Rani Brindarani, the Petitioner, made an application for deposit of the decreta amount and actually deposited the same on the allegation that she was interested in the jote proclaimed for sale in execution of a rent decree obtained by the Opposite Party. The decree holder objected to the deposit on the ground that the Rani had no interest in the property voidable on the sale, within the meaning of sec. 170. The jote was described by both parties as a mourasi joke. Litigations had taken place with respect to the jote up to the High Court and it had been found that the jote in question was a permanent tenure and also an entire tenure and not any part of one. According to the allegations of the Rani she purchased the tenure, from the judgment-debtors in 1306, B. S., that she was not affected by the decree passed against the old tenant for rent accrued due subsequently to her purchase." The Munsif held upon these allegations that she was not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, relying on Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Durga Dabe (1). He further held that the decree-holder was not debarred from raising objections to the deposit now because of his having withdrawn amounts deposited on previous occasions.

In this view he dismissed the application. The Petitioner thereupon moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutt and Hem Chandra Mitter for the Petitioner.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question for determination in this Rule is whether the Petitioner is entitled to make a deposit under the provisions of sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Petitioner, Rani Brindarani Choudhrani, purchased a permanent tenure of the judgment-debtors in the year 1306, that is, long before the period in respect of which the arrears of rent have now been decreed. In that view, and having regard to the authority of the case of Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Durga Dabe (1), the Munsif has directed the tenure to be sold and refused to consider the deposit actually made by the Rani as good and valid deposit.

The Petitioner, manifestly, is not a judgment-debtor within the intent of sec. 170 (3). The arrears of rent have been decreed as due from other persons against whom the landlord brought his suit. The Petitioner, also, does not represent the judgment-debtors because the tenure was transferred before the decree made in the rent suit. For the same reason, the Petitioner cannot be said to have any interest voidable on the sale to be held in execution of the rent decree. That decree does not affect the interest, if any, of persons who were not parties thereto. The tenure is not an encumbrance on itself, it has been transferred in its entirety to the Petitioner. We, therefore, think that the case relied on by the Munsif justifies his order so far as it holds that the Petitioner cannot bring her case within the strict language of sec. 170 (3).

Our attention has been called to two other cases on this point. But in Radhika Nath Sarkar v. Rakhal Raj Gayen (2), the decision in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Durga Dabe (1) was not cited or considered while in Jugal Mohini Dasi v. Srinath Chatterjee (3) the learned Judges thought the observations in the earlier case were obiter. They, however, adopted the same procedure and permitted the deposit to be made on the ground that, on a previous occasion, the landlord had withdrawn a sum similarly paid in by the claimant under sec. 170 (3) of the Act. We see no reason why the Rani, the Petitioner before us, should not be granted a similar indulgence.

It appears that, on the 9th October 1909, the Petitioner was allowed to make a deposit of the money then due and decreed "at her own risk." That was done and the decree-holder took out the sum deposited. Again, on the 12th March 1910, the same procedure was observed though nothing was then said as to the deposit being made subject to all just exceptions. The landlord withdrew the money, as before.

In these circumstances, it seems to us that the decree-holder having accepted previous deposits and there being a contest between the parties as to the composition of the tenure concerned, we are justified in interfering.

The order of the Munsif, dated the 7th July 1911, is set aside. The Petitioner deposited the money but there is an order for refund. If the money has been taken back the Petitioner may make the deposit as prayed. On such deposit being made within a time to be fixed by the Munsif, the sale will not be held, otherwise the proceedings will continue. If no refund has been made, the Munsif will pass the necessary orders for due appropriation of the sum paid in, and stay the sale.

The Rule is made absolute with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at at 2 gold mohurs.

REPORTS (See Index.)

IT GIVES US GREAT PLEASURE TO NOTICE THAT two of the senior Judges of the Calcutta High Court were honoured with the Knighthood at the Co-ronation Durbar at Delhi. Of the Judges so honoured, Mr. Justice Brett is the senior-most Civilian Judge of the Calcutta High Court, and is also one of the ablest, most experienced and at the same time one of the most industrious occupants of the Bench. Of Mr. Justice Mookerjee, little need be said; for, in the volume and quality of his work and in encyclopædic learning he has hardly any equal. We heartily congratulate both the honourable Judges for the honour that has been so deservedly conferred on them by His Majesty the King-Emperor.

IN WELCOMING THE KING-EMPEROR ON HIS LANDing in Bombay, we expressed a hope that His Majesty's Proclamation at the Durbar of 12th December will be "memorable in the history of India and mark a new era in the constitutional progress of the country, (see ante, p. 18) and so it has. We record, therefore, with profound pleasure our most heartfelt gratitude that His Majesty's pronouncement has come up to our most sanguine expectations. Quite apart from the ecstatic joy with which the Re-union of Bengal under its long-deferred status of a Presidency Government, has been hailed throughout the country, we have no less pleasure in pointing out to our fellow subjects throughout India that the Speech from the Throne with which the Durbar was opened is of abiding constitutional importance to the whole of our Indian Empire. We had ventured to suggest in these columns (ante, p. 18) that the Great Indian Charter of 1858 should be confirmed at every Coronation Durbar in India. Although Lord Lytton at the first Coronation Durbar at Delhi had in a manner re-affirmed it in his opening speech, yet Lord Curzon thought fit almost to ignore it at the next Coronation Durbar held in celebration of the accession of His late Imperial Majesty Edward VII. We, therefore, attach the utmost constitutional importance to the following closing paragraphs of the King-Emperor's most sympathetic speech which confirm the "rights and privileges" secured to us by the Magna Charta of India which as we have explained before (ante, p. 18) takes the place of the Coronation Oath in India:—

Finally, I rejoice to have this opportunity of renewing in my own person those assurances which have been given you by my revered predecessors of the maintenance of your rights and privileges and of my earnest concern for your welfare, peace and contentment.

May the Divine favour of Providence watch over my people and assist me in my utmost endeavour to promote their happiness and prosperity.

WE OBSERVED THIS DAY LAST WEEK THAT HIS Majesty the King-Emperor has come to this country "on a mission of peace and good-will to the people which will strengthen the bonds of union between the Sovereign and the subject and spread contentment in the land." On the following day, amongst other momentous Durbar boons, His Imperial Majesty in person announced the boon of boons to the Bengalee people that the violent disruption of their province is to be healed and that henceforth the whole of the Bengalee-speaking population are to be placed under one administration and that the Province is to be raised to the status of a Presidency Government. Since the Partition of the Lower Provinces of Bengal was proposed and effected in 1905, we have been foremost in explaining without passion or prejudice our statutory claims to reunion and our constitutional right to the status of a Presidency Government. It affords us therefore unbounded and unique pleasure to find our claims recognised and our right vindicated by a supreme act of justice, wisdom and statesmanship of a most sympathetic Sovereign with the support of his wise Ministers and on the advice of a just and courageous Pro-consul. The whole of the unrest and half the mischief of the last six years is attributable to the lack of sympathy and want of courage in our administrators to remedy an obvious and admitted wrong. It can serve no good purpose now to rake up the bitter memories of the past. Let us forget and forgive the shortcomings both of the administration and of the people and drown all our differences in the waves of joy and hopes that the Royal message of peace and good-will has aroused in every heart and which has swept away all our sorrows and pangs. There is but one duty before us now and that is to offer to Their Most Gracious Majesties the King-Emperor and the Queen-Empress our profoundest homage, our devoted loyalty and our earnest prayer for their long life and the continuance of their sympathetic concern for the well-being of the teeming millions of this wide and ancient Empire.

WE ARE NOT PREPARED TO CAVIL AT THE present amount at the projected re-transfer of the capital of the Empire from this city to its historic and ancient abode, the Indraprastha of the most pious and powerful of Hindu monarchs and the Delhi of the Great Moghuls. We believe, and we shall briefly indicate below our reasons for our belief, that the trade, commerce and the business activities of this the premier city in India and the second city in the British Empire, will not suffer in the least by the transference of the seat of the Imperial Government to an inland place like Delhi. The growth and expansion of the summer capitals of Simla and Darjeeling within the memory of the present generation have not stood in the way of the enormous expansion of shop-keepers' trade in Calcutta within recent years. The departure of the migratory body of officials who live in this city for four months and rent houses only for the winter season, has not in the past and will not in the future tie the hands of land speculators or people possessed of a building mania in the matter of putting up new mansions and houses.

WE VENTURE TO THINK THAT WITH THE PROSPECT of the operations of the Calcutta Improvement Trust in view, building and land speculation would develop, though within more rational and legitimate lines and landlords would henceforth be able to secure more reasonable but steady rent from tenants who would reside in Calcutta all through the year. That the officials would sooner or later have their permanent quarters on lands already acquired has been well-known for a long time. Although landlords are sometimes obliged to charge high rents from their temporary or migratory tenants yet they are not much benefited by it, for after a long vacancy they have to spend a good portion of the rent in making the house tenantable for the next season. Thoughtless building speculators have of late also been disfiguring some of the beautiful suburbs of Calcutta by destroying gardens and trees and setting up in their places plaster and mortar abominations. It will be a distinct gain to the health and joy of this "City of Palaces" if such building craze suffers some check from the transference of the Imperial capital from Calcutta.

THIS TRANSFER WOULD NOT ALSO IN THE SLIGHTEST degree disturb any of the other industrial and economic conditions of Calcutta that have made it through a long series of years the commercial capital of India or arrest the normal expansion of commerce in any way. Should the raising of the Province to the status of a Presidency Government secure to us provincial autonomy, as has been assured by the Imperial Government, we may reasonably expect that such autonomy will bring in its train greater economic freedom and promote greater industrial enterprise. Calcutta being also the centre of great education and culture, the occupation of the professional classes will continue to flourish as before and the public opinion of Bengal will lose none of its importance over either the Government of India or people outside Bengal. The representatives of Bengal in the Imperial Council, no matter where the Council may meet, will continue to represent the progressive views of their constituency and thus directly and indirectly influence their colleagues in Council both official and non-official. It would therefore be an utter waste of energy on our part to fret over the transference of the capital and engage in any futile attempt to bring it back especially when the rest of India thoroughly approves of it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CORONATION DURBAR AT DELHI.

It is with genuine feelings of thankfulness and satisfaction that I stand here to-day among you.

This year has been to the Queen-Empress and myself one of many great ceremonies, and of unusual, though happy, burden and toil. But in spite of time and distance the grateful recollections of our last visit to India have drawn us again to the land which we then learned to love, and we started with bright hopes on our long journey to revisit the country in which we had already met the kindness of a home.

In doing so I have fulfilled the wish expressed in my message of last July, to announce to you in person my Coronation, celebrated on the 22nd of June in Westminster Abbey, when, by the grace of God, the Crown of my forefathers was placed on my head with solemn form and ancient ceremony.

By my presence with the Queen-Empress I am also anxious to show our affection for the loyal Princes and faithful peoples of India, and how dear to our hearts is the welfare and happiness of the Indian Empire. It is moreover my desire that those who could not be present at the solemnity of the Coronation should have the opportunity of taking part in its commemoration at Delhi.

It is a sincere pleasure and gratification to myself and to the Queen-Empress to behold this vast assemblage and in it my Governors and trusty officials, my great Princes, the representatives of the peoples, and deputations from the military forces of my Indian Dominions. I shall receive in person with heartfelt satisfaction the homage and allegiance which they loyally desire to render.

I am deeply impressed with the thought that a spirit of sympathy and affectionate good-will unites the Princes and the people with me on this historic occasion. In token of these sentiments I have decided to commemorate the event of my Coronation by certain marks of my special favour and consideration, and this I will later on to-day cause to be announced by my Governor-General to the assembly.

Finally, I rejoice to have this opportunity of renewing in my own person those assurances which have been given you by my revered predecessors of the maintenance of your rights and privileges, and of my earnest concern for your welfare, peace, and contentment.

May the Divine favour of Providence watch over my people and assist me in my utmost endeavour to promote their happiness and prosperity. To all present, feudatories and subjects, I tender our loving greeting.

THE

TRANSCERENCE OF THE CAPITAL TO DELHI

AND THE

ANNULMENT OF THE PARTITION OF BENGAL

AT THE CLOSE OF THE CORONATION DURBAR.

We are pleased to announce to Our people that on the advice of Our Ministers and after consultation with Our Governor-General-in-Council, we have decided upon the transfer of the seat of the Government of India from Calcutta to the ancient capital of Delhi, and simultaneously, and as a consequence of that transfer, the creation at as early a date as possible of a Governorship for the Presidency of Bengal, of a new Lieutenant-Governorship in Council administering the areas of Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa, and of a Chief Commissionership of Assam, with such administrative changes and redistribution of boundaries as our Governor-General-in-Council, with the approval of Our Secretary of State for India in Council, may, in due course, determine.

It is our earnest desire that these changes may conduce to the better administration of India and the greater prosperity and happiness of Our beloved people.

DESPATCH RELATING TO THE TRANSFERENCE OF THE CAPITAL TO DELHI AND
THE ANNULMENT OF THE PARTITION OF BENGAL.

We publish below only the important reasons for the momentous administrative changes announced at the Coronation Durbar at Delhi.

The maintenance of British rule in India depends on the ultimate supremacy of the Governor-General in Council, and the Indian Councils Act of 1909 itself bears testimony to the impossibility of allowing matters of vital concern to be decided by a majority of non-official votes in the Council, and the question will be how this devolution of power can be conceded without impairing the supreme authority of the Governor-General-in-Council. The only possible solution of the difficulty would appear to be gradually to give the Provinces a larger measure of self-government until at last India would consist of a number of administrations autonomous in all provincial affairs, with the Government of India above them all and possessing power to interfere in case of misgovernment, ordinarily restricting their functions to matters of Imperial concern. In order that this consummation may be attained, it is essential that the Supreme Government should not be associated with any particular Provincial Government. The removal of the Government of India from Calcutta is, therefore, a measure which will, in our opinion, materially facilitate the growth of local self-government on sound and safe lines. It is generally recognised that the capital of a great central Government should be separate and independent, and effect has been given to this principle in the United States, Canada and Australia.

The administrative advantages of the transfer would be scarcely less valuable than the political. In the first place the development of the Legislative Council has made the withdrawal of the Supreme Council and the Government of India from the influence of local opinion a matter of ever-increasing urgency. Secondly, events in Bengal are apt to re-act on the Viceroy and the Government of India to whom the responsibility for them is often wrongly attributed. The connection is bad for the Government of India, bad for the Bengal Government, and unfair to the other Provinces, whose representatives view with great and increasing jealousy the predominance of Bengal. Further, public opinion in Calcutta is by no means always the same as that which obtains elsewhere in India, and it is undesirable that the Government of India should be subject exclusively to its influence.

The only serious opposition to the transfer which may be anticipated, we think, will come from the European commercial section of Calcutta, who might, we fear, not regard the creation of a Governorship of Bengal as altogether adequate compensation for the withdrawal of Calcutta as the capital of India, but we rely upon their patriotism to reconcile them to a measure which would greatly contribute to the welfare of the Indian Empire. The Bengalis might not, of course, be favourably disposed to the proposal if it stood alone, for it will entail the loss of some of the influence which they now exercise, owing to the fact that Calcutta is the head-quarters of the Government of India. But as we hope presently to show, they should be reconciled to the change by other features of our scheme which are specially designed to give satisfaction to Bengali sentiment. In these circumstances we do not think that they would be so manifestly unreasonable as to oppose it, and, if they did, might confidently expect that their opposition would raise no echo in the rest of India.

Various circumstances have forced upon us the conviction that the bitterness of feeling engendered by the Partition of Bengal is very widespread and unyielding, and that we are by no means at an end of the troubles which have followed upon that measure. Eastern Bengal and Assam has no doubt benefited greatly by the partition, and the Mahomedans of the Province, who form a large majority of the population, are loyal and contented; but the resentment amongst the Bengalis in both Provinces of Bengal, who hold most of the land, fill the professions, and exercise a preponderating influence in public affairs, is as strong as ever, though somewhat less vocal.

The opposition to the Partition of Bengal was at first based mainly on sentimental grounds, but as we shall show later in discussing the proposed modification of the Partition, since the enlargement of the Legislative Councils, and especially of the representative claim in them, the grievance of the Bengalis has become much more real and tangible, and is likely to increase instead of to diminish. Every one with any true desire for the peace and prosperity of this country must wish to find some manner of appeasement, if it is in any way possible to do so.

A settlement to be satisfactory and conclusive must (1) provide convenient administrative units, (2) satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the Bengalis, (3) duly safeguard the interests of the Mahomedans of Eastern Bengal, and generally conciliate Mahomedan sentiment, and (4) be so clearly based upon broad grounds of political and administrative expediency as to negative any presumption that it has been exacted by clamour or agitation.

In pre-reform scheme days the non-official element in these Councils was small. The representation of the people has now been carried a long step forward, and in the Legislative Councils of both the provinces of Bengal and Eastern Bengal, the Bengalis find themselves in a minority, being outnumbered in the one by Beharis and Ooriyas and in the other by the Mahomedans of Eastern Bengal and the inhabitants of Assam.

As matters now stand the Bengalis can never exercise in either province that influence to which they consider themselves entitled by reason of their numbers, wealth, and culture. This is a substantial grievance, which will be all the more keenly felt in the course of time as the representative character of the Legislative Councils increases and with it the influence which these assemblies exercise upon the conduct of public affairs. There is, therefore, only too much reason to fear that, instead of dying down, the bitterness of feeling will become more and more acute.

It is certain, however, that it is in part at any rate responsible for the growing estrangement which has now unfortunately assumed a very serious character in many parts of the country between Mahomedans and Hindus. We are not without hope that a modification of the Partition which we now propose will in some degree, at any rate, alleviate this most regrettable antagonism.

The results anticipated from the Partition have not been altogether realized, and the scheme as designed and executed could only be justified by success. Although much good work has been done in Eastern Bengal and Assam and the Mahomedans of that Province have reaped the benefit of a sympathetic administration closely in touch with them, those advantages have been in great measure counterbalanced by the violent hostility which the Partition has aroused amongst the Bengalis for the reasons we have already indicated. We feel bound to admit that the Bengalis are labouring under a sense of real injustice, which we believe it would be sound policy to remove without further delay.

It must also be borne in mind that the interests of Mahomedans will be safeguarded by the representation which they enjoy in the Legislative Councils, while as regards representation on local bodies they will be in the same position as at present.

We are also convinced that nothing short of a full Governorship would satisfy the aspirations of the Bengalis and of the Mahomedans of Eastern Bengal. We may add that, as in the case of the Governorships of Madras and Bombay, the appointment would be open to members of the Indian Civil Service, although, no doubt in practice, the Governor will usually be recruited from England. On the other hand, one very grave and obvious objection has been raised in the past to the creation of a Governorship for Bengal, which we should fully share, were it not disposed of by the proposal which constitutes the key-stone of our scheme. Unquestionably a most undesirable situation might, and would quite possibly, arise if a Governor-General of India and a Governor of Bengal, both selected from the ranks of English public men, were to reside in the same capital and be liable to be brought in various ways into regrettable antagonism or rivalry.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—GUARDIANS' CONTRACTS.

The decision of the Judicial Committee in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri, which was reported at p. 74 of the current volume, will have an important bearing on certain recent developments of the Hindu law which were finding expression in judicial decisions in this country. The question actually decided by the Judicial Committee was whether a minor is bound by a contract made on his behalf and for his benefit by his guardian, so that specific performance may be obtained of such contract at his instance when he has attained majority.

Did such a question arise in England, the answer would hardly admit of any doubt, for there a guardian makes himself personally responsible for all contracts entered into or wrongs done by him in the management of the infant's affairs. The rule is not limited to guardians of infants only but applies to all persons occupying a fiduciary position. The trustee (using that expression to cover all descriptions of fiduciary relationship) has no doubt his remedies in respect of obligations thus incurred towards strangers; he has the right to be indemnified out of the trust estate in regard to damages suffered by him in the reasonable discharge of his functions as trustee. In other words, the trustee alone is directly responsible to strangers for all acts done by him in the management of the trust estate, but he is given the chance of reimbursing himself out of the trust estate whenever he succeeds in establishing that a particular act was done reasonably in the discharge of the duties of his office. English law further allows the stranger in fit cases to proceed against the trust estate by being put in the place of the trustee and availing himself of the trustee's right, where it exists, of indemnity against the trust estate. (See Article, 10 C. W. N. cclxxi).

Thus under English law, neither a trustee, nor an executor, nor a guardian of an infant can impose any personal obligation by their acts on the beneficiaries.

Specially would this be the case with infants who can in no circumstances be made personally liable for the acts of others. To grant specific performance of an agreement against an infant, even though such agreement might have been entered into by a responsible guardian with due regard to the infant's welfare, would in English law be unthinkable. As such an agreement would thus be wanting in mutuality, the infant would necessarily not be allowed to specifically enforce it against the stranger.

Nevertheless, there has been a strong body of authorities in this country laying down in distinct terms that a contract made by a guardian for the benefit of his ward for the sale of immoveable property so far binds the minor that a suit may be instituted against the guardian to compel him to carry out his agreement. [Khairunnissa v. Lokanath, I. L. R. 27 Cal. 276, Krishnasami v. Sundarappayyan, I. L. R. 18 Mad. 415, Jumsetji v. Kashinath, I. L. R. 26 Bom. 326]. This departure from the established principles of English law has been sought to be justified on the ground that unlike the English guardian, the guardian of a minor Hindu or Mahomedan has power to alienate the minor's property in certain circumstances, and it has been urged that given those circumstances there is no reason why in the interest of strangers having dealings with the guardian, the guardian should not be compelled by law to exercise the powers he undoubtedly possesses of alienating his ward's properties.

This argument plausible as it appears at first sight overlooks the fact that the reasoning employed would justify not merely a claim for specific performance of the contract but also for damages, and it would obviously be impossible to limit relief by way of damages to contracts for sale of immoveable property only. In other words a suit for damages would lie for breach of every agreement made by a guardian on behalf of the minor and the damages would be payable out of the minor's estate.

But this by itself may not be a very serious objection, for even according to English law a stranger can avail himself of the guardian's right of indemnity to recover damages from the infant's estate. The real objection to the view laid down in the cases cited above is that the rule of liability based upon the trustee's right to indemnity cannot be worked beyond the recovery of damages out of the trust estate. The guardian agreed to sell not his own property but somebody else's, and not as the latter's agent. The owner of the property is no party to the contract and is incapable of being one, and the Court has obviously no power to make him perform a contract made by another. There is no one against whom specific performance can be decreed. The only thing that remains for the disappointed purchaser is to sue to guardian for damages for breach of contract.

The reasoning whatever may be its application in a case of an agreement by a guardian to sell his ward's property would moreover be wholly inapplicable to the case of a guardian's agreement to buy property from a stranger.

It is clear therefore that the fact that a guardian in India possesses limited powers of alienation does not justify any departure from the English law rules applicable to such cases and the decision of the Privy Council reversing the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mir Sarwarjan's case seems to conclusively establish this position.

But it is not merely with reference to agreements by guardians that personal obligations incurred by persons with limited powers of disposition have been sought to be transferred to the estate. In two recent cases the Madras High Court has laid down that a simple money loan taken by a Hindu widow for "legal necessity" would bind the estate in the hands of the reversioners. We have already commented on these decisions in detail (see 15 C. W. N. clxxxvii, cclxxvii), and it is unnecessary to go over the same grounds again. Suffice it to say that in such a case the stranger has nothing to depend upon in the nature of a trustee's right to indemnity available to the widow, for a widow has no such right. The Privy Council has however in Mir Sarwarjan's case declined to treat a contract for sale by a guardian even for "legal necessity" as a contract for sale by the beneficiary. There would seem to be much less warrant for treating a loan by a limited owner such as a Hindu widow for legal necessity as ipso facto constituting a charge on the estate or in other words for treating a personal loan by a limited owner for legal necessity as a loan by the reversioners. The right principle which should govern all these cases would seem to be that a person who contracts with another on the basis of the latter's own personal security has ordinarily no right to look beyond such security for recovery, and the mere fact that there were circumstances which would have justified the contractee to transfer or pledge property belonging to another to secure the obligation would not be sufficient to shift the obligation on that other.

THE LAWS OF ENGLAND. Being a Complete Statement of the whole Law of England. By the Right Honourable the Earl of Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, 1885-86, 1886-92, and 1895-1905 and other Lawyers. Volume XVIII. Butterworth & Co., Law Publishers, London and Calcutta. 1911.

The present volume deals with several titles of almost equal interest to India and England. Of these the law of "Libel and Slander" takes the precedence. Lord Justice Vaughan Williams and Mr. A. Romer Macklin are responsible for this title. The treatment of this subject is as a whole masterly but we found the discussion as to the nature of the right or privilege, (as some would have it) of fair comment and the distinction, partly academical and partly real, which has been drawn between a plea of fair comment on the one hand and that of qualified privilege and of justification on the other. Having regard to the differences of judicial opinion prevailing on the point, the authors have had occasionally to express their own opinion—thus going beyond the strict limits of a treatise the object of which is to state the law as it is found. For ourselves we would have gladly welcomed similar departures in other branches of the law also. The law of "Landlord and Tenant" which comes next in importance has also been very ably dealt with by Mr. J. M. Lightwood whose reputation as an author of legal treatises is now well-known. It should be mentioned however that much of the law concerning "Covenants" which usually occupies a large space in treatises on this subject has already appeared under the title "Deeds and other Instruments." We have found the distinction drawn between Leases and Licenses highly instructive. The Indian reader will find much instructive matter concerning the time-honoured institution of "Juries" —which is the glory of English legal history—in the title of that name. Much of the law relating to Judgments and Orders discussed under that title is common to India and England, but a great deal of it which is peculiar to the latter country will find parallels in the practice of the original sides of the High Courts in India. The laws of "Intoxicating Liquors," and "Land Improvement and Land Tax" are peculiar to England and do not call for special notice. The original plan as outlined in Lord Halsbury's Introductory remarks has been adhered to. The broad propositions of law appear in the body of the work, the case-law and other minutiae of the law is discussed in foot-notes which generally exceed in bulk the body. The law in this volume is stated as at 25th September 1911.

In this work the author gives in a connected form a brief summary of the various statutory enactments concerning the administration of the estates of the deceased in India. The provisions of the Bombay Regulation No. VIII of 1827, the Succession (Property Protection Act) of 1841, the Succession Act of 1865, the Legal Representatives Suits Act of 1855, the Indian Fatal Accidents Act of 1855, the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, the Administrator Generals Act of 1874, the Probate and Administration Act of 1881, the Succession Certificate Act of 1889 and the relevant sections of the Court Fees Act, the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act are summarised in a neatly got-up volume of not more than 75 pages. The book will prove useful to practitioners as a guide to the statutory enactments mentioned above.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—E. Clemens Horst Coy. v. Biddell Brothers. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR AND LORDS ATKINSON, GORREL AND SHAW. 3rd November 1911.

Contract of sale of goods—Its breach—Delivery of the bill of lading when goods are at sea is delivery of the goods themselves.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, FARWELL and KENNEDY, the latter dissenting) reversing a judgment of Hamilton, J. The Appellants agreed to sell hops to the assignors of the Respondents, assignees; terms, net cash, and the condition was that the sellers might consider entire unfulfilled portion of the contract violated by the buyer's refusal to pay for hops delivered. After some time the Appellant's wrote to the Respondents as follows:—

"We are now ready to make shipment to you of the entire 150 bales 1909 crop of the contracted quality and according to the terms of the contract. . . . For the invoice price less freight we will value on your good selves at sight with negotiable bills of lading and insurance certificates attached to draft, and if you wish we will also attach certificates of quality of the Merchants' Exchange, San Francisco, or other competent authority to cover the shipments."

In reply the Respondents stated:—"We are prepared to take delivery of the 50 bales of British Columbian Hops, Contract 21st December 1904, and 100 bales of Pacific Coast Hops, Contract 13th October 1904, of the quality contracted for and on the terms of the contracts respectively. . . . It is in accordance with the universal practice of the trade and the custom adopted by you in your dealings with other purchasers of your hops, and it has also been your custom with our assignors to submit samples and the samples having been accepted to give delivery in bulk in accordance with the samples, but if you decline to adopt the usual and undoubtedly most convenient course we can only pay for the hops against delivery and examination of each bale. We cannot fall in with your suggestion of accepting the certificate of quality of the Merchants' Exchange, San Francisco."

The Appellants then refused to deliver any more hops alleging that the Respondents' letter was a breach of the contract. The Respondents sued for damages, and the Appellants counter-claimed. Hamilton, J., held that the Respondents had refused to accept the hops, and gave judgment against them. This was reversed by the majority of the Court below in so far as it related to the Respondents' claim. The counter-claim was dismissed. Hence this appeal. Their Lordships allowed it in respect of the claim. The LORD CHANCELLOR in the course of his judgment said:—

This contract is what is known as a cost, insurance, and freight, or, c.i.f., contract, and under it the buyer was to pay cash. But when? The contract does not say. The Respondents say on the physical delivery and acceptance of the goods when they have come to England. Sec. 28 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, says in effect that unless otherwise agreed payment must be made on delivery, that is, on giving possession of the goods. It does not say what is meant by delivery. Accordingly, we have to supply from the general law the answer to that question. The question is when is there delivery of goods on board ship? That may be quite different from delivery of goods on shore. The answer is that delivery of the bill of lading when goods are at sea may be treated as delivery of the goods themselves. That is so old and so well established that it is unnecessary to refer to authorities on the subject.

In my judgment it is wrong to say, upon this contract, that the vendor must defer tendering the bill of lading until the ship has arrived in this country, and still more wrong to say that he must wait until the goods are landed and examination made by the buyer. Upon the counter-claim I am of opinion that the Court of Appeal was right.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Colley's Patents, "Ld." v. Metropolitan Water Board. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR AND LORDS ATKINSON, SHAW AND MERSKY. 7th November 1911.

Water tax—Water supplied to a factory for use of lavatories, etc., is for domestic use and not trade purposes.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal shortly noticed in 15 C. W. N., p. clv. The Respondents sued to recover the water rate and the only question for determination was whether water supplied to the Appellants' factory for the use of lavatories, etc., was water supplied for domestic or trade purposes. The Court dismissed the appeal. In the course of his judgment the Lord Chancellor said he thought that the consideration of this case had been overloaded with a good deal of subtlety; for himself, he thought that the point was short and simple. The question was this—whether, when a factory was equipped with lavatories, w.c.'s, and so forth, for the use of the men, as the masters might be required by legislation to provide, was that a supply of water for trade or for domestic purposes within the meaning of the Act? Now, if there was no statutory definition, he would say it was a supply for domestic purposes. But there was a statutory definition. It was not exhaustive and did not purport to be so. It was couched in barbarous or certainly slovenly language. It stated that certain things—viz., w.c.'s and baths—were included as domestic purposes; but the supply for domestic purposes was not to include a supply for trade purposes.

In his Lordship's opinion, the construction Sir Robert Finlay put upon the section was accurate. He read sec. 25 as meaning that the supply for w.c.'s and baths of the dimensions there mentioned was always to be treated as a supply for domestic purposes. That ended the case. Even if it were not so he did not think it came within the words "trade, manufacture, or business." Those words he took to mean "supply for use in trade, business, or manufacture."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN and COXE, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 424 OF 1909. RAMPAL SING v. NANDA LAL MARWARI. The 29th November 1911.

Acknowledgment—Sec. 19, Limitation Act—Application for insolvency, inclusion of debt in.

Nanda Lal obtained a decree for cos's against Rampal and applied for execution of the decree. More than three years after the first application was made the second application for execution was filed. In the meantime the judgment-debtor made an application for insolvency and in his schedule he mentioned Nanda Lal as being one of the creditors to whom certain money was due under a decree for costs. The Courts below held that the application for insolvency saved limitation under sec. 19 of the Limitation Act.

On second appeal it was argued on the strength of the English cases, Ex parte Topping, 34 L. J. Bank 44, Everette v. Robertson, 28 L. J. Q. B. 23, Davis v. Edwards, 7 Exch. 22 and Courtney v. Williams, 13 L. J. Ch. 461, that mere inclusion of a debt in a bankruptcy proceeding was not such an acknowledgment as the law required and would not operate to extend the period of limitation.

Held—That the inclusion of a debt in an insol-veny petition was an acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN and COXE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2205 OF 1908. UJAL SINGH, Defendant, Appellant v. DIBYA SINGH (Plaintiff) and THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA ADDED AS A PARTY RESPONDENT, Respondents. 29th November 1911.

Central Provinces Act, sec. 83—Settlement, cancellation or amendment of—Government, necessary party—Remand.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that he was the maintenance grant-holder of a certain mouzah in perpetuity on payment of a jama of Rs. 15 per year. His grievance was that he had been entered in the settlement record as a ticcadar of a village with a protected status at an annual jama of Rs. 220. In his original plaint he specifically asked that the settlement papers might be amended and he might have a declaration in the sense in which he wished. In an additional plaint he prayed that the request for amending the settlement papers might be excluded from the prayer. In the result he obtained from the first Court an order—a declaration—in the sense in which he wished and an order that the entry in the settlement record should be cancelled. This decision was upheld on appeal. He did not take the precaution of giving notice to Government of his suit which it was his duty to do under sec. 83, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act. The result was that Government was not represented in the case until it came up to High Court in second appeal. The Government applied to have the case sent back for a re-hearing.

Held—The suit was one for the cancellation or amendment of the settlement under sec. 83 of the Central Provinces Act.

auction-purchaser Defendants a party Defendant and also the auction-purchasers or rather those they supposed to be the auction-purchasers. The suit was brought about two days before the expiry of 12 years from the dispossession and at that time some of the auction-purchaser Defendants were dead and their heirs were brought on the record after the expiry of 12 years. It is contended by the Defendants who have appeared through their Common Manager that the suit is barred by limitation under the provisions of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act. Under sec. 98, cl. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Common Manager has for the purposes of management the same powers as the co-owners might have exercised but for his appointment and the co-owners are debarred from exercising such powers. It has been held in the case of Sibo Sundari Ghose v. Raj Mohun Guho (1) that the Common Manager can bring a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of immoveable property on behalf of the co-owners, and if he can bring a suit, there is no reason why he should not represent them for defending a suit. As he was the party actually in possession to the exclusion of the co-owners, the suit against him was rightly brought and as that was done within time it was immaterial whether the heirs of some of the co-owners were brought on the record too late for a suit against them. The question of limitation under sec. 22 does not therefore arise.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 90
—Sale of equity of redemption—Undertaking by purchaser to pay off mortgage, if imports personal liability to pay—"Balance legally recoverable."

The purchaser of the equity of redemption is not personally bound to pay the mortgage-debt.

Where the mortgagor left a portion of the purchase-money with the purchaser for redemption of the mortgage,

Held—That the mortgagee not having been a party to the sale could not avail himself of the undertaking on the part of the purchaser to pay off the mortgage-debt, and the latter, therefore, was not a person from whom the unrealised balance of the mortgage-debt was legally recoverable within the meaning of sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 20th April 1909, of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 16th April 1907, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur.

The principal question for determination on the present appeal was whether the Appellant was entitled to a decree under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) against the principal Respondent, Pandit Ram Autar Pande, under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned.

One Musammat Lakhpati Koer borrowed Rs. 40,000 from the present Appellant and his son and executed a deed of mortgage, dated the 2nd June 1893, in their favour. In addition to her zemindari she hypothecated her mortgagee rights which she held in certain other zemindari.

On the 24th of November 1896, the said mortgagor sold all her immoveable property to the principal Respondent including the equity of redemption in the aforesaid mortgage and the said mortgage rights. Out of the sale price a sum of Rs. 40,000 was left with him in order to redeem the said mortgage but he did not do so.

The said mortgagees who were members of a joint Hindu family separated from one another, and the said mortgage-bond fell to the share of the Appellant. He then brought a suit to recover the mortgage debt with interest against the principal Respondent and the representatives of the mortgagor and others. He claimed three reliefs, namely, (1) a decree for principal and interest against the Defendants; (2) a decree for sale of the entire mortgaged property; and (3) a decree against the person and other property of the Defendants in case the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property were less than the decretal amount.

The Defendants contested the suit. The principal Defendant pleaded among other things that his person and "other property" were not liable. It was also pleaded on behalf of some of the Defendants that the Court could not pass a decree for sale of the mortgagor's mortgagee rights which had been hypothecated as above stated. These contentions were decided against the Plaintiff (Appellant) by the Court of first instance as well as by the High Court. The result was that a decree nisi under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was passed allowing the sale of the mortgaged property with the exception of the said mortgagee rights of the mortgagor. And in due course the said decree was made absolute on the 26th August 1905.

The Appellant decree-holder thereupon caused the mortgaged property to be sold, but the sale-proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the decree. He therefore instituted the present proceedings on the 7th January 1907 against the principal Respondent and the other judgment-debtors for recovery of the balance of the decretal amount. In his petition he stated the facts set forth above, and prayed for a decree under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, against the person and property of the principal Respondent. He further prayed that the mortgagee rights of the mortgagor (which, as already stated, the Courts had refused to sell) might also be sold.

The principal Respondent opposed the said petition. He pleaded that a decree under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act could not be legally passed against him and that the petition was barred by the principle of res judicata.

After hearing the parties the Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the principal Respondent, and accordingly passed a decree, dated the 16th April 1907, rejecting the petition against him with costs, and allowing it against the remaining judgment-debtors. The said mortgagee rights of the mortgagor were again exempted from sale.

The said decree-holder thereupon appealed against the said decree to the High Court. The Respondents filed objections under sec. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. The said High Court (Richards and Griffin, JJ.) delivered its judgment* on the 20th April 1909, and came to the same conclusions as the learned Subordinate Judge. It accordingly made a decree dismissing the appeal, but ordering the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts. Hence this appeal.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Ross for the Appellants submitted that the principal Respondent was personally liable and the decretal amount was "legally recoverable" from him. The sale price was expressly left in his hands upon trust to redeem the mortgage. They also submitted that the mortgagee rights were saleable under sec. 90, Transfer of Property Act. Reference was made to Matadin v. Kazim (1), Ganga Prosad v. Chuni Lal (2). The matter was not barred by res judicata. In any case the principal Respondent was in possession of the sale price which could be sold.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—How is it legally recoverable from him?]

Sir E. Richards.—Because he agreed to redeem the mortgage.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—But you were no party to the assignment?]

Sir E. Richards.—Yes, that is so.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Referred to Izzat-unnisia Begam v. Kunwar Pertab Singh (3)].

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhagwandin Dube for the Respondent were not called upon.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is a perfectly plain case. The action is brought by a mortgagee to enforce against a purchaser of the mortgaged property an undertaking that he entered into with his vendor. The mortgagee has no right to avail himself of that. He was no party to the sale. The purchaser entered into no contract with him, and the purchaser is not personally bound to pay this mortgage debt. Therefore, he is not a person from whom, in the words of the 90th section of the Transfer of Property Act, "the balance is legally recoverable."

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The substantial question of law in this appeal relates to the validity of a clause for restraint upon alienation in a deed of family settlement between two Hindu widows and the reversionary heirs of their husbands who were two brothers. The circumstances under which the question in controversy has arisen are not disputed, and may be briefly narrated. The Plaintiff-Respondent, Sona Koer, is the widow of Matukdhari Lal, and the 8th Defendant, Mahatab Koer, is the widow of Ayodha Prasad. Shortly after the death of their husbands a dispute arose between them as to the title to certain landed properties. The result was that the widows and the reversioners entered into an arrangement for settlement of these disputes. The terms of the compromise were embodied in two instruments executed on the 21st December 1894 and 15th January 1895. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine in minute detail all the provisions of these deeds. It is sufficient to state that the widows and the reversioners agreed that the properties should become vested in the reversioners; that a portion of the landed property and a sum of Rs. 6,000 should be dedicated for the construction of a temple and other specified religious and charitable purposes: that the widows should each receive annually a sum of Rs. 500 as maintenance out of the income of the estate of her husband vested in the reversionary heirs; and that during the life-time of the widows, the reversionary heirs should have no right to transfer any immoveable property left by their husbands. It appears that shortly after the execution of these documents, the reversionary heirs, on the 26th August 1904, 29th August 1905 and 28th November 1905, successively executed simple and usufructuary mortgages in respect of the properties taken by them under the settlement. On the 4th September 1907, the Plaintiff Sona Koer as the widow of Matukdhari Lal commenced the present action for declaration that these alienations were invalid and inoperative in law because made in contravention of the ekrarnama of the 21st December 1894 and the subsequent solenama of the 10th January 1895. She joined as parties Defendants the transferees (the first four Defendants), the reversioners (the next three Defendants) and the widow of Ayodha Prasad (the eighth Defendant). The claim was resisted by the transferees principally on the ground that the restraint upon alienation was void in law and that the Plaintiff was not entitled to claim any declaration. The Court of the first instance held that as the estate had vested absolutely in the reversionary heirs and as there was no clause for forfeiture upon alienation, the restraint upon alienation was illegal and unenforceable. In this view the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the learned District Judge has held that the restraint upon alienation was valid in view of the decisions in Lalit Mohun Singh v. Chukkun Lal Roy (1) and Kuldip Singh v. Khetrain Koer (2). The District Judge has therefore reversed the decision of the original Court and remanded the case for trial on the merits. The mortgagees Defendants have appealed to this Court, and on their behalf, the decision of the District Judge has been challenged substantially on the ground that the restraint upon alienation is invalid in law, and that the Plaintiff is not entitled to any declaration in the suit as framed. On behalf of the Respondent, it has been argued that, even if the restraint upon alienation be treated as invalid, the Plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that the alienations impeached do not affect her right to receive maintenance out of the estate of her husband whether that estate continues in the hands of the reversioners or a portion thereof has been included in the mortgages.

In so far as the question of the validity of the restraint on alienation is concerned, our attention has been invited to secs. 10 and 11 of the Transfer of Property Act. Sec. 10 provides that where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, the condition or limitation is void except in the two cases of lessees and married women. Sec. 11 provides that where on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created absolutely in favour of any person, and the terms of the transfer direct that such interest shall be applied or enjoyed by him in a particular manner, he shall be entitled to receive and dispose of such interest as if there were no such direction. If the restraint in the case before us is tested with regard to provisions of sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, the question arises whether the transferee has been absolutely restrained within the meaning of that section. It has been argued that as the restraint is limited in point of time it does not fall within the mischief of the rule enunciated in sec. 10. It may be conceded that this view may possibly be supported upon a strict construction of the language used by the Legislature in that section. It is not improbable that the framers of the section had in view the judgment of Sir George Jessel, M. R., in In re Macleay (3), in which that learned Judge observed as follows :—"The test is whether the condition takes away the whole power of alienation substantially; it is a question of substance and not of mere form. You may restrict alienation in many ways; you may restrict it by prohibiting it to a particular class of individuals or you may restrict alienation by restricting it to a particular time." This exposition perhaps tends to support the view that a restraint on alienation qualified as to time may be valid. Now it cannot be disputed that a condition or conditional limitation upon alienation of a contingent interest before it vests is good, as first held in Large's case (4) and as repeatedly affirmed in subsequent decisions: Churchill v. Marks (5), and Barnett v. Blake (6). But it does not necessarily follow that a condition or conditional limitation upon alienation limited in time is good when attached to a vested interest. In Renaud v. Tourangaen (7), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that a restraint upon the devisees of lands from alienating them for a period of twenty years from the testator's death was not valid either by the old law of France which was directly applicable to the case or by the general principles of jurisprudence. This view is consistent with that expressly or impliedly held in Ware v. Caun (8), Bradley v. Peixoto (9), Willis v. Hiscox (10), Rishton v. Cobb (11), In re Jones's Will (12) and In re Manchu (13). The contrary view, however, has been assumed as correct, without investigation, in some decisions, for instance, Kiallmark v. Kiallmark (14), Kearsley v. Woodcock (15), Churchill v. Marks (5) and Fearson v. Dolmon (16), which last case is based upon a singular misapprehension of the accurate statement of Turner, V. C., in Rochford v. Hackman (17), that a life-estate could be determined by an alienation. The prevailing view in England, therefore, undoubtedly is that a condition restraining alienation of an estate in fee is bad even though it is qualified as to time. In support of this proposition, it is sufficient to refer to the elaborate opinion of Mr. Justice Pearson in In re Rosher (18), [see also Dugdale v. Dugdale (19)]. But in a later case [In re Porter (20)], Mr. Justice North questioned if there was any distinction in principle, so far as the present matter is concerned, between a contingent interest and an interest which is vested but is liable to be divested. It must be remembered, however, that a provision for forfeiture attached to a contingent estate is a condition precedent, while when attached to an estate vested although liable to be divested, it is a condition subsequent, and consequently the distinction between the two cases is essentially the fundamental distinction between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent. In so far therefore as the English Courts are concerned, the preponderance of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that a condition or conditional limitation upon alienation, limited in time, is bad when attached to a vested interest. In the American Courts also, there has been considerable divergence of judicial opinion and it has been often assumed without discussion that a condition against alienation when attached to a vested interest is good if confined to a limited period. But the better view is in the opposite direction. The judgment of Mr. Justice Christiancy in Mandlebaum v. Macdonell (21) is the fullest argument against the validity of such conditions and conditional limitations to be found in the books and it may now be taken as settled in the American Courts that a restriction on the alienation of a fee simple, though limited in time, is void [see the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Porter v. Couch (22)]. In so far, therefore, as what is described by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee as "the general principles of jurisprudence" is concerned, the position is plain. But a difficulty is apparently created by the language used by the Legislature in sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act which is possibly based upon the view of Sir George Jessel, M. R., in In re Macleay (3), subsequently, as we have explained, repudiated in England. We, therefore, do not propose to rest our decision on the ground that sec. 10 invalidates the restraint upon alienation in the case before us. We have next to examine the provisions of sec. 11 of the Transfer of Property Act. This section recognises the elementary principle that a transferee of property who takes an absolute interest, as for instance, a donee or purchaser, cannot be restrained in his enjoyment or disposition of it by any condition inserted in the transfer. Such a condition deprives the property of its legal incidents and is inconsistent with or repugnant to the main purpose of the transfer. It is consequently arbitrary and not enforceable in a Court of law [Krishna v. San Manga (23) and Anantha Nagamuthu (24)]. In the first of these cases Mr. Justice Holloway defended the doctrine on the broad ground that every right capable of enforcement must have for its contents some conceivable human interest but not necessarily a pecuniary one. The same view was approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in McLean v. McKay (25). In our opinion, there is no room for serious controversy that the restraint on alienation in the case before us is bad in view of the principle recognised in sec. 11 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The question which finally arises for consideration is, whether the Plaintiff is entitled to any relief at all in the suit as framed. Now the deeds of family settlement make it reasonably plain that the object of the proposed restraint on alienation by the reversioners was the protection of the right of the widows to receive maintenance from what had been the estate of their husbands. To this extent, the object was perfectly legitimate, and we are of opinion that on the principle recognised in the case of Ali Hasan v. Dherja (26), the Plaintiff ought to have a declaration that the Appellants who have accepted mortgages contrary to the provisions of the deeds of settlement have acquired rights subject to the right of maintenance possessed by the Plaintiff. In the case just mentioned, it was ruled that a transfer of mortgaged property in breach of a condition against alienation is valid, except in so far as it encroaches upon the right of the mortgagee, and that this reservation does not bind the property so as to prevent the acquisition of a valid title by the transferee. A useful analogy is also furnished by the principle recognised in one of the American States, Louisiana, where the Roman Law through Spanish sources is still regarded as the foundation of the jurisprudence, and where it has been held that if there is an agreement in a mortgage that the mortgagor would not alienate the equity of redemption, an alienation in contravention thereof is so far void as against the mortgagee that the latter can carry on his execution proceedings of seizure and sale without making the purchaser a party or taking any notice of a change of ownership (Kent, Commentaries, Vol. IV, 185; Burge, Colonial and Foreign Law, Vol. III, p. 197; Avegens v. Schmidt (27) and New Orleans National Banking Association v. Le Breton (28), where the effect of the pact de non alienando is explained). The Plaintiff here can have no grievance if her right to receive maintenance is protected and declared unaffected by the mortgage transactions; the Defendants also cannot complain of such declaration, because they must be taken to have notice of all the covenants in the title-deeds of their mortgagors, and if they have taken the mortgages with notice, actual or constructive, of the right of the Plaintiff to receive maintenance, their own rights must be subordinated to that extent. In this view, the decree made by neither of the Courts below can be supported on principle.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, and the order of the District Judge discharged. The suit will stand decreed in the manner following, namely, the Plaintiff will have a declaration that her right to receive maintenance under the deeds mentioned has in no way been affected by the transactions under which the Appellants have derived title. Each party will pay his own costs throughout this litigation.

KALANAND SINGH v. GUNPUT SINGH.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of August, 1909, against the decree of Mr. J. C. Twidell, District Judge of Zillah Bhagulpur, dated the 19th of June 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Charu Chander Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, dated the 25th of January 1909.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Sainendra Nath Palit for the Appellants.

Babu Jotindra Mohan Sen-Gupta for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent and ejectment under sec. 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The claim was for arrears at the rate of 8 annas per bigha up to 1312 and at the enhanced rate of Rs. 3 per bigha from 1313-1314 under the terms of the kabuliyat, dated the 10th of August 1901: the Plaintiffs also asked for ejectment for the whole arrears.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiffs were entitled to rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 2-8 per bigha only for those lands which had been benefited by the irrigation works constructed by the Plaintiffs and gave a decree for ejectment for the whole arrears found due.

The learned District Judge on appeal agreed with the first Court as to the construction of the kabuliyat but modified the decree for ejectment by limiting it to the arrears for the last year in suit.

It is contended in second appeal before us that the decree for ejectment ought not to have been limited and that the enhanced rent should have been decreed for the entire holding.

On the first point it has been contended that the case of Sitanath v. Basudeb (1) relied upon by the learned Judge was wrongly decided in that it is against the terms of sec. 66 and not supported by the authorities relied on by the Court.

Sec. 66 provides that "when an arrear of rent remains due from a tenant . . . at the end of the month of Jeth where the Fasli or Amli year prevails the landlord . . . may institute a suit for ejectment." Sec. 55, cl. (3) defines an arrear of rent as any instalment or part of an instalment not duly paid at or before the time when it falls due. Sec. 67 provides that an arrear shall bear interest from the date it became due. In places where the Fasli year prevails, if an arrear remains unpaid at the end of the month of Jeth, the landlord may institute a suit for ejectment, that is to say, the landlord can treat the tenant as a trespasser if the instalments up to Jeth are in arrear. If he does not exercise that option at once but claims rent up to the end of Vado of the same year he treats the tenancy as existing after Jeth and cannot eject for that year. This was the plea of the Defendant in the Courts below and the same view has been pressed upon us. The Defendant not having appealed against the decree for ejectment for the arrears of 1314 it is not open to them to argue this point, in this appeal, so far as that portion of the decree is concerned. They may, however, rely upon this to contend that the decree given should not be extended so as to include the arrears prior to 1314.

The first case discussed by the learned Vakil for the Appellant is that of Sheikh Peer Bux v. Mowzah Ally (2) in which it was held that if a landlord receives rent for one year he cannot eject for arrears due previous to that year. Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., said : "The receipt of rent for 1268 affirmed the tenancy and conclusively bound the Plaintiff from contending that the Defendant was a trespasser in 1268 : whereas the suit for ejectment is founded on the ground that, by reason of non-payment of rent up to the end of 1267, the Defendant's tenancy had expired and that he was liable to be ejected." The next case discussed is that of Jogeshuri v. Ebrahim (3). That was a suit for the arrears of 1290 and one kist of 1291. Mr. Justice R. Mitter and Mr. Justice Grant, following the principle of the case in Marshall, said : "But forfeiture or determination of tenancy takes place when the tenant defaults to pay the rents due at the end of the year. If the landlord still treats the defaulter as his tenant, the right he has acquired under sec. 22 must be taken to have been waived." This case was followed in Sitanath v. Basudeb (1) by Mr. Justice Banerjee and Mr. Justice Stevens. There is no material difference between the wordings of sec. 22 of Act VIII of 69 (B. C.) and sec. 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and we do not see any reason to dissent from the earlier decisions. In this view of the main question of law argued for the Appellants it is not necessary to decide the point raised by the Respondent.

(1) 2 C. L. J. 540 (1906).

(2) March 25 (1862).

KALANAND SINGH v. GUNPUT SINGH.

As regards the construction of the kabuliyat we think the Courts below are right and the Plaintiffs have no just reason to complain.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

SRIDHAR CHATTOPADHYA v. KALIPADA CHUCKERBUTTY.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts. The Defendant admittedly managed the property during the Plaintiff's minority. The property belonged to the Plaintiff's father, Panchanon, and his brother, Bhanu. The latter died before Panchanon and his mother, Matangini, inherited his property. Panchanon died in 1298 and Matangini in 1313. The suit has been decreed and the Defendant appeals.

The first point taken is that the Court below should have come to a finding on the point whether accounts had been rendered and accepted. In the view we take of the case this plea could only have reference to the property of Matangini. But the question whether, as between Matangini and the Defendant, there was in respect of any year an account stated and settled which should not now be disturbed, is a question which may now be dealt with when the accounts are taken and a remand is not necessary. The findings of the Subordinate Judge, which have not been displaced by the District Judge, indicate that no practical advantage would be gained by a remand.

Secondly, it is urged that the learned District Judge should have admitted evidence of a mukhtearnama said to have been executed in 1300 by Plaintiff's mother, to show that the Defendant was the agent of the Plaintiff's mother, and not of the Plaintiff. It is said that it was not put in the first Court because the Defendant did not think it would be denied. But no explanation is given why it was not filed with the appeal. Then the Plaintiff would have been prepared to meet it. A subsequent mukhtearnama of 1307 is believed by the District Judge to have been executed by Khiroda Sundari in ignorance, under the influence of the Defendant. The production of this earlier mukhtearnama therefore at the last moment, when the appeal was being heard, looks very like an attempt to take the Plaintiff by surprise and we think that the learned District Judge rightly refused to admit it.

Finally, it is argued that the Defendant is not bound to account to the present Plaintiff for his management of Matangini's property, because the profit of the property must be regarded as stridhan. But this contention also cannot be sustained. It is not raised by anybody who would be the heir of Matangini's stridhan. It was decided in the case of Isri Dut v. Hansbutti (1) that a widow's savings are not her stridhan. If she has made no attempt to dispose of them in her lifetime, there is no dispute but that they follow the estate from which they arose. But it is argued that this rule does not apply to profits which have not reached the widow's hands at all, but that in such a case it must be held that she cannot have formed any intention to unite them to the original estate and they must therefore be regarded as stridhan. We cannot accept this contention. It would be unreasonable that a widow should be presumed to unite her money to the parent estate when she takes no action with regard to such money while in enjoyment of it, and that she would be presumed to intend to sever it from the parent estate when she takes no action while waiting for it. Reliance is placed on the case of Soorjeemoney v. Denobundoo (2) and Revett Carnac v. Jusbai (3). But their Lordships of the Privy Council have, as was pointed out in Puddo Monee v. Dwarka Nath (4), shown some disposition to recede from the former ruling, in which the point now in question seems not to have been fully argued before them, and in any case the facts of the case were altogether different from those of the present suit. As to the Bombay case, that referred to a comparatively small sum of money which the learned Judges did not regard as savings at all, considering that there were outstanding debts to be paid. Moreover, we are not satisfied that in this case Matangini can properly be said to have been kept out of possession of this money. Her agent's possession was her possession. Presumably Matangini obtained enough to live on from him, and we do not see why there should be any difference in character between the money which she received and that which still remained in his hands. Her intentions presumably were the same with regard to both.

We think, therefore, that the decisions of the learned District Judge is right and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Shebait, office of—Succession—Deed of appointment—Construction—“Shishya shishyanukrame.”

Where it was provided by deed that the succession to the office of a shebait should

Held—That upon a proper construction of the document there was nothing to prevent one disciple from succeeding a co-disciple in the line of the original shebait.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of December 1908, against the decree of G. C. Banerji, Esq., Additional District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 12th of September 1908, modifying the decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Chakraverty, Munsif, 1st Court at Naraingunj, dated the 30th of July 1906.

The Plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration of his title as the shebait of an idol and for recovery of possession of the idol and its properties of which he alleged he had been dispossessed by the Defendant. The Plaintiff's case was that Gopal Sarma who established the idol by a registered deed appointed one Nobin Brojobashi as the first shebait and directed that the shebaitship should on his death descend from disciple to disciple of the first shebait (शिष्य शिष्यानुक्रमे); that Nobin was succeeded by Adyaita and on the latter's death Srinibash, another disciple of Nobin, became shebait and was in his turn succeeded by his disciple Ramananda and that after Ramananda's death, Plaintiff as his disciple became the shebait.

The Defendant set up various pleas in defence of which the one now material was that Plaintiff was not in the line of succession, as Srinibash, the 3rd disciple, was not a disciple of the second disciple Adyaita and had accordingly no title to succeed under the deed.

The Court of Appeal below found that the facts alleged by the Plaintiff were established and he was entitled to recover and that the fact that Srinibash was a co-disciple of Adyaita was immaterial and he had a good title to succeed Adaitya as shebait.

The Defendant preferred this second appeal.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Govind Chandra Dey Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy and Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The decision of this appeal depends upon the proper construction of the document, Ex. I, and of the words shishya shishyanukrame, that is to say, disciple following after disciple, in that document. It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that the maker of the endowment intended that one disciple should be succeeded by his own disciple, and not by a brother disciple of the previous shebait. That, however, does not seem to be the proper construction of the document. The words should be construed like the words putra poutradikrame in other deeds; and, if we do so, it does not matter, so long as one disciple of a shebait succeeds another disciple in the line of the original shebait. In this case Srinibash was a disciple of Nobin, and he succeeded Adyaita, another disciple of Nobin. Succession, therefore, was in accordance with the intention of the endowment. This being decided, the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the questions of fact arising in the case dispose of the appeal, and it is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 50, Or. XXII, r. 10, if applies to execution proceedings—Lis pendens, if applies to mesne profits—Mesne profits, proceedings for ascertainment of, if continuation of suit—Suit, if can continue for one purpose though finally decided for other purposes.

A decree for possession of an immoveable property directed that mesne profits be ascertained in the execution department. During the pendency of the suit in which the decree had been passed the property had been sold. mesne profits only. The purchasers pendente lite were liable to pay mesne profits for the period during which they were in wrongful possession and their liability could be ascertained in these proceedings and not by a fresh suit.

Semble—Or. XXII, r. 10 of the new Code seems to have been made applicable to execution proceeding by Or. XXII, r. 12 by the principle of exclusion.

HARISH CHANDRA v. CHANDPUR CO., LD.
(5) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 28th of September 1903, against an order of Babu Srish Chandra Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rajshahye, dated the 31st of July 1909.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

The decree-holders had obtained a decree against Robert Watson & Co. for possession of an immoveable property and for mesne profits which were left to be ascertained in the execution department. During the pendency of the suit the property in dispute was purchased by Mr. C. B. Gregson who in his turn sold it to the Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ld. This appeal arose out of an application for the execution of that decree against Robert Watson & Co., Mr. C. B. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. The reliefs claimed in the application were that possession of the land "may be delivered to the decree-holder and mesne profits thereof may be ascertained by a local enquiry and on taking evidence." Mr. C. B. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. while admitting the facts objected on the grounds that the execution of the decree could not be had against them and that at any rate they were not liable to pay mesne profits.

The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the objection on the ground that as purchasers pendente lite the objectors were bound by the decree and held that they were liable for mesne profits "for the respective periods during which they were admittedly in possession."

Against this decision the objectors appealed on the grounds inter alia that the principle of lis pendens did not apply to the portion of the decree which ordered mesne profits to be ascertained in execution, that the proper remedy for the decree-holders was to institute a suit for mesne profits and that the decree for mesne profits being a money decree they could not execute it against the objectors on the principle of lis pendens.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh (with him Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Rajendra Chandra Guha) for the Appellants contended that though the principle of lis pendens might apply to the purchase by Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co., so as to bind them by the decree against their vendor as to possession of the property purchased, it had no application to that for mesne profits. Even if the doctrine of lis pendens applied the decree could not be enforced against the purchasers by execution. With reference to the land the objection was technical for the decree-holders might take possession of the land in execution of the decree without making the purchasers parties and then the purchasers could be debarred from making any opposition by Or. XXI, r. 102, C. P. C. But there was no provision of law by which the decree for mesne profits could be executed against the purchasers. Sec. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act says that the purchaser pendente lite is bound by the result of the suit, but does not mean that the decree could be executed against him in just the same manner as against the judgment-debtor. Refers to Harish Chandra v. Chandpur Co., Ltd. (5).

On principle a decree could be executed only against persons who were parties to it or their legal representatives. Sec. 50 and Or. 22, r. 10 were the only provisions under which a decree could possibly be executed against a person not a party to it. Sec. 50 did not apply as Watson & Co. were not dead. Dissolution did not mean death and sec. 50 had no application to corporations. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. were not legal representatives of Watson & Co. Or. 22, r. 10 dealt with devolution of interest which could only apply in respect of land. It did not also relate to execution.

[Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty refers to Or. 22, r. 12. That section by implication makes r. 10 applicable to execution proceedings.]

That was a new reading of the Code. On principle the decree for mesne profits could not be executed against the purchasers. For that would be making a new decree and the Court would have to find out for what period Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. had been in possession and to apportion the liability. The Subordinate Judge had read into the decree what was not contained in it.

The Subordinate Judge had practically applied the doctrine of lis pendens to a liability for a tort or wrong. Sec. 52 applied only to immoveable property. Even if that section be regarded as not exhaustive lis pendens could not on principle be applied to anything but immoveable property. [Wigram v. Buckley (6)]. The doctrine could not be applied to a wrong or any liability for any sum of money. Referring to possible argument from hardship he observed that equity was not all on the side of the decree-holder. The purchasers were protected by a covenant of title so that they were entitled to have indemnity ultimately from Watson & Co. They might therefore equitably claim that Watson & Co. should alone be made liable for the amount of the decree.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty (with him Babus Upendra Lal Roy and Nares Chandra Sen-Gupta) for the Respondents drew attention to the fact that in the first place, the decree against the Appellants was only for the period during which they themselves have been in possession and not for that during which Watson & Co. had possession. Secondly, there was no decree for money and his client was not executing any decree for money. The decree only directed the ascertainment of mesne profits in the execution department. In so far the present proceeding was only a continuation of the original suit. It was only when mesne profits were ascertained that there would be a final decree for money. Referred to sec. 47, C. P. C. (1908).

[Dr. Ghosh.—That is the new Code. The decree was under the old Code.]

Even under the old Code it had been held that the proceedings for ascertainment of mesne profits were proceedings in the suit and not in execution, the decree only becoming final when the mesne profits had been ascertained [Puran Chand v. Radha Kishen (3), Radha-prosad v. Lal Saheb (1)]. These proceedings were not in execution but an investigation upon evidence with a view to a decree. Gregson and Midnapur Zemindary Co. had been added as parties to the suit as being representatives in interest.

As purchasers pendente lite it was their duty to get themselves added as parties, and in that case there could have been no possible objection to the execution of the decree. It was not the duty of the Respondents and there is nothing to show that they were aware of the purchase.

He further submitted that Or. XXII, r. 10 applied to execution proceedings and the objector had been rightly made parties even if these were execution proceedings. Referred to Or. XXII, r. 12. Where any portion of any order was not applicable to execution proceedings it was expressly excluded. See Or. XXIII, r. 4. See also sec. 141, C. P. C.

Dr. Ghosh in reply.—Under the old Code there was only one final decree and there were no two stages of preliminary and a final decree. Ascertainment of mesne profits under the decree would thus be proceedings in execution. Reads sec. 244, C. P. C. Assuming that the suit is still pending it is not for the possession of land but only for fixing the liability in money. Here there is no lis pendens. Where there is a suit for land the representative might be added so long as the suit is pending because in this case the lis is the land which is still in dispute and in which the representative has interest. The pendency of the lis determines the liability to be added or substituted as a party. Where then, as in the case of ascertainment of a money liability lis pendens does not apply there can be no right to add or substitute a party. There is no devolution of that liability and no lis pending in which the purchaser has an interest. So far as it was a suit for money, therefore, it could not proceed against the purchasers. Their liability if any is a new liability and gives a new cause of action.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal, by the judgment-debtors, from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye holding that they are bound, by the final decree of this Court, to pay mesne profits to the decree-holders for the respective periods during which they were admittedly in possession of the land in suit. That decree, dated the 13th December 1906, awarded possession and mesne profits against Robert Watson & Co., Ltd. The litigation having commenced in the year 1899, the judgment-debtors successively purchased the property pendente lite on the 29th November 1902 and the 3rd December 1906. Though possession had been taken, in the latter case, on the 1st January 1906, they did not apply to have their names added as Defendants in the pending suit. On the 3rd April 1904 the decree-holders put in a petition for execution of their decree. They mentioned, in the ninth column of the application, the names of Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., Ltd., Mr. C. B. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. and they asked for possession of the decretal land, and that mesne profits might be ascertained against the judgment-debtors. The objection of Mr. C. B. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. was disallowed. Hence this appeal.

On behalf of the judgment-debtors it has been urged that they cannot be made liable in execution proceedings for the mesne profits decreed against Messrs. Robert Watson Co. .

MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD. v. KUMAR NARESH NARAIN ROY.

Now, it admits of no doubt that possession of the land in suit can be given to the decree-holders against Mr. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. They could not, being transferees pendente lite, resist execution of the decree so far as it relates to immoveable property (Order XXI, r. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908). The contentions of the learned Vakil for the judgment-debtors are that they are not the legal representatives of Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., that Or. XXII, r. 10 does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree; and that a money decree cannot be passed against persons who are not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens, so far as the liability to pay money in the shape of mesne profits is concerned, even if the suit be regarded as not having been terminated by the decree of this Court on the 13th December 1906.

The transferees, Mr. Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co., are certainly not the legal representatives of Messrs. Robert Watson & Co. within the definition in sec. 2 (11) of the Code, but the case is not one under sec. 50 where action is taken on the death of a judgment-debtor. It is a case of devolution of interest by sale during the pendency of the litigation. The questions then arise whether the suit continued after the 13th December 1906; if not whether Or. XXI, r. 10 of the Code applies to execution proceedings; and, if the suit did so continue, whether the claim for mesne profits can be separated from the claim for the land so as to defeat the operation of the rule of lis pendens which does not touch property which is not immoveable.

In our opinion, the suit continued after the decree of this Court had been passed. Proceedings for the assessment of mesne profits are in continuation of the original suit. No operative decree can be passed until the mesne profits are ascertained on enquiries made in accordance with the directions given in the interlocutory decree. In support of this position, we may refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Radha-prasad v. Lal Saheb (1), which was followed in Mahomed Umarjan v. Zinat Begum (2). The same view was adopted by a Full Bench of this Court in Puran Chand v. Radha Kishen (3), where reference is made to the earlier cases. That being so, the suit is a simple suit; mesne profits are determined in the suit itself and not by way of execution for a fixed sum of money. In the present case, no decree for money is asked for nor is any decree for money being executed. No authority has been cited to us for the view that a suit may continue for one purpose only after it has ended for another purpose. The case is stronger than that of Puran Chand (1), for, there, possession of the land had been taken before mesne profits had been determined, and, in such circumstances, it might have been contended that the final decree for mesne profits was a separate decree [see Or. XX, r. 12 (2)]. The decree-holders here ask for possession of the land and for the assessment of mesne profits, simultaneously, with a view to a formal and final decree being prepared in respect of both the reliefs in one and the same suit [see Gopal Chandra v. Preonath (4)]. The question of lis pendens cannot arise independently for a part of the subject-matter of the litigation. The true test, as it seems to us, is whether Mr.

Gregson and the Midnapur Zemindary Co. were in wrongful possession of the land ; if they were, and it is admitted that they were, they are liable to pay the profits they actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom.

The remaining contention is as to the scope of Or. XXII, r. 10 of the Code ; whether that rule applies to execution proceedings need not be decided because the present case is not one in execution of decree. In Harish Chandra v. Chandpur Co., Ltd. (5), doubt was expressed whether sec. 372 of the Code of 1882 applied to execution proceedings. The present Code (Or. XXII, r. 12) seems to imply, by the principle of exclusion, that all the rules of that order, except rr. 3, 4 and 8 are applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree or order, and we are inclined to think that r. 10 is so made applicable.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mahomedan law—Agreement by Hindu to dedicate property for maintenance of mosque—Validity—Agreement interfering with work of Receiver.

An agreement by a Hindu to dedicate property for maintenance of a mosque is not enforceable according to Mahomedan law.

(5) I. L. R. 30 Cal 961 (1908).

An agreement which would interfere with the work of a Receiver appointed by a Court should not be enforced as being opposed to public policy.

This was an appeal preferred on the 30th of July 1908, against the decree of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 24th of April 1908, affirming that of Babu Jogendra Nath Deb, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 28th of January 1907.

The Appellant who was the Plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arose was one of a number of co-sharers in a property which was in the hands of a Receiver appointed in a partition suit amongst the co-sharers. The property being heavily encumbered the Receiver entered into negotiations with several parties for a sum of Rs. 26,000 required to pay off the debts and the Respondent offered that amount to the Receiver and further agreed to spend a sum estimated at between Rs. 50 and 100 a year for the up-keep of a mosque belonging to the co-sharers ; and a kobala was executed in favour of the Respondent by the Receiver and a co-sharer to give effect to the agreement. The Plaintiff who was the managing co-sharer meanwhile brought this suit for specific performance of a separate agreement alleged by him to have been made by the Respondent to dedicate from 230 to 235 bighas of lakheraj and rent-paying land yielding an annual income of about Rs. 500 and some other properties for the maintenance of the mosque. Both the Courts below agreed in dismissing the suit, the lower Appellate Court being of opinion that the contract was immoral.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhry for the Appellant.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for the specific performance of a contract said to have been made by Defendant No. 1 with the Plaintiff for making an arpannamah or dedication of 230—235 bighas of lakheraj and rent-paying land yielding an annual income of 500 rupees and some other properties for the maintenance of a mosque. The facts shortly are that a suit for the partition of the estate of Shamsuddin Naskar deceased was pending in the Original Side of the High Court. The Official Receiver was appointed Receiver in respect of the estate and under the order of the Court he made a contract of sale of the whole residue of the estate to Defendant No. 1 who was evidently acting as the benamdar of his father Defendant No. 1 for 26,000 rupees, the vendee agreeing to make an allowance of 50 to 100 rupees per annum towards the expenses of the mosque, existing on the property. After the affidavit of the proposed vendee containing these terms had been filed in Court, this agreement or contract is said to have been made unknown to the Receiver and without any intimation to the Court. Although the mosque belonged to all the heirs of Shamsuddin Plaintiff alone brought the suit. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground of non-joinder as well as on the merits holding that the ekranamah in suit was not genuine: and that even if it were genuine it could not be enforced as it was illegal in that no Hindu could under the Mahomedan law make a dedication in favour of a mosque and that in any case it was an attempt to secure for the Plaintiff an illegal advantage in his own favour to the exclusion of his co-sharers.

On appeal by the Plaintiff, the District Judge upheld the decree on the ground of non-joinder but did not come to any definite findings on the merits.

On second appeal before us it has been contended that the District Judge is wrong in dismissing the suit and a suit for the specific performance of the contract was maintainable by the Plaintiff who alone was a party to the contract and that if the co-sharers were necessary parties they might have been joined as Defendants. We should have been inclined to make a remand for a decision on the merits in the presence of all the members of the family but in the view that we take of the legal aspect of the case on the merits, we think it would be quite useless to do so.

The arpannamah or dedication that was to be made under the alleged contract was one for the maintenance of a mosque. The validity of such a dedication would depend upon the provisions of the Mahomedan law. Mr. Baillie in his Digest of Mahomedan law, p. 552, says "It is a further condition that there be a nearness, i.e., some relation between the appropriator and the objects of the appropriation * * * If a zimmi should appropriate his mansion for a temple, a church or a house of fire it would be void, and in like manner if it were for repairing them or the supply of oil for their lamps." Mr. Ameer Ali in his Tagore Law Lectures for 1884, p. 160, says "any person of whatever creed may create a wakf, but the law requires that the object for which the dedication is made must be lawful according to the creed of the dedicator as well as the Islamic doctrines. Divine approbation being the essential element in the constitution of a wakf if the object for which a dedication is made is sinful either according to the laws of Islam or to the creed of the dedicator it would not be valid. Consequently a Moslem cannot make a dedication in favour of an idol, a non-moslem place of worship, or any other object which is recognised as unlawful or sinful in his law nor can a Non-Moslem validly make a dedication for a Moslem place of worship." And again at p. 424 "A Non-Moslem who fulfills the conditions above-mentioned can make wakf of the whole or part of his property." The law-maker but one exception to the liberality of those who do not follow the Islamic faith: it forbids their constituting a mosque as beneficiary of their wakf. "It is unlawful for an unbeliever to make a wakf in favour of a mosque." See also Wilson's Anglo Mahomedan Law, p. 365.

The object of the agreement was therefore unlawful as the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are Hindus and the contract is void.

There is another ground upon which the contract impugned as unlawful. The property was then in the hands of the Court Receiver who had received an order for making a sale. The Receiver was making the contract for the sale. The agreement in dispute would have the effect of making a large deduction from the property sold without the knowledge of the Receiver. The deduction would be in favour of an object to which all the co-sharers might not agree and which would enure to the profit of the Plaintiff alone as he was to be the mutwalli, the consideration being that he would refrain from doing an unlawful act by obstructing the purchaser in taking possession. It would be against public policy to allow such an interference with the work of the Receiver. On both the above grounds the agreement even if proved is unlawful.

We think therefore that it would be a lamentable abuse of judicial procedure to allow further proceedings for deciding the questions of fact that would arise if the agreement were lawful. In the result, we dismiss the appeal but without costs in any Court as there are some indications in the record of some sort of secret understanding between the parties.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 13, 83—Map of khas mehal land prepared under direction of Government—Admissibility in boundary disputes—Witness, non-attendance of—Process to compel attendance refused without good ground—Second appeal.

In a dispute relating to the boundary of a holding between the Plaintiff and the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta:

Held—That a map prepared in 1872 under the direction of the Government acting not in its sovereign capacity but as the landlord of this and neighbouring holdings, was admissible in evidence, if not under sec. 83, under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act.

A servant of the Municipality was summoned at the Plaintiff's instance to produce certain documents which the Plaintiff maintained would support his case of adverse possession of the land in dispute, but he failed or declined to attend, and the Plaintiff's application for a warrant to compel his attendance was rejected without good reason. The suit was dismissed on the ground, amongst others, that Plaintiff was not in possession for 12 years :

Held, on second appeal, that there should be a re-hearing after compelling the witness to attend and produce the documents.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent, preferred on the 18th of August 1910, against the decree of Mr. Justice Vincent, dated the 28th of July 1910, passed in Second Appeal No. 2242 of 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of VINCENT, J.—This appeal arises out of a dispute regarding a small plot of land 1 cotta, 10 chattaks in area in Bhowanipur.

The Plaintiffs allege that this land is part of a holding of theirs in the Government estate of Panchannagram and that in any case they have been in possession of the same for many years and have acquired a title to it by adverse possession whether the land was originally included in their holding or not. They allege further that the Defendant Municipality relying on certain entries made in a map prepared under the Bengal Survey Act has lately been attempting to take possession of the said land. The Plaintiffs therefore in this suit seek for a declaration of their title and confirmation of their possession and further pray that an injunction may be issued prohibiting the Defendant from, in any way, interfering with their possession.

The Defendant Municipality states that the land in dispute has been measured as part of a public road in certain proceedings under the Survey Act and that as part of a public road the land is Municipal property under the provisions of Act III

(B. C.) of 1899. The Plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed in both the lower Courts and hence this appeal is filed.

Now although the memorandum of appeal contains many grounds on which the decree is objected to, yet learned Counsel who appeared for the Appellants stated specifically in Court that he would only press two points, namely, (1) that a certain map called Billon's map had been wrongly admitted in evidence and, if admissible, undue weight had been given to it in deciding the suit and the appeal in the Courts below, and (2) that the Court of first instance had improperly refused to take steps to enforce the attendance of an important witness for the Plaintiffs. An affidavit was filed showing that this latter point was pressed in the lower Appellate Court, although it is not dealt with in the judgment. And reference has been made in detail to the various applications and orders on record regarding the attendance of this witness.

Accepting the affidavit as correct and taking it as a fact that the lower Appellate Court did not deal with this question I think that as all the materials are on the record and the facts have been placed before me in some detail, it would serve no useful purpose to remand the case to the lower Court for a decision as to whether the attendance of this witness was necessary or not and that the point may well be decided in this Court.

I find on a reference to the record that it is true that more than one application was made to summon this witness who is or was apparently a Municipal assessor, and it is also a fact that he did not attend. It is also correct that an application was made to the Court to issue a warrant to enforce his attendance and this application was refused. I am not, however, satisfied that the application for the issue of warrant was made in due time or that the Court of first instance ought to have issued a warrant at the stage of the proceedings when the application for such process was made. Up to the 24th of September 1907 there was apparently some hope of settling the suit amicably and on that date also an application was made for further time to compromise. But the application was refused and on the 25th September the hearing commenced. On that date witnesses were examined and the hearing was continued on the 26th and 27th. The trial proceeded again on the 30th and on that day the tenth witness for the Plaintiffs was examined and it was not until the 1st October 1907, that any application was made to enforce the attendance of this witness. The learned Munsif records the following order on that application :—"Plaintiff puts in a petition for warrant of arrest of a witness. No such petition can be allowed at this stage. Application rejected." In my opinion, this order was a proper order, having regard to the facts that the Plaintiffs' case was then nearly completed and that no application had been made when the hearing commenced. I am therefore unable to say that it was incumbent on the Court to enforce the attendance of this witness and this point is decided against the Appellants.

In regard to the second point it is urged and with some force that the map of Mr. Billon upon which reliance has been placed is not a map prepared under the authority of Government as the sovereign power but one prepared by Government as landlord in its own interest and reference has been made in particular to the cases of Janmajoy Mullik v. Dwarka Nath Mayte (1) and Ram Chandra Sao

v. Bunshidhar Naik (2). But although it is true that Billon's map is not possibly admissible as a public record, it is undoubtedly, in my opinion, admissible under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act, quantum valeat. The document is more than 30 years old. It was apparently produced from proper custody and was therefore, in my opinion, admissible in evidence. In any case, even if this map is excluded it appears that the Plaintiffs have on the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Courts entirely failed to adduce satisfactory evidence to discharge the onus which lay upon them. On the pleadings it is clearly incumbent on the Plaintiffs to prove either a title by adverse possession or that the land was included within their holding. The finding of the learned District Judge is distinct that the land has not been in the possession of the Plaintiffs for twelve years and the evidence of title adduced by the Plaintiffs was accepted in neither of the Courts below. In fact the learned District Judge goes so far as to say that the Plaintiffs have deliberately suppressed their title-deeds and have produced other deeds containing boundaries which are obviously wrong and he further states that the Appellants have no evidence of title or of possession beyond that afforded by the judgments of Mr. Smart and Mr. Marr in the survey proceedings and these judgments contain a definite finding that the possession of the Appellants is a possession by encroachment only. It appears to me that these findings of fact are conclusive against the Appellants and that they have failed to prove any title which would justify the Court in making a decree in their favour. It follows, therefore, that this appeal must be dismissed with costs and the decision of the lower Courts must be confirmed.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Vincent affirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, with the result that the Plaintiff's suit stands dismissed.

Two objections were taken before us on behalf of the Plaintiff; first, it was said that there was improper reception of evidence inasmuch as the map prepared by Mr. Billon was admitted. But, in our opinion, that map was admissible, if not under sec. 83, still under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act : The value to be attributed to it, when admitted, was a matter to be determined by the Court of fact : so that had matters rested there, we should not have interfered with the decree of the lower Appellate Court. But there is an incident in the case which entirely calls for interference on the part of this Court, and it is this : The Plaintiffs were desirous of establishing their possession of the land in suit, and it was obviously most material for them to be able to prove that possession. For the purpose of proving that, they desired to call as a witness a servant of the Municipality and to require him to produce certain documents which, they maintained, would go far to show that their contention as to their possession was correct. They made repeated attempts to procure the evidence of that witness : but he absolutely failed or declined to attend. In those circumstances, the Plaintiff not unnaturally asked the Court to take measures to compel his attendance, by arrest if necessary. For some reason, which does not appear satisfactory to me, the Court of first instance refused to take this measure. We have asked the learned pleader who appears on behalf of the Defendant Municipality how it was that a servant of the Municipality should have acted in this way and should have practically set the summons of the Court at defiance. He was unable to give any explanation. I can see nothing to excuse such conduct. If, as has been suggested, it was in any way due to the Municipality itself, I need hardly say that it would be most reprehensible conduct. But we are not in a position to form an opinion as to the responsibility of the Municipality although that is the statement made before us.

In the circumstances of the case, the proper course will be to set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and of the Court of first instance and to send back the case for re-hearing and determination, when the attendance of this witness has been compelled, with the production of the documents that were required from him for the purposes of this case.

The Municipality must pay the Appellants costs up to the present time.

CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree.

CIVIL JURISDICTION.

No. 61 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. D. WESTON and others,
WOODROFFE, J. | v.

27, November. J

Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), Or.

D. WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DAS.

41, r. 10—Security for costs of appeal—Discretion of the Court—Inability of Appellants to pay costs—Appeal by Government servant—Interest of the Government—Nature of security—Bond of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

When the Plaintiff-Respondent applies under Or. 41, r. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure for security for the costs of the appeal and of the original suit in view of the fact that the Defendants-Appellants have no immovable property and are in impecunious circumstances and that somebody else who is not a party to the suit but has an interest in it have been defraying the costs of the litigation, Held—That it was a case where the Court should exercise its discretion in directing security for the costs to be given.

In November 1909, the Petitioner brought a suit in Midnapur against Mr. Donald Weston, a member of the Indian Civil Service, Moulvi Muzarul Huq, Deputy Superintendent of Police and Lal Mohun Guha, Inspector of Police. The sum and substance of the Plaintiff's case was that these three Defendants in concert and conspiracy tried to extort a confession from the son of the Plaintiff who was then being prosecuted for an offence under the Explosives Substances Act, and that these Defendants in the first instance tried by persuasion and then by compulsion to induce the Plaintiff to make his son confess. The suit was subsequently transferred to the High Court under its Extraordinary Civil Jurisdiction. Mr. Justice Fletcher after a prolonged hearing decreed the suit and awarded Rs. 1,000 by way of damages with costs on Scale II. The entire costs of the Defendants in the lower Court were borne by the Government and the Government intended to bear the Defendants' costs in the appeal. Pecuniarily the Defendants were not in a position to pay the costs of either.

Mr. K. B. Dutt (with him Mr. H. D. Bose) contended that as the Defendants were being supplied with funds by somebody else, it was a fit case in which their Lordships should exercise their discretion in awarding the Plaintiff security for costs. Poverty in itself was no ground for asking for such security but when it was established and admitted that it was not the Defendants who were carrying on the litigation but somebody else who was in a position to give security, it was a proper case for the exercise of that discretion. In re Clough: Bradford Commercial Banking Co. v. Cure (1) and also Whittaker v. Kershaw (2), it has been held that if the Appellant according to his own statement is a pauper, and it appears that others presumably able to furnish the necessary security were interested in the matter, the case is one where security should be given. [Jogendra Deb Roykut v. Funindio Deb Roykut (3)]. If security was not given the position of the Plaintiff, in the event of the appeal being decided in his favour, would be that he would be debarred from realising the costs from anybody for it was well-established now that no separate suit lay against the person who was helping the Defendants to carry on this litigation. [Ram Coomar Kundu v. Chandra Kant Mookerjee (4)]

Mr. W. Garth in opposing the application said no ground had been shown for ordering the security for costs in this case. Weston and the Defendants cannot pay, any more than the Plaintiff can

REPORTS (See Index.)

HIS MAJESTY AFTER A STAY OF TEN DAYS IN this city leaves Calcutta to-day en route to England. His Majesty by his enlightened policy and large-hearted sympathy for his British Indian subjects and his earnest desire and sincere solicitude for their well-being and progress has won the hearts of the people in a manner unprecedented and unique in the history of British India. Perfect peace, joy and loyalty have prevailed throughout the length and breadth of India since their Majesties set their foot on the shores of this ancient and historic land. All India wishes Their Imperial Majesties bon voyage and long life, and hopes for the return of their Majesties to the Indian Empire at their pleasure. A periodic visit of their Majesties to India would be more conducive to the peace, order and good government in this country and to the advancement of its people than anything else that we can conceive of.

WE PUBLISH IN THIS ISSUE A FULL REPORT OF the judgment of Fletcher, J., in Peary Mohan Das v. Weston and others, otherwise known as the "Midnapur Damage Suit." As an appeal is now pending against this judgment, any comment on this case would obviously be inappropriate in these columns. The case is, however, the first of its kind in India. It raises important legal questions which had never before come up before the Court in this country. In such circumstances, a reasoned pronouncement on the questions of law raised, and a careful analysis of facts which, when they transpired, aroused the profoundest public feeling, have a value all their own.

IT IS BEING SAID THAT THE ESTABLISHMENT OF a Lieutenant-Governorship for Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa will necessitate the establishment of a High Court at Bankipur. But we have reasons to believe that the establishment of such a High Court will not meet with the approval of the people of Orissa and Chota Nagpur. In view of this fact and also out of regard for the principle that the judicial and administrative functions should always remain separate, we would make a suggestion which, we expect, would be acceptable to all our friends of the sister Province. Our proposal is that the High Court of Calcutta should continue to be, as it is at present, directly under the Government of India and not that of the Provincial Governments of Bengal and Behar. This would ensure the independence of the High Court. Should this be so, the appeals from Orissa and Chota Nagpur may continue to be disposed of, as at present, by the Judges presiding over the Burdwan Group. But as for appeals from the Patna Group and those from Monghyr, Bhagulpur and Purneah, which are now comprised in the Burdwan Group, as also for criminal appeals and revision cases from the above districts two appellate benches at Bankipur would suffice. The local Government need only provide a suitable Court house with judges' quarters at Bankipur. This arrangement would prove much less expensive and would give satisfaction to Orissa and Chota Nagpur as well.

AN ARRANGEMENT OF THIS KIND WILL ALSO BE to the advantage of Behar in many ways. In the first place the Calcutta High Court has inherited jurisdictions which a new High Court at Bankipur will not possess. Secondly, the Court being not under the local executive will not be liable to local influences and would necessarily be more independent and free from prejudice in dispensing justice. Thirdly, the people of Behar will have the choice of four or if necessary more judges out of 16, 18 or 20 judges of the Calcutta High Court. The personnel of the Benches at Bankipur may be changed every three months or oftener if necessary. Fourthly, in suitable cases the people of Behar will have the right of institution and trial of cases at Calcutta when there is any apprehension that it would be difficult to obtain a fair trial locally. Fifthly, it will relieve the new Province of the financial burden of maintaining a new High Court. Sixthly, two or more Benches of the Calcutta High Court sitting at Bankipur all the year round would surely lead to the growth of a strong Bar there under the protection of an independent High Court. The Bar at Bankipur would thus be in a better position to preserve their independence, and would be less subject to executive or other outside interference in respect of admittance and other professional matters and would be less likely to be brought under such arbitrary rules as have recently been promulgated in the Punjab.

LASTLY, IN THE MATTER OF HIGH COURT JUDGEShips, the vakils and barristers practising at Bankipur will stand an equal chance in every vacancy that may occur amongst the six or more barrister judges and three or more vakil judges of the Calcutta High Court. Even assuming that a new High Court of six judges be set up at Bankipur for the whole of the new Province, the utmost that the local Bar may expect in the matter of appointments is to have only one vakil judge and one barrister judge from amongst them. This minimum may be assured should Behar continue to be under the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court, and should there be men of sterling ability there the chances of a larger number of judgeship going to Behar is quite a reasonable possibility. A judgeship of the Calcutta High Court, moreover, is both better paid and carries greater prestige, and we presume our Behar brethren will prize it more than the judgeship of any local High Court. The educated community all over India are now demanding that all the High Courts should be under the Imperial Government and independent of the local Government. We are confident therefore that our Behar friends would not take any retrograde step in this connection. Bengal, Behar and Orissa have had a common history since ages past and although we are now separating, we part as the best of friends wishing each other every prosperity and progress. We offer these suggestions because we believe that a bond of unity under the jurisdiction of the premier and historic High Court in India will be of mutual advantage to both the Provinces of Bengal and Behar.

THE FIRST STEP TOWARDS THE RE-UNION OF Bengal and Eastern Bengal under a Presidency Government is the settlement of the boundaries of Bengal so re-united. It appears from the Governor-General's and the Secretary of State's despatches that this re-union is founded on the sound principle that the Bengalee-speaking people should be placed under one Government. We are sure that if the boundary of the new Presidency Government is settled having regard to this linguistic principle it would give uniform and universal satisfaction to the entire Bengalee-speaking people.

IN FORMING THE NEW PRESIDENCY OUT OF THE five great Divisions, viz., Chittagong, Dacca, Rajshahye, Presidency and Burdwan, some bordering districts or portions thereof will have to be annexed to each. For instance Sylhet which has a Bengalee-speaking population should be included in Bengal. Sylhet not very long ago formed an integral part of Bengal. Now that the people of Sylhet are eager to join the Bengal Presidency they should be re-united with Bengal. The same may be said of Goalpara in North Assam which is contiguous with the Rajshahye Division and where the people speak the Bengalee language and call themselves Bengalees. Darjeeling District which before partition formed part of the Rajshahye Division would of course revert to it. On the North Western border of the Dinajpur district there are portions of the Purneah district such as the Katihar Munsif's chowki where the people are entirely Bengalee-speaking. The eastern portion of Purneah where Bengalee is spoken should be included in Bengal.

THEN COMING FURTHER SOUTH WEST ALMOST 75 per cent. of the population of the Sonthal Pargunahs are Bengalee-speaking and the area is being rapidly developed by the Bengalee people who have sunk in these parts a very large capital. The Sonthal Pargunahs although included in the Bhagulpur Division have never formed a part of Behar. In any case the Bengalee-speaking areas from Sahebgunj, Rajmehal, Pakur, Sitarampur, Barakar, Jamtara, Madhupur and Deoghur ought to remain with Bengal. These parts are also mostly Bengal's health resorts and both in the interest of the people and of the Bengal officials these parts should form a part of the Bengal Presidency.

IN THE DISTRICT OF MANBHOOm THE PEOPLE ARE almost entirely Bengalee-speaking, and the Court language is also Bengalee. The coal and other mines in this district, as also in the Sonthal Pargunahs and in Singbhoom, are owned by companies and firms who have their head offices in Calcutta. The Dhalbhoom Pargunah of the Singbhoom district and the four permanently settled Pargunahs of Balasore which are adjacent to the Midnapur district are also Bengalee-speaking. These Pargunahs with the town of Balasore ought to remain with Bengal. We have reasons to believe that the people of the areas mentioned above are very anxious that they should remain with Bengal and they would be greatly disappointed amidst the universal rejoicing resulting from the Royal visit should they be separated from their kinsmen. In determining the boundaries great care should be taken in respecting the wishes and sentiments of the people who are likely to be affected thereby. It should be remembered that what will be done now is not likely to be undone in any near future. So, if necessary, the boundaries of some bordering districts should be re-adjusted on linguistic basis and no hard and fast rule followed that the existing districts are inseverable.

WE GREATLY REGRET TO ANNOUNCE THE SOMEWHAT sudden death of the Hon. Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyer on the 27th ultimo. His loss would be keenly felt not only in his own Presidency but all over the country, in every part of which he was a well-known figure. He had greatly distinguished himself in the profession and was in the very forefront of most public movements of the day before he was elevated to the Bench. His subsequent appointment as a member of the Executive Council of Madras in succession to the Maharaja of Bobbili was the most popular of the several appointments to similar posts under the new Indian Councils Act. The Government of Madras has signally demonstrated their appreciation of his services by ordering public mourning, an honour to the dead of which he was well worthy. All India joins Madras in mourning the loss of one of her most distinguished men who was in the prime of life and had a career of great usefulness before him.

WE GREATLY REGRET TO RECORD THE DEATH of Mr. R. Rutter, the seniormost attorney of the Calcutta High Court. He got enrolled on the very year that the High Court at Calcutta was first established and his career as an attorney, during this long period of close upon half a century, was marked by success and popularity. We convey our sincerest condolence to the bereaved family.

THE LAWS OF ENGLAND. Being a Complete Statement of the Whole Law of England. By the Right Honourable the Earl of Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great-Britain, 1885-86, 1886-92, and 1895-1905, and other lawyers. Volume XIX.

Of the titles dealt with in this volume the most important from the point of view of the Indian lawyer is the last, viz., "Malicious Prosecution and Procedure." Under this title are dealt with not merely the law relating to malicious prosecutions and abuse of criminal proceedings but also the law relating to malicious abuse of civil proceedings. This latter law as applied by English Courts may be safely taken to be the law which will be applied, should occasion arise, in this country. Such cases have however been practically unknown in this country, the reason no doubt being that the law is not very widely known here. In passing, we note an interesting fact, viz., that the Privy Council decision in Ram Coomar Coodoo v. Chander Canto Mookerjee, 2 App. Cas. 186, figures as one of the authorities for the proposition that apart from the law of champerty and maintenance, an action will lie against one who maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause puts the law in motion in the name of a third person who is unable to pay the taxed costs of the litigation. The next title in order of importance is "Lien" under which are discussed both common law and equitable liens, and general as well as special liens. The law relating "Lunacy" is very highly developed in England, but lawyers in this country will undoubtedly derive light from it when difficulties arise in applying the very meagre local statutory provisions on this subject. The law of "Limitation of Actions" will also be found useful by Indian lawyers in interpreting and applying analogous provisions in the Indian Limitation Act. We have statutes in this country corresponding to the Loan Societies Act of 1840 in the recently enacted Co-operative Credit Societies Act, and to the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act of 1854 in a similar enactment of the Governor-General in Council. The English statutes are no doubt much more elaborate, but the treatment of the titles "Loan Societies" and "Literary and Scientific Institutions" in this volume will commend itself not merely to the lawyer but to the legislator as well. The laws relating to "Local Government" and "Magistrates" are purely English and we need do no more than mention them in this notice. The law in this volume is stated as at 20th October 1911.

We have also to notice the second "Supplement" to the laws of England bringing the law as stated in the first seventeen volumes up to date.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Stephen Smith & Co. v. Coleman & Co., "Ld." Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES MOULTON AND FARWELL. 14th November 1911.

Trade-mark—Similar get-up—Evidence of intention to deceive.

This was an appeal from a decision of Swinfen Eady, J. The Respondents sued for an injunction to restrain the Appellants from selling "Carvino" in bottles so got up as to deceive the public that the preparation was "Wincarnis." The Plaintiff's case was that the Defendants had gradually and systematically tried to imitate the get-up of "Wincarnis." In fact the Defendants attempted to register their preparation as "Lemcarnis" although they withdrew their application subsequently. The Court below was of opinion that the get-up and the name coupled with previous attempts showed an intention to deceive and was likely to deceive. On appeal the learned Judges reversed that finding. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS observed :

The principles of law applying to the present case were known beyond dispute. The Respondents had for years been using different labels for their meat wine, which had been varied more and more in the direction of making "Wincarnis" the distinctive name for their wine; and they had sold this wine in champagne bottles wrapped in pink paper. All makers of this class of goods got them up in champagne bottles with pink paper, and it was immaterial that, apart from the labels, "Wincarnis" and "Carvino," they were identical in appearance. Turning to the label of "Carvino," he asked himself whether it was possible for anybody or ordinary intelligence and possessed of proper eyesight to mistake "Carvino" for "Wincarnis," and he came to the conclusion that it was not, and that it was impossible for the Court in the absence of any evidence of deceit to draw the judicial inference that the two get-ups were so alike as to be calculated to deceive. Moreover it had been decided by the Comptroller, notwithstanding the opposition of the Respondents, that "Carvino" was not a trade-mark calculated to deceive.

He thought the reasons given by the Appellants for their adoption of "Carvino" in place of "Lemco" were perfectly satisfactory, and he failed to follow Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady's view as to this part of the case. He was unwilling to differ from the learned Judge, who had had an opportunity of seeing the witnesses, but he thought the learned Judge had attached too much importance to the fact that the Appellants had at one time applied through a clerk to register "Lemcarnis." This had failed, because its registration was prevented by the Leibig Extract Company on the ground that its registration would be a breach of a contract between them and the Appellants. As regarded the present case, this was entirely irrelevant.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE AND N. R. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 312 OF 1910. KRIPALI SING, Appellant v. POLA RAUT, Respondent. 12th December 1911.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV, of 1882), secs. 310A, 311—Case prosecuted under sec. 310A—Case if can be tried under sec. 311—Estoppel.

The properties of the judgment-debtor Respondent were sold on the 10th August 1908 in execution of a rent decree and purchased by the Appellant. The judgment-debtor more than one month after the sale applied under secs. 310A and 244, C. P. C. (1882), to set aside the sale. There were certain allegations of fraud on the said application. The Munsif held that the auction-purchaser had no locus standi to oppose the application and directed the judgment-debtor to put in money under sec. 310A which he did on the 22nd September 1908. The auction-purchaser appealed to the District Judge and at the hearing a preliminary objection was taken by the judgment-debtor that no appeal lay as the case was under sec. 310A, C. P. C. The District Judge giving effect to that contention dismissed the appeal. The auction-purchaser then moved the High Court and obtained a Rule which was made absolute and the case remanded for trial giving the auction-purchaser an opportunity, of being heard. After remand the Courts below held that the application of the judgment-debtor was in substance under secs. 311 and 244, C. P. C., and as there were material irregularity and fraud on the part of the decree-holder's agent the sale should be set aside. The auction-purchaser then preferred the above appeal to High Court and it was urged on his behalf that the case having been fought out up to High Court on the basis that the application was under sec. 310A and the auction-purchaser's right of appeal having been successfully met by a preliminary objection taken by the judgment-debtor himself he was debarred from proving that the case was under sec. 311, C. P. C., and that he could not simultaneously maintain a plea under secs. 310A and 311 in the same petition, and that the Courts below were wrong in going into the question under secs. 311 and 244.

Held—That the Courts below were wrong in going into the question under sec. 311, C. P. C., and the judgment-debtor could not revive his case under sec. 311, C. P. C., after having elected to proceed under sec. 310A, C. P. C.

pay. The Plaintiff and the Defendants are all in the same position. If it had appeared that the Defendants had no interest in the case and that somebody else was finding the funds that might be a ground for the Court to pass such an order as is asked for. If by the phrase "Government is carrying on the litigation" is meant that the Government is paying the costs there is no quarrel but he repudiated the use of that phrase in the sense that the Government has any interest in the matter at all. The three Defendants have got their interests on their own behalf. They are all Government servants and they are charged with a very serious criminal offence. If they are found guilty of the charge they will not be permitted to continue in public service. Therefore the matter in issue is of grave interest to them. There is no law which says that poor men should not be assisted. Jogendra Deb Roykut v. Funindro Deb Roykut (3) does not apply. Government has no interest in the case. They merely defrayed the costs. Government had power to pay costs of suits in which their officers were concerned. Government have no interest in the result of the suit except for the sake of their good name, that is, to see that their officers are properly protected. They have no interest beyond that. If the Defendants have to pay costs they might be shut out. And the only security they can offer, if they are ordered to furnish any, is a bond of the Secretary of State for India in Council. But that has been held to be neither valid nor binding.

Mr. Dutt in reply.—That the Government was not launching upon this heavy expenditure just for the sake and pleasure of helping these Defendants but the good name of the Government depended on the result of the case. Therefore the Government was interested in the case. The legal objection there was in the Secretary of State's bond in respect of the Dumraon case would not hold good here for the circumstances of the two cases are quite different.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an application to this Appellate Court under Order XLI, Rule 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure which empowers the Court in its discretion to demand from the Appellants security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both. The only materials on which we are entitled to decide this application are the allegations contained in the petition. Those allegations are uncontradicted, and it has been stated before us by Mr. Garth very candidly that they are admitted to be correct. Now, it is stated in that petition that the Respondents' costs which have been ordered to be paid amounted to a very large sum, roughly estimated, of about two lacs and fifty thousand rupees; that the Appellants have no such means as to be able to pay the costs; that the Appellants have no immoveable property from which the costs can be realised, and that the prosecution of the appeal will entail a very heavy expenditure on the part of the Plaintiff-Respondent, and, then it is said that the suit was and the present appeal is being carried on by the Government on behalf of the Appellants at an enormous expense. It appears to me further having regard to the action of the Government, that the Government is really interested in this litigation for reasons which have been indicated in the course of the argument. In these circumstances, I think this is eminently a case where we should exercise our discretion in favour of directing security for costs, and there will be an order, as prayed, for such security.

The only question that has arisen as to the nature of the security is a doubt which was suggested by Mr. Garth whether the Respondent would be satisfied with the bond of the Secretary of State for India in Council. The Respondent says that he would be perfectly satisfied with such security, so that if the Appellants are prepared to offer such security, then the security in that form can be taken in the circumstances of the case. In view of the admission of Counsel on behalf of the Appellants and the difference in the circumstances of the case, I do not think we need be concerned with the determination of the Court in another case to which a brief allusion was made.

The costs of this application will be costs in the appeal.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD ROBSON.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

1, November.

JIT SINGH, since deceased (now represented by Raghuraj Singh and others), and anr., Defendants,
Appellants,
v.
MAHARAJ SINGH,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Appeal to Privy Council—Point taken there for the first time.

Where on the death of a Hindu widow, the son of her daughter's son having sued to recover his share of the reversionary interest the suit was dismissed by the first Court but was decreed on appeal by the High Court, an objection taken for the first time before the Judicial Committee that the Plaintiff was not entitled to sue in the lifetime of another son of the daughter was not entertained.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Allahabad, dated the 20th of February 1907, which set aside a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 18th March 1904, which dismissed the claim of the Plaintiff, the present Respondent, with costs. On appeal the High Court decreed his claim for the property in suit, a portion of which was in the possession of the Defendants, the present Appellants.

The question for determination in the appeal was whether the father of the Respondent, named Khangar Singh, died before or after the death of one Ummed Kunwar, a Hindu widow, whose name during her lifetime was recorded in the Revenue registers in respect of the property in suit.

JIT SINGH v. MAHARAJ SINGH.

On the 11th September 1903, the Plaintiff filed the present suit on the following allegations :—

Harhar Singh, Himmat Singh and Bahadur Singh were three full brothers, the sons of Nehchal Singh. They separated in the lifetime of Harhar Singh and a large property fell to his share. After his death his widow, Ummed Kunwar, obtained possession of his property as a Hindu widow. She died on the 15th of March 1892, and the two sons of her daughter, named Khangar Singh and Bishun Singh, became the heirs and owners of the property in equal shares.

Khangar Singh, the father of the Plaintiff, died on the 29th July 1892, and his estate devolved on the Plaintiff, who asked the Defendants to deliver the possession of the property left by the husband of Ummed Kunwar, but they refused to deliver possession.

The Plaintiff further alleged that he was entitled to possession of half of the entire property left by the husband of Ummed Kunwar, and that to meet necessary expenses he had sold half of his said half share to one Musammat Bed Kunwar, under a sale-deed, dated the 4th of September 1903, and thus made her the owner thereof. He therefore prayed for absolute possession of the property.

In addition to the six original Defendants who were, with one exception, Jita Singh, members of the family, the Defendants Nos. 7 and '8, were added as mortgagees of part of the property in suit.

In reply to the plaint, written statements were put in on behalf of the Defendants and the first Defendant pleaded inter alia that Khangar Singh, the father of the Plaintiff, predeceased Ummed Kunwar and that, therefore, the Plaintiff had no right to the property in dispute; that Himmat Singh, Bahadur Singh, Harhar Singh and Nirmal Singh were all members of a joint Hindu family; that the name of Musammat Ummed Kunwar had been entered in the papers only for her consolation and satisfaction on account of her being a widow; and that Harhar Singh's daughter died childless and that the father of the Plaintiff was not her son.

The Subordinate Judge framed the following seven issues for trial:—

- (1) Is the claim bad for misjoinder of parties?
- (2) Is the Plaintiff a grandson of Harhar Singh's daughter?
- (3) When did Khangar Singh die?
- (4) Were the three brothers separate from one another and whether Harhar Singh was joint or separate from Nirmal Singh?
- (5) How was Nirmal Singh in possession of the properties in dispute, and since when has he been in possession of them?
- (6) Whether Jita Singh is in possession of any part of the property which belonged to Harhar Singh?
- (7) How long has Dharam Kunwar been in possession of the share of Mauza Khera Ruth, Mahal III, and what was the nature of her possession?

Both sides produced oral and documentary evidence. On the 18th of March 1904, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment and decree by which he dismissed the suit with costs. He decided the third issue against the Plaintiff by finding that the oral evidence produced by the Plaintiff did not prove that Khangar Singh died after Ummed Kunwar, and, in view of this finding, he held that it was not necessary to decide the remaining issues.

JIT SINGH v. MAHARAJ SINGH.

The Plaintiff appealed from the decree of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court at Allahabad. It was numbered 170 of 1904, and was heard with some other "connected appeals."

The learned Judges (Banerji and Aikman, JJ.) of the High Court pointed out that the same Subordinate Judge, on the third issue, came to the conclusion in the suit of Bed Kunwar, Plaintiff's alienee, that "Khangar Singh survived his grandmother, a conclusion opposed to his finding in the present suit."

The learned Judges then referred to evidence not in the record of the present suit and concluded their judgment in the connected appeal as follows: "Under these circumstances we are unable to say that the latter conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge as to the time of Khangar's death is wrong. Upon the findings at which we have arrived in concurrence with the Court below, that Court was justified in decreeing one half of the claim of Bishun Singh and the suit of Bed Kunwar, and the appeals filed against the decrees in these suits must fail. That Court should have decreed the claim of Maharaj Singh and his appeal must prevail." They accordingly allowed the Plaintiff's appeal.

Mr. G. E. A. Ross for the Appellant submitted that the Plaintiff was not entitled to bring the suit during the lifetime of his uncle, Bishun Singh. The Courts below had not dealt with that point, but as the objection related to the cause of action and the jurisdiction of the Court it was open to the Appellant to raise it.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—It is not usual to allow a point to be raised here on appeal which has not been discussed in the Court below, and upon which their Lordships have not got the assistance of the Court below.

On this ground their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal is directed against an order made by the Court below by which the value of the property directed to be sold under the decree has been assessed at a certain figure according to the statement of the decree-holder.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that the order is not one under sec. 47 of the Code of 1908, that it is not a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Code and is consequently not appealable as such. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (1).

In support of the appeal, reliance has been placed, on the other hand, upon the case of Sivasami Naickar v. Ratnasami Naickar (2), Ramessur Proshad Singh v. Rai Sham Krissen (3) and Ganga Prosad v. Raj Coomar Singh (4).

(4) I. L. R. 30 Cal. 617 (1903).

(7) 12 C. W. N. 542 (1907).

In our opinion the decision of the question whether the order in controversy is a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Code must depend upon its nature and contents. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has contended that every judicial order made in the course of execution proceedings is an order under sec. 47 of the Code and is consequently appealable as a decree. In view of the decision of this Court in the case of Behary Lal Punait v. Kedar Nath Mullick (5) this position cannot possibly be maintained. It was there pointed out that an interlocutory order in the course of the execution proceedings which decides, for instance, a point of law arising incidentally or otherwise, is not a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Code of 1882. It is reasonably plain from the terms of sec. 2 that an order to be a decree must conclusively determine the rights of the parties. If any other view were adopted, the result would be that an appeal would be preferred against every order in the course of execution proceedings; in other words, proceedings in execution could be arrested at every stage by an appeal on behalf of the judgment-debtor. This could hardly have been contemplated by the framers of the Code. It has also been suggested by the learned Vakil for the Appellant that if this order is not now set aside, he may be prejudiced later on, in the event of an application to set aside the execution sale on the ground of material irregularity and substantial injury. In our opinion, this apprehension is entirely groundless. The order does not involve a judicial adjudication of the value of the properties which would be binding upon the parties in any subsequent proceeding. The application of the judgment-debtor for time was refused and the Court proceeded to assess the value of the property according to the statement of the decree-holder. The decree-holder with full notice of the assertion of the judgment-debtor that the true value of the property is very much higher than what has been mentioned in the sale-proclamation, proceeds to sell it at his risk, and if after the sale any question arises as to the true value of the property it must be determined in the proceedings under r. 90, Or. 21 of the Code. We may observe that the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Sivasami Naickar v. Ratnasami Naickar (2), which was followed by this Court in the case of Ramessur Proshad Singh v. Rai Sham Krissen (3), has been overruled in the case of Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (1), where the learned Judges of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court also dissented from the decision of this Court in Ganga Prosad v. Raj Coomar Singh (4). We are inclined to hold that the view taken in Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (1) gives effect to the true intention of the Legislature. In this view, it is not necessary to consider the question raised in the cases of Kashi Persad Singh v. Jamuna Pershad Singh (6) and Saurendra Mohan Tagore v. Hurnuk Chand (7), namely, to what extent is it obligatory upon the executing Court to hold an investigation into the value of the property sought to be sold by the decree-holder. But it may be observed that the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Saadatmand Khan v. Phul

Kuar (8) indicate that an elaborate investigation is not necessary. The decree-holder runs a risk if he puts in a valuation which is manifestly erroneous; if it is established later on, that the judgment-debtor has suffered substantial injury by reason of such under-valuation, the sale is liable to be set aside under the provisions of the Code.

We may further point out that if the contention of the Appellant prevails, whereas there would be only one appeal under the Code from a decision upon the question of valuation in the course of proceedings for reversal of the sale under Rule 90 of Or. 21, there would be a first and a second appeal against an order for assessment of valuation antecedent to the sale. This could hardly have been intended by the Legislature.

The result, therefore, is that the preliminary objection is allowed and the appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Appeal dismissed.

to the appointment of a Receiver in a subsequent suit by the mortgagee on his mortgage, as any possible conflict between the two Receivers, where the same Receiver has not been appointed in both suits, may easily be avoided.

A mortgagee who has obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure cannot at that stage ask for a Receiver of the property under mortgage, since he has no title to the profits until at least he obtains an order absolute for foreclosure and is then kept out of possession by the action of the judgment-debtors.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th of August 1911, against the order of Babu Biraj Gopal Basu, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah Patna, dated the 28th of July 1911.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Ganesh Dutt Singh for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri and Babu Nagendra Nath Mitter for the Respondent.

This appeal is directed against an order by which a Receiver has been appointed in a mortgage suit under Or. 40, r. 1 of the Code of 1908. The mortgagee commenced a suit to enforce his security, on the 10th January 1910. An ex parte decree was made on the 22nd February 1911. On the 2nd March following, the mortgagee applied for the appointment of a Receiver. That application has been granted and Mr. G. M. Dey, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Receiver. On behalf of the Defendant in the mortgage suit, the order has been questioned before us on two grounds; namely, first, that a Receiver is unnecessary for the purposes of the mortgage suit because a Receiver has already been appointed in a partition suit amongst the owners of the properties; and, secondly, that the appointment of the Receiver is premature, because under the mortgage decree the mortgagee is not entitled to appropriate the profits of the properties given as security. In our opinion there is no substance in the first contention, but the second must prevail.

In so far as the first contention is concerned, it has been stated to us that in 1901 a partition suit was commenced amongst the owners of the properties in which a consent decree was made on the 31st May 1902. With a view to give effect to that decree, a Receiver was appointed. The properties given by way of mortgage include, however, not merely the properties under the charge of the Receiver in the partition suit, but also two other properties. In so far as the latter properties are concerned, the appointment of the Receiver in the partition suit clearly does not operate as a bar. But we are of opinion that even in respect of the other properties, a Receiver may very well be appointed in the mortgage suit, although a Receiver has been appointed in the partition suit. The Receiver in the partition suit acts under the direction of the Court in which that suit is pending and the sums collected by him are bound to be applied for the benefit of the parties to that litigation, under the direction of the Judge. In other words, the Receiver is bound to pay the money either into the hands of the proprietors or to their creditors and other persons entitled to the proceeds of the properties. On the other hand, if a Receiver is appointed in the mortgage suit he is bound to apply the proceeds for the benefit of the mortgagee. It has been suggested, however, that if different persons are appointed Receivers in the partition suit and the mortgage suit, there may possibly be a conflict between them, because undoubtedly the two Receivers could not simultaneously collect the proceeds of the same properties. [Searle v. Choat (1). Beach on Receivers, sec. 233]. We are of opinion that there is no substance in this contention. The difficulty may be avoided either by the appointment of the same person as Receiver in the two suits, or if different persons are appointed as Receivers, the collection may be made by one of the Receivers only, (for instance, by the Receiver in the partition suit), but the sums collected by him and payable to the mortgagors placed in the hands of the Receiver in the mortgage suit to be applied for the benefit of the mortgagee under the direction of the Judge. [Cf. Madaneswar Singh v. Mahamaya Prosad Singh (2)]. We are of opinion, therefore, that the first ground urged by the learned Vakil for the Appellant cannot be sustained.

In so far as the second contention is concerned, it has been urged that the object of the appointment of a Receiver in a mortgage-suit is to secure the application of the profits of the mortgaged properties for the benefit of the mortgagee. If the decree is for sale, and if it is established that the security is not sufficient to satisfy the judgment-debt, a Receiver will be appointed almost as a matter of course, specially if there has been default in the payment of interest. [Weatherall v. Eastern Mortgage Agency Co. (3), Hopkins v. Worcester Canal Co. (4), Herbert v.

Greene (5), Hackett v. Snow (6)]. But here the position is different. The mortgagee has obtained a decree for 'foreclosure, which does not entitle him to recover even the costs of the litigation from the mortgagors personally. Whether the decree has in this respect been properly drawn up or not, we are not called upon to consider. But under the decree as it now stands, the only right of the mortgagee is to foreclose the mortgagors and to take the property in lieu of his dues on his security; he is not entitled to the profits of the property. Consequently, a Receiver need not be appointed at this stage, because even if a Receiver were appointed, he could not apply the profits of the property for the benefit of the mortgagee. There is no suggestion that the properties are liable to be sold away in satisfaction of paramount charges. The position may be compared to that of a mortgagee who has the legal estate and can recover possession by ejectment. [Silver v. Bishop of Norwich (7), Berney v. Sewell (8), Sturch v. Young (9), Ackland v. Gravener (10)]. From this point of view, the second objection of the Appellant must be sustained.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order of the Court below discharged on the ground that the application for the appointment of a Receiver is premature.

We may add that a contingency may very possibly arise which may necessitate the appointment of a Receiver in these proceedings. The time allowed by the decree for the payment of the judgment-debt by the mortgagors has just expired, and, as we have been informed, the amount has not yet been paid. Consequently, under Or. 34, r. 3, of the Code of 1908, if the mortgagee applies for the final decree in the foreclosure suit, he is entitled to have the final decree drawn up as a matter of course, unless indeed the mortgagors can establish good cause for an extension of time which can be granted only on terms. As soon as the final decree is made in his favour, the mortgagee is entitled to apply for execution and delivery of possession; such possession may be delivered under r. 3 of Or. 34 or upon an application under sec. 51 of the Code. But it has been suggested that if an application of this character is made, the judgment-debtors are likely to apply for an adjournment of the proceedings, inasmuch as some of them have applied to have the ex parte decree vacated, while an appeal has also been preferred against that decree to this Court. If such an application is made, the successful decree-holder is entitled to contend that as now he has become the full owner of the property, he is entitled to possession and to receive the profits thereof. If the judgment-debtors seek to keep him out of possession of the property he may reasonably demand either security for the profits or the appointment of a Receiver under clause (d) of sec. 51 of the Code. It will, therefore, be open to the decree-holder to apply at once to the Subordinate Judge for a final decree under r. 3 of Or. 34; and unless it is proved that the mortgage-debt has been satisfied, or that there are good grounds for extension of time, (upon terms as to security or appointment of Receivers), it would be incumbent upon the Subordinate Judge to make the final decree. As soon as he makes the decree, the decree-holder will be entitled to be placed in possession. If at this stage the judgment-debtors apply that they may be allowed to continue in possession, occasion may arise for the appointment of a Receiver or the demand of security from the judgment-debtors. With these observations, we allow the appeal, but without costs.

Appeal allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 59
—Turn of worship, mortgage of—Registration.

A turn of worship in a temple is not immoveable property and a usufructuary mortgage thereof does not require registration under sec. 59, Transfer of Property Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 14th of June 1909, against the decree of Babu S. C. Ganguli, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 27th of February 1909, reversing a decree of Babu Behary Lal Banerjee, Munsif of Puri, dated the 28th of January 1908.

The Plaintiff prayed for a declaration that he was entitled to perform the sheba of the Thakur Surja Narayan from the 13th to the 20th of every month by virtue of a usufructuary mortgage-deed executed by the original owner of the pala on the 14th July 1879, that Plaintiff's right had been recognised by the Puri Raja and that he had been performing the sheba regularly for a period of 25 years or so, until Defendant No. 2 interfered by allowing Defendant No. 1 to perform the sheba during Plaintiff's turn.

The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in defence urged that the turn of worship was not transferable either by law or custom or usage, that the transfer had not been recognised by the Puri Raja; they also objected that the usufructuary mortgage-bond was not properly attested and they denied that the Plaintiff had performed the worship of the Thakur as alleged. Defendant No. 1 claimed to be owner of the pala under a deed of gift from the original *shebait*s.

The first Court decreed the suit, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the Puri Raja had not recognised the right of the Plaintiff to act as shebait and that such recognition was necessary to complete the title of the Plaintiff, that although Plaintiff appeared to have been allowed to perform the sheba from 13th to 20th of every month for a period of upwards of 20 years without a hitch, he was not satisfied that he was performing the sheba in the capacity of a shebait, that the usufructuary mortgage-bond on which the Plaintiff rested his title was not properly proved as required by secs. 68, 69 of the Evidence Act. In this view he did not enter into the question whether the turn of worship was validly alienable and dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Babu Lalit Mohun Mukherjee for the Appellant,

Babu Jotindra Narain Chowdhury for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiff brought this suit for the recovery of possession of a turn of worship in a certain temple for 8 days in the month from the 13th to the 20th by virtue of a usufructuary mortgage from the mother and guardian of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 on the allegation that he had been dispossessed from the same by the Manager of the Defendant No. 2 the Raja of Puri who is supporting the claim of Defendant No. 1. The Defendant No. 1 admits that the grandfather of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 was the original shebak, but says that he had in 1865 made a gift of this turn of worship in favour of his (Defendant No. 1's) father and that during his minority, Plaintiff had been employed as a khatnihar or paid servant on his behalf and used to pay him a certain amount of money every year.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 did not contest the Plaintiff's claim but both Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 did on various grounds. The Court of first instance decreed the suit for recovery of possession but the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the same. It is contended in second appeal that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong.

In the first place the learned Subordinate Judge finds that the usufructuary mortgage-bond is not proved because the evidence is not in conformity with the requirements of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and sec. 69 of the Evidence Act.

A turn of worship is not an interest in immoveable property. See Ishan Chandra Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (1): sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is applicable to mortgages of immoveable property only, has therefore no application. Then again the document in question was executed in 1879 three years before the Transfer of Property Act came into force and under sec. 2, cl. (c) the Act had no application. There is no other law which required that a document like the one in question should have been attested by witnesses.

JATI KAR v. MUKUNDA BASHI.

Then the learned Subordinate Judge says: "No doubt the Plaintiff was allowed to perform the deb-sheba from 13th to 20th of every month without a hitch but that in my opinion does not create any right in Plaintiff's favour since the Plaintiff has not been able to prove satisfactorily that he was doing the sheba from 13th to 20th of every month as a shebait," we are unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge. The Plaintiff claims as the mortgagee of a shebak and not as a shebak, if he had possession as such mortgagee that would be quite sufficient to make out a prima facie title as such mortgagee. In the case of Jagannath v. Birbhadra (2), it was held that the Plaintiff who had acted as shebait for 10 years had acquired a complete title against Defendants who had not sued to oust him within 6 years under Art. 120 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act. Although the learned Subordinate Judge finds that he had no doubt the Plaintiff had held possession for over 20 years he distinguishes this case because the period was not 10 years.

Then the learned Subordinate Judge says, "it does not lie in the mouth of the Defendant No. 2 to set up the right and possession of No. 1 Defendant's father Kangala since the Raja's predecessor admitted Plaintiff's possession by Ex. 2" and in the next sentence "Ex. 2 does not show that Plaintiff's possession or his right was ever admitted since it distinctly mentioned that Plaintiff was in possession on behalf of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4." As the Plaintiff claims as mortgagee only the possession claimed by him in 1880 must have been as mortgagee only and if that possession was recognised, that possession could not now be impeached by Defendant No. 2 or his manager.

The Plaintiff is himself one of the recognised *sebak*s on other days, and if in the case of such a shebak, on the acquisition of an additional turn of worship the ceremony of sharatir be at all necessary it is difficult to see how after undisputed possession for 20 years, and express recognition by or on behalf of Defendant No. 2, the question can be raised in the present case. Then again although the learned Subordinate Judge finds in the early part of his judgment that Plaintiff was undoubtedly in possession of the sheba from the 13th to 20th of every month, in a later part he says it was for the Plaintiff to prove that the turn of worship of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 was from the 13th to 20th and in conclusion finds the second issue against the Plaintiff.

The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is a curious combination of bad law and worse reasoning and we have no hesitation in setting aside the same.

As the judgment is full of contradiction it is difficult to make out what has been found for and what found against the Plaintiff. The case must, therefore, be remanded to the District Judge to try it himself. Costs to abide the result.

Case remanded.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL ORDERS

NOS. 503 AND 504 OF 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J. CARNDUFF, J. 1911, Heard, 3 and 4, August. Judgment, 8, August.]	LALDHARI SINGH and others, Appellants, v. MANAGER, COURT OF WARDS, BHADATPURA ESTATE, Respondent.
----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 232—Mortgage decree, assignment to one of several judgment-debtors—Execution by assignee, if lies—Discharge of debt by one judgment-debtor—Right if only to contribution.

The expression "a decree for money against several persons" in sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 means a personal decree for payment of money against two or more Defendants jointly.

A mortgage decree, even though it may direct the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal amount, is not a "decree for money" within the meaning of that section, and one of the judgment-debtors having obtained an assignment of such a decree may proceed to execute the decree by putting the mortgaged property to sale.

Where, however, one of the judgment-debtors had paid off the decree before taking an assignment, although the payments were not certified, there was nothing to pass under the assignment, and the only remedy of the judgment-debtor against his co-judgment-debtor was by a suit for contribution.

These were appeals preferred on the 15th of November 1909, against the order of Babu Durga Das Bose, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Patna, dated the 10th of July 1909.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Ganesh Dutt Singh and Sajani Kanta Sinha for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Charan Mitra and Srish Chandra Chowdhury for the Respondent.

These appeals are directed against an order by which the Court below has allowed execution to proceed on the basis of a mortgage decree at the instance of an assignee thereof. The circumstances under which the application for execution was made have not formed the subject of serious controversy in this Court, and may be briefly recited for our present purpose. On the 22nd November 1895, two brothers, Dhanukdhari Sing and Harihardhari Singh, executed a mortgage in favour of Saligram Singh. On the 6th February 1902, the mortgagee sued to enforce the security against the mortgagors and sixty-four other persons who had acquired an interest in the equity of redemption. On 2nd July 1902, an ex parte decree was made in favour of the Plaintiff mortgagee under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act in the following terms.

"That an ex parte modified decree be passed in favour of the Plaintiff for Rs. 33,530-9-10 and proportionate costs, and interest on Rs. 25,000 principal at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem from the date of the institution of the suit, i.e., from the 6th February 1902 up to the date of realization, if the money be paid within six months of the date on which the decree is signed, otherwise the interest will run at the above rate till six months after the date on which the decree is signed, and thereafter interest will be calculated at the rate of six per cent. per annum on the whole amount of the decree until that of realisation. It is further ordered that Defendants, excepting the Defendants Nos. 25 to 27, do pay the decretal money with costs and interest within six months from the date the de-decree is signed, and in case of non-payment within the time fixed by the Court, the mortgaged properties will be sold by auction, and the sale consideration, after deducting the expenses of realisation and sale, be credited against the decretal money, costs and interest."

It is admitted that up to the 22nd May 1905, a sum of Rs. 23,118 had been deposited by the judgment-debtors to the credit of the decree-holder: it is alleged that out of this sum Rs. 14,746 was contributed by Dhanukdhari and the balance Rs. 8,332 by Harihardhari. On the 17th November 1905, Harihardhari was declared a disqualified proprietor and his estate passed into the custody of the Court of Wards. On the 21st November and 13th December 1905, the Court of Wards paid to the representatives of the decree-holder who had meanwhile died Rs. 16,000 and on the 18th December another payment was made to the extent of Rs. 4,940-12. It is necessary to state here that the representatives of the decree-holder had taken out execution for Rs. 20,940-12 and the 18th December 1905 had been advertised as the date of the sale. The result of the payments was that the decree-holders put in an application to the effect that for the present, the execution case be "struck off". The execution case was thereupon dismissed. On the 6th July 1908, the representatives of the decree-holder executed a deed of assignment of their rights under the decree to the representatives of Harihardhari, and on the 28th November 1908 the Court of Wards on their behalf applied for execution of the decree. The application did not set out the specific sum for the realisation of which execution was taken out: but it was stated that the effect of the assignment was to extinguish the mortgage lien only in so far as the share of the assignee judgment-debtor was concerned. It was further alleged that execution was claimed in respect of the half share of the mortgaged premises owned by Dhanukdhari. Objection was preferred separately by several of the judgment-debtor on the two-fold ground that the nature of the decree was such as to extinguish the judgment-debt on assignment to one of the judgment-debtors, and that, as a matter of fact, the decree had been satisfied by the payments made on the 21st November and 13th and 18th December 1905, so that the assignor had no subsisting interest to convey to the assignee on the 6th July 1908. The Subordinate Judge overruled these objections, and allowed execution to proceed. The objectors, judgment-debtors, have preferred separate appeals to this Court, and the order of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the decree was one for money within the meaning of sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and that, consequently, upon transfer by the decree-holders to one of the judgment-debtors it became incapable of execution under cl. (b) of the proviso to that section; and, secondly, that the effect of the payments admittedly made to the decree-holders in November and December 1905 was to extinguish the judgment-debt. In support of the first of these grounds, it has been urged that as the decree called upon the judgment-debtors to pay the decretal money within a specified period it was a decree for money within the meaning of sec. 232 of the Code of 1882. In our opinion, this contention is not sustainable. Sec. 232, after providing that when a decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law it may be executed by the assignee, lays down that where a decree for money against several persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others. The question which requires consideration is, whether the decree in the case before us is a decree for money within the meaning of this proviso. The plain meaning of the proviso is that it is applicable only to the case of a decree for payment of money personally by several persons jointly : in other words, the expression "a decree for money against several persons" signifies a personal decree for the payment of money against two or more Defendants jointly. This is manifest from an examination of the principle which underlies the rule, as explained by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of Deegumbare Dabee v. Eshan Chandra Sein (1). That principle is that if one debtor satisfies the judgment-debt and takes an assignment of it, he cannot enforce it by execution or in any way against his co-debtors : his only remedy is to sue them for contribution and to compel them to pay him their share of the amount for which the decree was purchased, having regard to the proportion in which they were bound inter se to satisfy the original decree ; the position is different, if there is collateral security to which recourse may be had. [Reed v. Norris (2), Dowbiggen v. Bourne (3) as to which, see Cooper Pr. Ca. 645 and Armitage v. Baldwin (4). See also Copis v. Middleton (5), Hodgson v. Shaw (6), Holmes v. Day (7); Story on Equity Jurisprudence, secs. 499B, 499C].

The learned Vakil for the Appellants did not seriously dispute this proposition, and in view of the decisions in Panachand v. Sundarbai (8) and Lala Bhagun Prosad v. Holloway (9) the position, indeed, could not be seriously challenged. The learned Vakil, therefore, directed his efforts to distinguish the case before us from those to be found in the reports, on the ground that in those cases the decrees merely directed the sale of the mortgaged properties, and did not, as here, call upon the judgment-debtors to pay the decretal amount. In our opinion, the distinction suggested is entirely unsubstantial. In a matter of this description, we must look to the substance rather than to the form. It is immaterial whether or not the decree formally calls upon the judgment-debtors to pay the decretal amount, if, upon failure to make the payment, the only relief granted to the decree-holder is the sale of the mortgaged properties. A decree of this character is in its essence a decree for sale and can by no stretch of language be deemed a decree for payment of money. In the case before us, as we have already stated, besides the two mortgagors Defendants, there were sixty-four other persons who were joined as Defendants, because they had acquired an interest in the equity of redemption. These latter persons, it is not disputed, were not personally liable for payment of the mortgage money, though, no doubt, the mortgage property in their hands was liable to be sold for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt. But the decree calls upon all the judgment-debtors without distinction to pay up the decretal amount, and directs that upon their failure to do so the mortgage properties be sold. There can, therefore, be no room for even any plausible contention that the decree was intended to be a personal decree. It may be observed that the expression "decree for money" or an equivalent expression occurs, not merely in sec. 232 of the Code of 1882, but also in other parts of the Statute (see for instance, secs. 230, 258 and 295). In so far as sec. 230 is concerned, with regard to the question whether a mortgage decree is a decree which directs the payment of money, the view has sometimes been maintained that a decree which not only directs the sale of the hypothecated property, but also provides that if the sale-proceeds are insufficient to satisfy the judgment-debt, the decree may be executed against the Defendant personally is a mortgage decree [Fazil Hawaladar v. Krishna Bandhoo (10), Kartick Nath v. Jaggernath (11), Ram Charan v. Sheobarat (12), Jadu Nath v. Jagmohan (13). See also Pahalwan v. Narain (14)]. We are, however, not now concerned with the true nature of a composite decree of this character, which, as pointed out in Chandi Charan v. Ambika Charan (15) and Abbakki v. Krishnaya (16), is contrary to the procedure prescribed by secs. 88 and 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. [See also Gopal Dass v. Ali Muhammad (17)]. For an illustration of a case of a composite decree, reference may be made to Hart v. Tara Prosanna Mukherji (18), where the question arose with reference to sec. 295 of the Code of 1882. The learned Judge held that every decree by virtue of which money is payable is to that extent a decree for money within the meaning of sec. 295, even though another relief, namely, sale of the mortgaged premises, may be granted by that very decree. The decree in the case mentioned was made before the Transfer of Property Act, and entitled the decree-holder to realise a specified sum from the mortgage property and from the Defendants personally; [see also Abdulla v. Oosman (19), Vaidhinadasamy v. Soma Sundram (20), where also the decree contained an order for the sale of the mortgage property and for the recovery personally from the judgment-debtor of what may remain undischarged by the sale-proceeds of the mortgage property]. The case before us is, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the cases upon which reliance is placed by the learned Vakil for the Appellants. The decree is in substance for sale of the mortgage property, and it cannot rightly be deemed a decree for money within the meaning of sec. 232 of the Code of 1882, Nuffer Chandra v. Baikunt Nath (21). The first contention of the Appellants must, therefore, be overruled.

In so far as the second contention of the Appellants is concerned our attention has been drawn to the circumstance that the payments on behalf of Harihardhari to the decree-holders were made in November and December 1905. But the deed of assignment was not executed till the 6th July 1908: meanwhile, Harihardhari had died on the 2nd March 1907. The learned Vakil for the Appellants has contended that the money paid in 1905 was for satisfaction of the decree and not for any intended assignment thereof. On behalf of the Respondent it has been argued, on the other hand, that the assignment effected by the deed of the 6th July 1908 was in contemplation in 1905. We are unable, after careful consideration or all the surrounding circumstances, to accept the contention of the Respondents as established by the evidence on the record. It will be observed that the long delay in the execution of the deed or assignment is not satisfactorily explained, and the solitary witness examined on behalf of the assignees completely gives away his case when he admits that he cannot say whether the payments recited in the assignment deed were made in satisfaction of the decree. It must further be observed that in 1905 when these sums were paid, if the payments were made with a view to purchase the decree, the sanction of the superior officers of the Court of Wards in ordinary course would be taken. No contemporaneous documentary evidence has, however, been produced. It is also a matter of legitimate comment that the assignors have not been, though they easily might have been, examined. We are not unmindful that the somewhat laconic and ambiguous expression used by the decree-holders in their petition of the 18th December 1905, namely, "for the present, the execution be struck off" may tend to some extent to support the theory of an assignment. But it is equally consistent with the case that the decree-holders may have reserved room for consideration whether the whole sum realisable under the decree which carried interest had been paid. We do not also overlook the circumstance that the payments were not certified to the Court. But this is equally consistent with the case of the Appellants, as it merely indicates that the Court of Wards relied implicitly upon the good faith of the decree-holders; whether the intention was that the decree should be satisfied or should merely be assigned, the judgment-debtor who made the payment took it for granted that the decree-holders would deal honestly with him. On the other hand, we have the significant circumstance that no mention was made in the application by the decree-holders on the 18th December 1905, that they had arranged to divest themselves of all their rights under the decree in favour of one of the judgment-debtors. This taken along with the circumstance that the first tangible evidence of the assignment is the deed of the 6th July 1908, executed nearly three years after the payment of the consideration money, lends strong support to the theory of the Appellants that the assignment, if not absolutely an afterthought, was at any rate not finally and definitely settled in 1905; as, indeed, the witness for the decree-holders admits, it was the result of subsequent negotiations, probably suggested by the necessity of a contribution suit which must otherwise inevitably result. On the whole, we are of opinion that the Respondents have failed to establish conclusively that there was in 1905, when the payments were made, any concluded agreement for assignment, and we are inclined to adopt the view that it was subsequently decided to have recourse to a deed of assignment to avoid the necessity for a contribution suit. This latter aspect of the case is rendered more than probable by the allegation of the Appellants that the sums paid towards the satisfaction of the decree before the 21st November 1905 had not been contributed by the mortgagors in equal proportion, and that the representatives of LALDHARI SINGH v. MANAGER, COURT OF WARDS, BHABATPURA ESTATE.

Harihardhari have taken recourse to a deed of assignment, because otherwise as Plaintiffs in a contribution suit they would have to meet any equitable defence that might be taken by Dhanukdhari. The second contention of the Appellants must consequently prevail.

The result, therefore, is that these appeals are allowed, and the order of the Court below discharged. The Appellants are entitled to their costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at three gold mohurs in each appeal.

No. 1906 OF 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J. CARNDUFF, J. 1911, Heard, 30, June. Judgment, 21, July.]	RAMAVATAR SINGH and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. TULSI PROSAD SINGH, Plaintiff, Respondent.
--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Mortgage, usufructuary—Suit for redemption—Accountability of mortgagee for illegal realisation of cess from tenants—Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882, sec. 76—Stipulation by mortgagee to pay a portion of profits to mortgagor—Subsequent arrangement regarding mode of payment, if may be proved by parol evidence—Evidence Act, (I of 1872), sec. 92.

Under a usufructuary mortgage of 1877 the mortgagee undertook to pay to the mortgagor an annual sum of Rs. 10 odd and apply the balance of the profits to payment of revenue charges and interest on the mortgage debt :

Held—That oral evidence to prove a subsequent arrangement under which the mortgagee allowed the mortgagor to possess and enjoy a portion of the property in lieu of the payment was admissible in evidence inasmuch as it did not supersede or vary the stipulation regarding the payment but merely concerned the mode of payment.

Held, further—That in a suit for redemption by the mortgagor the mortgagee was bound to account for the amounts they realised from the tenants as cesses subsequently imposed by the Cess Act of 1880, and payable by the tenants to the mortgagor.

The mortgagee's accountability is not limited to items within the contemplation of the mortgage contract but may extend to amounts which the mortgagee was enabled to realise out of the mortgaged property by taking advantage of his position as mortgagee.

This was an appeal preferred on the 2nd of September 1909, against the decree of Mr. M. K. Dey, District Judge of Zillah Saran, dated the 25th of May 1909, reversing that of Babu Shyama Kanta Nag, Subordinate Judge of that place, dated the 22nd of December 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Defendants in an action commenced by the Plaintiff-Respondent for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage. The case for the Plaintiff is that, on the 23rd June 1877, his father executed a usufructuary mortgage for nine years in favour of the Defendants or their predecessors for a sum of Rs. 1,400. Under the terms of

of the mortgage deed, the mortgagees were to take possession of the premises, and apply the profits in the manner following, that is, pay Rs. 19-4-0 as the Government revenue and Rs. 10 1-3 as profit to the mortgagor, and take the balance, which was assumed to be Rs. 58-8-0, in lieu of interest on the mortgage money at the rate of Rs. 3-12-0 per cent. per annum. It was further stipulated that if as a matter of fact the total income exceeded the assumed amount, namely, Rs. 81-13 3, the mortgagees would be entitled to appropriate the excess on account of their labour and exertion. The substance of the transaction, therefore, was that the mortgagees would pay to the mortgagor an annual sum of Rs. 10 1-3, and apply the balance in payment of revenue charges and interest on the mortgage debt. The Plaintiff alleges that the mortgagees never paid the annual profit, and had, on the other hand, appropriated the sum annually collected by them from the tenants on account of cesses payable under the Bengal Cess Act, 1880. The Plaintiff, therefore, seeks for an account, and prays that he may be allowed to redeem upon payment of whatever sum is found due to the mortgagees. The Defendants contend that they are entitled to the whole of the mortgage money before redemption can be allowed, because they have uniformly paid the profit to the mortgagor and have never collected any sum from the tenants on account of cesses. In so far as the payment of the profit to the mortgagor is concerned, however, the Defendants do not assert that the sums were paid in cash, but they allege that in October or November 1877 the mortgagor was placed in possession of a portion of the mortgaged properties, and it was agreed between the parties that, as the consideration for this transaction, the mortgagor would pay the mortgagees the sum of Rs. 10-1-3 annually, in other words, according to the mortgagees, the sum in question has not been paid in cash to the mortgagor, but the latter has been placed in possession of a part of the mortgaged premises, the income whereof is sufficient to wipe out the annual debt. The Court of first instance found upon both the points in favour of the Defendants. The Subordinate Judge held that the subsequent transaction alleged by the mortgagees had been established on the evidence, and that the Defendants had not collected cesses, or indeed, any sum in excess of the rent from the tenants. In this view, the Subordinate Judge made a decree for redemption in favour of the Plaintiff, on the footing that Rs. 1,400, that is, the entire consideration money for the mortgage, had to be paid for the redemption thereof. Upon appeal the learned District Judge has modified this decision. Upon the first question he has held that the Defendants are not entitled to adduce oral evidence to prove the transaction alleged by them, and in support of this view he has placed reliance upon the cases of Khoda Buksh v. Alimunissa (1) and Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (2). With regard to the second point the District Judge has held that the Defendants mortgagees have collected cesses from the tenants and have retained them; in this view, he has held that the Plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgage upon payment of only Rs. 317-15-1. The Defendants have now appealed to this Court and, on their behalf, the decision of the District Judge has been challenged on two grounds, namely, first, that the Defendants were entitled to prove by oral evidence the arrangement alleged to have been made between the parties for the payment of the annual profit of Rs. 10-1-3 to the mortgagor, and, secondly, that, even on the assumption that the Defendants have realised cesses from the tenants, the Plaintiff is not entitled to claim these sums in the course of the accounts in a redemption suit, because if the Plaintiff were now to institute a suit for recovery of the money alleged to have been improperly appropriated by the mortgagees, his claim would be successfully met by the plea of limitation, except with regard to the cesses for the three years immediately preceding the suit. In our opinion, the first contention of the Defendants-Appellants must prevail while the second must be overruled.

In support of the first ground taken by the Appellants, it has been urged that the arrangement alleged by them was not in variation of the terms of the original usufructuary mortgage, and that, in substance, it was only a mode of payment adopted by the parties with regard to the annual profit of Rs. 10-1-3. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded. The Defendants have never repudiated the terms of the mortgage, they have never denied that they were bound, under its terms, to pay to the Plaintiff the sum fixed as annual profits. Their contention is that they have made the payment, not in cash, but by placing at the disposal of the mortgagor the profits of a portion of the mortgaged premises. The arrangement, therefore, was not in supersession or even variation of the mortgage: it was made on the assumption that the mortgage was a valid transaction in its entirety. The decisions upon which the District Judge has placed reliance are clearly distinguishable. In Khoda Buksh v. Alimunissa (1), the Court was called upon to consider the validity of a lease granted by a usufructuary mortgagee to the mortgagor. It was ruled that the two transactions were separate. This principle, if it has any application to the case before us, plainly does not assist the contention of the Plaintiff-Respondent. The case of Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (2) merely shows that after a mortgage has been granted its terms cannot be varied by a parol agreement between the parties. In that case the effect of the oral agreement alleged was to modify the terms of the mortgage contract in essential particulars, as it purported to reduce the amount recoverable under the deed, take away the right of sale, and provide for the payment of the reduced debt by a sale of property not included in the mortgage transaction. The case before us is manifestly of an entirely different description and falls within the principle of the decision in Gopal Singh v. Laloo Lall (3). The essence of the matter is as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Sah Lal Chand v. Indrajit (4) that the Indian Evidence Act does not say that no statement of facts in a written instrument may be contradicted, but only that the terms of the contract may not be varied, added to, subtracted from, or contradicted [see also Ram Baksh v. Durjan (5)]. Here the Defendants do not seek, by parol evidence to contradict or vary the terms of the mortgage contract; they merely seek to show that the sum, payable as profit to the mortgagor, has been paid in a particular mode. This, in our opinion, it is perfectly competent for them to do. The judgment of the District Judge upon this point cannot, therefore, be supported, and the case must be remanded for further consideration, because, although the District Judge has indicated that he was not quite satisfied with the evidence as to the alleged agreement, he has not reversed the clear and definite finding of the original Court that the agreement has been satisfactorily established. The first ground urged on behalf of the Appellants must therefore prevail.

In support of the second ground taken by the Appellants, it has been argued that they are not liable to account for the sums, found by the District Judge to have been collected by them on account of cesses from the tenants in occupation of the mortgaged premises. It has been contended in substance that such sums have been collected by them not as mortgagees, but as trespassers, and cannot be included in the mortgage account; in other words, that the mortgagor ought to bring a separate suit for recovery of those sums, and if he should do so, he would be successfully met by the plea of limitation with regard to a considerable portion of the claim. Before we examine the soundness of this position, it is necessary to observe that at the time of the mortgage contract in 1877 cesses were not payable by the tenants to their landlord, the liability was first imposed by the Bengal Cess Act, 1880. When, therefore, the proprietor granted the mortgage, he did not and could not anticipate that the mortgagees would be in a position to realise from the tenants any sums in excess of the actual rents. It appears that after the statutory liability had been imposed on the tenants the usufructuary mortgagees in possession collected from them, not merely the rents, but also the cesses. The result, therefore, has been that, while the mortgagor as proprietor had paid the cesses to the Collector, the sums recoverable by them from the tenants in that behalf have been intercepted by the mortgagees in possession. The question arises whether under these circumstances the mortgagees are not bound in the mortgage account to credit the mortgagor with the sums thus improperly realised by them. Upon an examination of the mortgage contract, it is, we think, fairly clear that the parties did not intend that any accounts should be taken at the time of redemption. They arbitrarily fixed the income of the property, and settled the amount to be paid therefrom on account of Government demands and interest on the security. The remainder, which was a fixed sum of Rs. 10-1-3, was to be annually paid to the mortgagor as surplus profits. The arrangement, therefore, in substance was that if the contract was faithfully performed by both sides, the mortgagor, upon payment of the principal sum alone, would become entitled to redeem the property. The contingency, however, which has happened, is that the mortgagees have collected from the tenants sums which were realisable under a subsequent Statute only by the proprietor mortgagor. Are they not in equity bound to account for such sums? Sec. 76 of the Transfer of Property Act provides in cls. (g) and (h) that the mortgagee in possession is to account for all sums received by him as mortgagee, in other words, if a mortgagee in possession has received profits from the mortgaged property in an altogether different character, he cannot be called upon to account for them. Instances of possession by a person who is a mortgagee, but receives the profits in a different character, may be found in the books. [Blennerhassett v. Day (6) where a mortgagee took possession under a forfeiture, and Page v. Linwood (7) where a mortgagee entered into possession as lessee. See also Karamal v. Imdad (8) and Khadim v. Sheo Manraj (9)]. In the case before us, the mortgagees had no other character in which they could claim to be in possession. The principle, therefore, applies that the mortgagor is entitled to credit for every sum realised by the mortgagees out of a mortgaged property. This principle is based as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Story in Gordon v. Lewis (10) on the doctrine that a mortgagee shall not get any advantage out of the mortgage fund beyond principal and interest. [Goubbins v. Creed (11)]: in other words, in the view of a Court of Equity, the rents and profits are incidents de jure to the ownership of the equity of redemption, and the mortgagee in possession is bound to apply whatever profits he actually receives towards the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. An instructive illustration of the application of this doctrine is to be found in the case of Dexter v. Arnold (12). There a mortgagee in possession had transferred a portion of the mortgaged premises as if he were the absolute owner thereof, and received a large sum of money. When the mortgagor sought redemption, he claimed the benefit of the sum obtained by the mortgagee by the sale. The mortgagee contended that he had received the sum by a wrongful act, and was not bound to include it in the mortgage accounts. Mr. Justice Story overruled this contention, and held that as the mortgagor was prepared to adopt the transactions if it had been made with his consent, he was entitled to the benefit of the sum wrongfully received by the mortgagee. In the case before us the mortgagees have improperly collected the cesses from the tenants. The mortgagor has not repudiated these transactions, he has not sought to make the tenants liable on the ground that the payments had been made to a person not authorised to collect them on his behalf as proprietor. Under these circumstances, it is, in our opinion, but just that the mortgagor should be allowed credit for these sums. The view we take is not opposed to the decisions in Nawal Kisore v. Inait Ali (13) and Sujat Ali v. Dut Ram (14). In the first of these cases, the mortgagee in possession had collected from the tenants sums not legally payable by them because they were in the nature of illegal cesses. The Court held that, as a general rule, it was equitable to give the mortgagor credit for every sum entered in the account rendered by the mortgagees as realised and not to allow the latter to repudiate any of these items on the plea that they were illegal cesses. In the second case, the Court held that, under similar circumstances, as the mortgagees had not entered the illegal cesses in the accounts kept by them, the mortgagee was not entitled to claim them. This distinction obviously cannot be supported on principle. If it were recognised, the result would be that the mortgagee who honestly admitted that he had recovered the illegal cesses would be liable, whereas the mortgagee who was unscrupulous enough to deny that he had realised them would escape liability. The liability, in our opinion, ought to depend upon the nature of the sums collected and the character in which they were realised. Tested from these points of view, the case before us is reasonably free from difficulty. In the first place, the Defendants were in possession as mortgagees: no other character could be attributed to them. While they were entitled to intercept the rents payable by the tenants, they also realised, no doubt improperly and without the assent of the mortgagor, the sums payable as cesses. But they found themselves able to do so only because they had been placed in possession as mortgagees. But for their character as mortgagees, they would have had no access to the tenants, and would not have been able to collect any sums at all from them. In the second place, the sums realised were payable by the tenants by reason of their occupation of the land; it was a statutory liability imposed upon them, calculated upon the annual value of the lands. The essence of the matter, therefore, is that the mortgagees who had as such got into possession and who were entitled under the mortgage contract to collect the rents took advantage of their position as mortgagees to collect other sums from the tenants payable by the latter in their character as tenants not to the mortgagees but to the mortgagor. In our opinion, there can be no doubt, under these circumstances, that the mortgagees are liable to account for the profits received. Some analogy is furnished by a very different class of cases in which it has been held that a trespasser who has been unlawfully in occupation of land is bound to account not merely for the rents and profits but also for whatever sums he may have collected even by any wrongful means; [see, for instance, Chunder Coomar v. Kashee Nath (15) where a trespasser was made liable, not only for the ordinary rents and profits, but also for what he had collected from the tenants by wrongful extortion, and Buneead Singh v. Sudaseeb Dutt (16) where a trespasser was made liable for value of trees cut down and appropriated by himself; see also Moyi v. Avuthramar (17). But in the case of In re Radha Mohan Ghosh (18) a different view was taken and it was ruled that illegal collections cannot be taken into account in the adjustment of mesne profits]. No doubt these cases are much simpler, because the wrong-doer receives wrongfully whatever he realises, whereas in the case before us the receipt of the rent by the mortgagees is lawful, but the realisation of the cesses is unlawful. For the reasons stated, however, we are of opinion that the realisation of the rents as well as the cesses stands on the same footing, and the mortgagees are not entitled to set up as a defence that they have collected the cesses as trespassers and are not bound to include them in the mortgage accounts. [Narsingh v. Lukputty (19), Ramnath v. Brahmamoyi (20); see also Nogendrabala v. Gurudoyal (21), which shows that the agent of a landlord is bound to account for illegal cesses collected from tenants, though the contrary view may possibly be supported by Nobin Chunder v. Gooroo Gobind (22), [explained in Nobin v. Gooroo (23)]. The second objection taken by the Appellants must consequently be overruled..

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the District Judge discharged. The case is remanded to him in order that he may rehear the appeal. He will first consider whether the arrangement alleged by the Defendants for payment of the annual profit of Rs. 10-1-3 has been established on the evidence; if it has been proved, the mortgagor is not entitled to claim any credit on this amount; if it has not been proved, the mortgagor is entitled to have the amount with interest thereon at six per cent. per annum set off against the principal sum. In so far as the cesses are concerned, we affirm the finding of the District Judge that the Defendants have realised them, and the Plaintiff is entitled to credit to that extent with similar interest on the sums realised when the mortgage accounts are taken. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Case remanded.

the Magistrate should dismiss the complaint at once or elect to hold inquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., before issuing process.

Where the Magistrate examined the complainant on the 28th April and without dismissing the complaint then and there adjourned the case to the 26th May, and then on that date after making certain enquiries from the solicitor of the accused and looking into papers which had been filed by the defence before the police, dismissed the complaint:

Held—That the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular, and that having virtually elected to hold an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., he should not have dismissed the complaint without giving an opportunity to the complainant to adduce evidence in support of his case, and if, upon such opportunity being given, he still failed to produce his witnesses, then his case might have been dismissed upon that ground.

This was a Rule issued on the 7th of July 1911, against the order passed by Mr. J. Thornhill, Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, on the 26th of May 1911, refusing the Petitioner's application for the issue of process against the Opposite Party under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

The facts of the case material to the report as disclosed in the petition were as follows:—

"On the 28th February 1911, the Petitioner lodged a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate alleging that the Petitioner used to reside in No. 1, Akhil Mistry's Lane, and that on the 13th October 1910 he left for Balasore with his family and took his Bank of Bengal cheque-book with him, that on the 2nd November 1910 he came to Calcutta on business and stayed for 2 or 3 days but was obliged to leave Calcutta abruptly in consequence of an attack of fever and forgot to take his cheque-book, that he finally returned to Calcutta from Balasore on the 27th January 1911 and stopped with his family at 95, Cornwallis Street, and that on the 28th January 1911 he came to No. 1, Akhil Mistry's Lane, to take away his things and to vacate the house once for all when he found his cheque-book missing. That directly on his return home at about 10 o'clock in the evening, he sent intimation by post to the Bank of Bengal as regards the loss of the book and that on the 11th February 1911 the Bank informed him that a cheque out of the missing book for Rs. 207 purporting to have been drawn by him in favour of Kunjeswar Misra was presented by the latter personally for payment, that thereupon the Petitioner went to the Bank, saw the cheque and told the Chief Accountant that his signature had been forged and that the Petitioner accordingly prayed that processes might be issued against the Opposite Party under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

After three or four adjournments the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate took up the case on the 26th of May and after having put some questions to the Petitioner examined the accused at length and without taking the evidence of the Petitioner's witnesses Dharendra Nath Bose, Bibhuti Bhushan Bhattacharjya and the Chief Accountant of the Bank of Bengal who were present in Court passed an order to the effect: "application refused."

The Petitioner submitted that the witnesses would have proved that the signature on the cheque No. I. C. C. 88899 was not the Petitioner's signature and that the accused attempted to cash the cheque knowing the same to be forged.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Dabu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

It is clear that there have been great irregularities in the conduct of this case. The complaint was made on the 28th February 1911 by one Dr. Sandyal against one Kunjeswar Misra for having fraudulently used a forged cheque in his name. The case was adjourned from time to time, for what reason we know not, but the complainant was not examined until the 28th April 1911, and according to law after the examination of the complainant on oath the Magistrate was bound to dismiss the complaint at once, or to elect to hold enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., before issuing process.

It appears from the fact that he adjourned the case till the 26th May 1911 that he elected to do the latter and it was therefore his duty to impress upon the complainant that he was bound to produce his witnesses on the 26th May and he should then, if no witnesses were produced, have dismissed the complaint upon his disbelief of the complainant's statement. But he does nothing of the kind. He proceeds to make a detailed investigation and to hear the accused who entirely without process and apparently without any reason had appeared in Court by a solicitor; he made enquiry from his solicitor and looked into the papers which had been filed by the defence before the Police; and as the result of this ex parte enquiry he dismissed the complaint, not on the ground that the complainant was unable to produce any witness.

DR. H. P. SANDYAL v. KUNJESWAR MISRA.

We, therefore, think that the case must go back to the Chief Presidency Magistrate to give Dr. Sandyal an opportunity to prove his case and produce his witnesses, and if he does not produce any witnesses then this case may be dismissed upon that ground.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute. The records will be returned to the lower Court.

The law does not permit of a man being arrested in order to put pressure on his son to confess even if the person causing the arrest believed that by so doing he will get evidence that will lead to the conviction of persons engaged in a huge conspiracy.

Where three persons were found to have acted in concert in having a man arrested with that object, the fact that two of them did not believe the story upon which the charge against the son was based to be true whilst the third believed in its truth was no ground for the exemption of the latter from liability for damages resulting to the father from the conspiracy, for the motive of one conspirator may be different from that of the others.

The standard of proof of a conspiracy in a suit for damages resulting therefrom is not in India the same as if the Defendants were being tried on a criminal charge.

IN THE GOODS OF GOPESUR DUTT (6) relied on.

A suit for damages resulting from a conspiracy which would be indictable at Common Law lies in British India according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and the Indian Penal Code by providing for only one form of criminal conspiracy, viz, to wage war against the King, cannot be considered to have taken away this civil remedy either expressly or by necessary implication.

QUINN v. LEATHERM (7) followed.

A suit brought on a conspiracy must be kept strictly to the cause of action that has been set out in the plaint.

If a conspiracy is, as in this case, indictable at Common Law, it gives rise to civil liability if damage has been occasioned by it to the Plaintiff.

(6) Unreported.

(7) [1901] A. C. 495.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

The present suit being based on two causes of action, viz., (1) to recover the damage occasioned to the Plaintiff as the result of an actionable conspiracy; and (2) to recover damages for malicious prosecution against the Defendants as joint tortfeasors,

Held—That the suit though instituted beyond the period of limitation provided for suits for compensation for malicious prosecution was, in regard to the first mentioned cause of action, not barred by limitation, as it was brought within the period provided by Art. 36 or Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, the former article being applicable to the matter, and if it did not apply the latter being applicable.

Damage to a substantial amount should be proved by the Plaintiff in order to establish a cause of action for conspiracy, though if substantial damage is proved the damages awarded need not be limited to the precise amount proved.

Held—That the Plaintiff should recover the amount he had to spend owing to his arrest, such damage not being too remote.

A public officer sued in respect of an act done in bad faith is not entitled to notice under sec. 80, Civil Procedure Code.

SHAHUNSHAH BEGUM v. FERGUSON (9), RAGHUBANS v. PHOOL KUMARI (10), MUHAMMAD v. PANNA (11) relied on.

It is a rule of professional ethics of almost universal application that having taken up the position of an advocate, a counsel should refrain from testifying on a trial which is being conducted by him.

It is not the law that every person in a joint Hindu family should, merely on the ground that a bomb is found in the joint family residence, be liable to be imprisoned and tried for an offence under the Explosive Substances Act (sec. 5). If the article is found in a portion of the house of which one member of the family has the exclusive use, such member must prima facie be held responsible for anything that is found there. But if the article is found in a portion of the house of which all the members of the family have use then prima facie the karta of the family is responsible. But in either case it is only a presumption which may be rebutted and if the Police act on the information, which they believe, showing that the article found in a house is in the exclusive possession of one member of the family and the article is found in a portion of the joint family residence of which all the members of the family have the use, then the head of the family is not liable to arrest merely on the ground that the article is found in a portion of the house to which all the family can resort.

QUEEN EMPRESS v. SANGAM LAL (5) relied on.

The Rules contained in what is known as the Jail Code are rules framed by the Local Government under the powers contained in the Prisons Act and subsequently sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council. Rules when so framed and approved have the same force as the Statute and it is not open to any person to set aside the provisions of such Rules.

A careful and accurate record of the first information has always been considered as a matter of the highest importance by the Courts in India, the object of the first information being to show what was the manner in which the occurrence was related when the case was first started.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

As the first information can be used in evidence under secs. 157 and 158 of the Evidence Act to corroborate or impeach the testimony of the person lodging the first information such a document becomes valueless if drawn up by some person other than the proper informant.

As the first information in this case which related to a charge of criminal conspiracy at Midnapore was drawn up by a police-officer employed in the Criminal Investigation Department in Calcutta and settled by an attorney, held, that it was of no value.

The object of recording "case diaries" under sec. 172, Cr. P. C., is to enable Courts to check the method of investigation by the Police, and this object was defeated in this case as the provisions of the law for recording "case diaries" from day to day had been deliberately disobeyed by the Police during the most important period of the investigation.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MANNU (4) referred to.

This suit was originally instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Midnapore, but was removed for trial by the High Court in its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. The hearing of the suit commenced on the 17th August 1910 and lasted till 21st July 1911 occupying in all 188 days.

The facts and arguments in the case will fully appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is a suit to recover damages resulting from an alleged conspiracy.

The present suit is one of five analogous suits brought against the present Defendants arising out of a criminal case which was commonly known as the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy Case. [The Emperor v. Santosh Chunder Dass and others (1)].

The Plaintiff, Peary Mohan Das, is about 68 years of age. He appeared to me to be older. He was formerly in Government service as a Sub-Registrar of deeds—but in the year 1884 his services were dispensed with owing to his having returned to the person presenting the same a deed which was believed to be forged.

Since the year 1884 the Plaintiff has lived in Midnapore where he appears to be held in respect and esteem.

The first Defendant, Mr. Donald Weston, is a member of the Indian Civil Service and was formerly District Magistrate and Collector of Midnapore. The second Defendant, Moulvi Mozaharul Huq, is a Deputy Superintendent in the Bengal Police. Having been employed for some time in the Criminal Investigation Department, towards the end of 1907, he was appointed as Deputy Superintendent of Police at Midnapore. The third Defendant, Babu Lal Mohun Guha, is an Inspector in the Bengal Police, and in the year 1908 was Inspector of Police at Midnapore.

The Plaintiff's wife is Basanta Kumari. Basanta, who is old and infirm, is mother's sister (mashi) to Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, C. S. I., one of the leading Vakils of this Court.

The Plaintiff has three sons Ashutosh, Santosh Chandra and Paritosh.

In the early part of the year 1908, his household consisted of himself, his wife his three sons, a grandson (daughter's son) Jotindra Nath Sen, a cook, a maid servant and a boy servant Bonomali Das. In addition to these there were the young ladies in the zenana. On the 14th January 1908, Santosh who had obtained the appointment of a probationary Sub-Inspector in the Bengal Police went to the Police Training College at Ranchi.

On the 3rd May the Plaintiff's house and six other houses at Midnapore were searched by the Police but nothing incriminatory was found. What the reason for this search was or from whom the information emanated which led to the search we do not know, but apparently it had been intended by the authorities that these searches should take place simultaneously with the searches in Calcutta in connection with the Alipore Conspiracy.*

On the night of the 13th of June Santosh returned to his father's house owing to the vacation at Ranchi. On the 3rd July the Plaintiff's son Ashutosh who was a mail clerk in the 'Midnapore Post Office was transferred on six hours' notice from Midnapore to Mozufferpore.

On the night of the 7th July, the Moulvi applied for search warrants to search the Plaintiff's house and Hanumanjee's temple of which one Surendra Nath Mookherjee was the pujari.

The application for the search warrants was made to Mr. Nelson, late at night. On the morning of the 8th July, the search of the Plaintiff's house was conducted by the Moulvi and Lal Mohun, assisted by others of the Police—the house being surrounded by the Military Police. Almost at the end of the search a bomb was discovered in the Plaintiff's bailakhannah and Santosh was arrested. The search party was in charge of Mr. Brett, the Assistant Superintendent of Police.

The bomb was subsequently taken to Mr. Weston and afterwards opened by Captain (now Major) Weinman, I. M. S., then Civil Surgeon at Midnapore. Upon the bomb being opened by Major Weinman, it was found to contain a large number of shots and brownish yellowish powder which on examination by the Chemical Examiner proved to be a mixture of sulphide of arsenic and chlorate of potash. This mixture is used in what are commonly known as "throw-down" bombs much in use in this country. The bomb however contained almost one ounce of the powder. The evidence of the Chemical Examiner proves that the bomb was a dangerous article if thrown down at close quarters.

The bomb however apparently was not an article requiring much skill in its manufacture. The powder and shot were contained in a leather covering over which was wrapped some cloth—the bomb being encased in a jute wrapping. It is said by the Plaintiff that the bomb was placed in his baitakhannah at the instigation of the Defendant the Moulvi by the boy Bonomali.

* Emperor v Barindra Kumar Ghose, 14 C. W. N. 1114 (1910)

On the 9th July, Santosh was produced before Mr. Nelson, Joint-Magistrate of Midnapore, and after the Magistrate had recorded a statement of Santosh's he was remanded to jail until the 23rd July. On the 23rd of July, Santosh was again produced before Mr. Nelson and on the same day either in the Court room or in the Court premises the Plaintiff was arrested. The Plaintiff alleges that between the 9th and 23rd July interviews took place between him and the Defendants, at which threats were held out to him that unless he induced Santosh to confess he himself would be arrested and that it was owing to his failure to induce Santosh to confess that he the Plaintiff was arrested on the 23rd July.

On 29th July, Santosh made a confession at the Defendant Weston's house, the confession being recorded by Mr. Nelson. Mr. Weston was present at the recording of the confession. It is said that this confession was not a genuine confession but was made by Santosh after being tutored by the Moulvi and Lal Mohun with a view to obtain his father's release. On the 26th July another bomb is said to have been found by a methrani in a drain near the Moulvi's house. On the 31st July further searches took place and in the record room of Baroda and Saroda Dutt a bomb was discovered by Lal Mohun.

This bomb is alleged to have been placed there by the Police. The bombs found in the drain and in the record room were despatched to the Chemical Examiner and, found on examination to be similar in composition to the bomb found in the Plaintiff's baitakhannah.

On the 31st July, the following persons were arrested—Baroda Prosad Dutt, Saroda Prosad Dutt, Jotindra Mohun Banerjee, Nirapada Mookerjee, Madhu Sudan Dutt, Sham Lal Shaha, Nikunja Maiti and Surendra Nath Mookherjee.

Further arrests were made on the 28th and 29th of August, the net result being that including one or two persons who subsequently surrendered thirty persons in all were arrested in connection with an alleged conspiracy. Amongst the persons who were arrested on the 28th of August were Babu Abinash Chandra Mitter, Babu Upendra Nath Maiti, the Rajah of Nara-jole and other persons who are persons of position and wealth in Midnapore. Surendra Nath Mookherjee on the 7th August was remanded to Police custody for seven days. On the 13th August, Santosh was taken out of jail into Police custody for three days.

On the 15th August, Surendra made a confession which was recorded by Babu Surendra Nath Chakravarti in the house and presence of Mr. Nelson, the Joint-Magistrate at Midnapore. This confession is said to have been made by Surendra after being tutored by the Police whilst he was in Police custody. On the 16th August, Mr. K. B. Dutt telegraphed to the Government of Bengal complaining of the methods adopted by the Police in connection with the case and on the 27th August he wrote to the Government enclosing statements of Ashutosh (the Plaintiff's son), Jotindra Nath Sen (the Plaintiff's grandson) and Upendra Nath Mookerjee (brother of Surendra Nath Mookherjee). On the 21st August, some of the accused who were then under arrest were produced before Mr. Nelson not in Court but in a room at the Court premises. Sanction to prosecute twenty-seven of the accused was procured from the Local Government on the 31st August and on the same day the accused that had been arrested earlier than the 28th August were produced before Mr. Nelson.

On that occasion the Plaintiffs, Nirapada Mookerjee and Jotindra Nath Banerjee, were discharged. According to Plaintiff's case on that occasion Santosh and Surendra both presented petitions to the Court which amounted to retraction of their confessions.

On the 4th September, the Plaintiff's son Ashutosh Dass was arrested and produced before the Joint-Magistrate who remanded him to jail until the 7th September. On the 7th September the accused were produced in Court and then it is agreed that Santosh and Surendra presented petitions to the Court alleging that their confessions had been extorted from them.

On the 7th September the first information report was filed in connection with the case.

This report implicated 154 persons in the conspiracy.

No evidence having been offered against the accused the Vacation Bench of the High Court admitted most of the accused to bail between the 18th September and 2nd October.

On the 4th November Mr. Sinha, then Advocate-General, appeared for the Crown before the Magistrate. On that day and the next day the informer, Rakhal Chandra Laha, was examined and stated that the story he was alleged to have given to the Police was wholly untrue and that the story had in fact been invented by the Police.

On the 9th November Mr. Sinha withdrew the prosecution against all the accused except Santosh Chandra Dass, Surendra Nath Mookherjee and Jogjiban Ghosh.

The Magistrate subsequently committed these three accused for trial.

Mr. Smither, the Additional Sessions Judge of Midnapore, convicted all three on 30th January 1909. Santosh, Surendra and Jogjiban all presented appeals to the High Court. The appeals were heard by a Bench consisting of the Chief Justice and Mookerjee, J.

On the 1st of June 1909 the High Court set aside the convictions against Santosh, Surendra and Jogjiban. Within a few days after the acquittal of Santosh, Surendra and Jogjiban, the Lieutenant-Governor directed Mr. Macpherson, the Commissioner of Burdwan, to hold a departmental inquiry into matters relating to the case. The report of that inquiry has not been produced.

But portions of the evidence given before that inquiry have been produced and have been used by the Defendants' Counsel for the purpose of endeavouring to contradict the witnesses for the Plaintiff. The foregoing remarks give in brief outline the principal events in the Midnapore Conspiracy Case.

This suit was instituted by the Plaintiff on the 15th November 1909.

The substance of the Plaintiff's case is that his arrest and the other events that followed thereon were done in furtherance of a conspiracy to injure or cause damage to him and not in the bona fide belief or with a reasonable suspicion that the Plaintiff was connected with the alleged Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy Case or with the bomb found in his house. The object of the conspiracy is alleged to have been that unless the Plaintiff induced his son Santosh to make a confession the

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Defendants would cause the Plaintiff to be arrested. The Plaintiff also alleges that in furtherance of such conspiracy he was arrested and that damage as such has resulted to him. This is the sum and substance of the Plaintiff's cause of action as set out in the plaint.

Each of the Defendants filed separate written statements.

The reason for the arrest of the Plaintiff is stated in the same terms in the written statements of the Defendants Weston and Moulvi and is in the following terms :—

"That on the 23rd July 1908 an information was laid by the Defendant, Moulvi Mazaharul Huq, before the Joint-Magistrate of Midnapore, a Judicial Officer, of there being reasonable grounds for the belief that the Plaintiff had been accessory to the commission of an offence under the Explosive Substances Act in connection with the said bomb which was found in his house and an application was made for the issue of a warrant for the arrest of the Plaintiff. The said information was laid and the said application for the issue of a warrant made by the said Defendant, Moulvi Mazaharul Huq, in good faith lawfully and in discharge of his duty and this Defendant (i.e., the Defendant Weston) and other superior officers of the Defendant Moulvi Mazaharul Huq in good faith approved of the said information being laid and of the application for the issue of a warrant of arrest being made."

The Defendant, Lal Mohun, in his written statement states that he had nothing to do with the application for the issue of the warrant to arrest the Plaintiff but that he arrested the Plaintiff under instructions from the Moulvi.

The Defendants also admit in their written statements that the application of the 7th July for the warrant to search the Plaintiff's house was made with the approval of the Defendant Weston. On this suit being called on for hearing an application was made by counsel to amend the written statements by striking out this admission.

The other defences raised in the written statements, except as to the service of notices on the Defendants with which I will deal later, may be summarised shortly, viz., that the Defendants acted with reasonable and probable cause and in good faith.

And, at the Bar, the learned Advocate-General has stated that the Defendants say that the story as told by the informer in the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy case was not only believed by them to be true but that the same was in fact true.

Issues were settled between the parties as follows :—

1. Did the Defendants or any two of them in concert or in conspiracy with each other conspire to injure or cause damage to the Plaintiff or did they or any two of them in furtherance of such conspiracy cause injury or damage to the Plaintiff?

2. Did the Defendants or any two of them in furtherance of such conspiracy maliciously wrongfully or illegally

(a) Search or cause a search to be made in Plaintiff's house on the 8th of July,

(b) Trespass or cause a trespass to be made upon the premises of the Plaintiff,

(c) Arrest or cause the Plaintiff to be arrested,

(d) Imprison or cause the Plaintiff to be imprisoned,

(e) Institute or continue a prosecution against the Plaintiff?

Defendants or any of them waived the right under sec. 80, C. P. C., or are they estopped from raising the plea that notice in accordance with the terms of the statute has not been duly served?

5. Is the suit barred by limitation?

6. What damages the Plaintiff is entitled to?

The Defendants carry the story back to the Partition of Bengal in the year 1905 in order to show what was their knowledge of the state of the District when they say that 'information of the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy come to their knowledge.

Following on the Partition of Bengal it cannot be doubted that there was in Midnapore and other parts of Bengal great political agitation.

Speeches were delivered against the Partition, the Swadeshi movement came into being, Akras and Samities were formed or extended and in some cases attempts were made to enforce the Swadeshi movement by criminal intimidation, force and violence, volunteers were enrolled originally for the purpose of keeping order at meetings and of performing similar duties but whose duties were subsequently extended to picketting the bazars in order to enforce the Swadeshi boycott. There also came into being literature samples of which have been exhibited in this case. This literature included periodicals and books which preached revolutionary doctrines and destruction of Europeans.

Amongst this literature was the Medini Bandhub published by one Deb Das Karan at Midnapore and two books known as Bartaman Rananiti (The Art of Modern Warfare) and Mukle-kon-Puthe (The Way of Salvation lies), the two latter being published in Calcutta. The Medini Bandhub was a newspaper appearing regularly at Midnapore.

The Bartaman Rananiti and the Mukle-kon-Puthe were not published 'in secret but bear the imprint of the publishers and the price, 12 annas.

There can be no doubt that this class of literature preached to the youth of the country must have had a grave effect. The Defendants also rely upon the prosecution of Khudiram for sedition and his being dragged through the town subsequently to the withdrawal of the prosecution in a carriage said to belong to Mr. K. B. Dutt as part of the information in their possession prior to the relation of the informer's reports. That the article which Khudiram was said to have been distributing was highly seditious there can be no doubt. But the prosecution appears to have been in a difficulty to prove that Khudiram distributed the leaflet. Too much reliance has I think been attempted to be placed by the Defendants on this incident. On the 6th December 1907 an attempt was made to blow up the train of the Lieutenant-Governor at Naraingarh not far from Midnapore. The two Defendants, the Moulvi and Lal Mohun, and one Rai Ram Saday Mockherjee Bihadur of the C. I. D. were deputed amongst others to inquire into this case.

The Moulvi says Mr. Weston gave him instructions in writing particularly asking him to ascertain whether any person had come back from abroad after learning mining. Those instructions have not been produced. Certain coolies engaged as plate-layers on the railway were arrested. One of these, Sibn, having first confessed became an informer. The others also confessed but one of them Nepal not until he had been handed over to the custody of the Defendant, Lal Mohun.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

The confessions went to show that those coolies placed gun-powder under a pot-sleeper on the line, the motive for the crime being that the coolies wished to injure one of the head coolies by blowing up one of the pot-sleepers for which he was responsible. The Police also produced from the hut of one of the coolies some gun-powder in a piece of newspaper. The expert evidence however showed that the explosive used was picric acid. It may be noticed that this was the first anarchist outrage in India in which picric acid was the explosive used. The accused when brought before the Court immediately retracted their confessions.

The evidence as to the commission of the offence, apart from the retracted confessions, consisted of the evidence of the informer that the explosion was caused by the gun-powder placed under the pot-sleeper and the expert evidence that the explosion was caused by picric acid.

The coolies were convicted both in the Sessions Court and by this Court on appeal.

Subsequently, the appeal in the Alipore Bomb Case (2) came on to be heard in this Court before the Chief Justice and Carnduff, J. I take the following extract from their judgment :—" Indeed it may be a question whether such a confession has not come to light in the course of these proceedings as it has been stated before us by Mr. Norton that for one of the attempted outrages on the late Lieutenant-Governor disclosed by the confessions in this case certain coolies have been tried and convicted and are still in prison, part of the evidence against them being their own confessions. If the confessions in this case are true then as Mr. Norton has remarked there may be reason to apprehend that those coolies have been improperly convicted. Mr. Norton who appeared for the Crown in that case as well as this has submitted that the Government should be moved by us to release those coolies. It is however outside our province to investigate this matter but no doubt it will be made the subject of careful inquiry by the Government if this has not already been done and the representation of Counsel for the Crown will be brought to the notice of the Government."

Mr. Norton now says that he made no such statement. The Chief Justice and Carnduff, J., tell me that they are positive that he did.

There can be little doubt that the collection of the learned Judges supported by their judgment written at the time ought to be preferred.

The case against the coolies is, I think, open to suspicion and the evidence that has been given in this case leaves me unconvinced as to its being a genuine case.

In the Midnapore case it is alleged in the first information that "In course of the investigation of the Naraingarh train-wrecking case, Midnapore, which occurred on the morning of the 6th December last, a clue was obtained of a conspiracy by a secret society working at various places at Midnapore and elsewhere and having as one of its objects the assassination of the District Magistrate by means of bombs, explosives or fire-arms."

Nothing has been disclosed in this case to suggest that such a statement has any foundation. The discovery of the Midnapore Bomb case depended if true solely on the evidence of an informer, Rakhal Chandra Laha, who was appointed informer in the middle of May 1908.

It may be mentioned that the coolies who were convicted in the Naraingarh case were, after the determination of the appeal in the Alipore case, released by order of the Government.

On the 7th and 8th December 1907 was held at Midnapore what is called a District Conference in connection with the Indian National Congress.

Mr. K. B. Dutt who appears as leading Counsel for the Plaintiff in this case was Chairman of the Conference. Amongst those who attended were Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee and Mr. Arabinda Ghose.

Mr. Dutt appeared at the Conference dressed in European style and declined to allow a discussion on the question of Swaraj as being inopportune at that time.

This produced a split in the Conference, the result being that Mr. Arabinda Ghose and the majority calling themselves "Extremists" left the Conference and held a separate meeting, whilst Mr. Dutt, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee and a few others who have been called "The moderates" were the remnant of the original Conference. The evidence shows that Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee on this occasion as on other occasions was during his stay at Midnapore a guest in Mr. Dutt's house. With regard to the volunteers whose duty it was to welcome and see to the comforts of the delegates it appears that Mr. Dutt had ordered that none of them were to appear with lathies. This apparently offended Satyendra Nath Bose who was then the captain of the volunteers. This Satyendra is same Satyendra who was subsequently hanged for the murder of the informer in the Alipore Conspiracy case.

Satyendra handed over the captaincy of the volunteers to Santosh one of the Plaintiff's sons.

In this manner Santosh, I think, became possessed of the lists of volunteers badges, &c., which were found at the search of the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July 1908.

Santosh very quickly however resigned the captaincy of the volunteers, his father the Plaintiff having warned him that it would be unwise for him to have anything to do with them as he (Santosh) was then a candidate for appointment as a Probationary Sub-Inspector in the Bengal Police.

On the 14th January 1908, Santosh having been appointed a Probationary Sub-Inspector in the Bengal Police went to Ranchi Police Training School. Now, that Santosh at this time was known to the local authorities as an "Extremist" I do not believe. The papers relating to his appointment as a Probationary Sub-Inspector were sent by the Inspector-General of Police through the local authorities at Midnapore. It is hardly conceivable that if the local authorities knew that Santosh was an unfit person for appointment they would not have called the Inspector-General's attention to the fact.

In the year 1906 when the Moulvi had for some time been stationed at Midnapore he had lodged in the house of Abdur Rahman who has been called as a witness in this case.

Some time, early in January 1908, relations between the Moulvi and Abdur Rahman were renewed which ultimately led to Abdur Rahman being appointed a paid informer. The Moulvi fixes the date of the conditional employment of Abdur Rahman as early in January.

On the 19th January according to the Moulvi's evidence Abdur Rahman who, it had been arranged, should proceed to Naraingarh came and informed him that Khudiram Bose and Sarat Chandra De were missing from Midnapore with Jogjiban's revolver and that he feared that they had gone to shoot Mr. Weston who was then at Jhargram.

On the next day the 20th January the Moulvi went and informed Mr. Cornish who went that day to Jhargram by the Bombay Mail having the train specially stopped at Jhargram. The Exs. LXIV, LXXII, 7A and CLXXVIII show conclusively that Mr. Weston was in Jhargram at that time and that Mr. Cornish went there to him.

That the Moulvi reported this to Mr. Cornish and that he proceeded to Jhargram is clear. But whether Rahman did in fact obtain that information is another matter. No reliance in my opinion can be placed upon any statements made by Rahman or the Moulvi unless they receive independent corroboration. On the 21st January, Rahman was definitely appointed as a paid informer and he is said almost immediately to have produced to the Moulvi the revolver, Ex. XXI, which he says he got from Satyendra Nath Bose on the pretext that he wished to kill Mr. Cornish for having stopped some Mahomedan religious ceremony. Satyendra, it is said, told Rahman that Mr. Weston was responsible as Cornish acted under his orders and suggested that Rahman should shoot Mr. Weston. Rahman says he feigned assent and Satyendra lent him this revolver, Ex. XXI. The Moulvi says he produced this revolver to Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Cornish made the sketch Ex. 78.

By some extraordinary oversight no date or description of the revolver appears on Ex. 78.

This revolver was subsequently found upon Khudiram when he was arrested after the Mozufferpore murder. The evidence, I think, establishes that at some time this revolver found on Khudiram was produced to Mr. Cornish. The different dates that have been given of the date when the revolver was produced make it difficult to state with certainty when this revolver was produced to Mr. Cornish; but on the whole I think that the balance of the evidence is in favour of the date given by the Moulvi. How Rahman got hold of the revolver is another matter. I do not think that he was anything like as much in the confidence of Satyendra, Sarat and Khudiram as he wishes to make out, although there is no doubt he knew them as being instructor at the Akra in which they played.

Rahman, on 28th January, was taken to Calcutta and subsequently produced before Mr. Plowden, Deputy Inspector-General of Police, at the Railway Police Office at Howrah. At the interview there were also present Mr. Weston, the Moulvi and Mr. Cornish. It is said, at that interview Rahman gave information which led to the discovery of the bomb factory at Manicktollah. Mr. Plowden says, he rather thinks that Rahman did say something about a bomb but denies that Rahman gave him information as to the bomb factory. I think from the other evidence that Mr. Plowden is mistaken in his recollection that Rahman may have said anything about a bomb. I am satisfied that Mr. Plowden is correct that Rahman did not tell him about the bomb factory. That would indeed have been a piece of information so important that Mr. Plowden would not have forgotten the time, place, and source from which he obtained it. The fact of production of two other revolvers to Mr. Cornish is I think well established. But from what source did they come? I am not prepared to accept without corroboration the statement of Rahman as to where these revolvers come from or the dates of their production. For instance in the lower Court he said he was at Mourbhunj when Jogjiban was arrested, i.e., on the 3rd May. If that be so he could not be in Midnapore on the 2nd May when he says he obtained the revolver "Young America." Moreover the second revolver is stated to have been shown to Ram Saday Mookerjee on the 26th January who made a sketch of it. Ram Saday has not been called as a witness in this case. Then with regard to the "Message to the Punjabis" which Rahman says he stole from Satyendra, the document as printed in the paper-book looks all right but if one looks at the original it appears that it is a corrected printer's proof. When a bundle of the "Message to the Punjabis" is sent to Satyendra for distribution why should the corrected printer's proof be sent? Moreover the document apparently was for distribution amongst Punjabis.

There can be but few Punjabis in Midnapore to whom to distribute this document. Rahman's statement how he obtained this document is far from satisfactory. Similar remarks apply to the pamphlet "India Arise" and the book Barikaman Rananiti.

The next incident in Rahman's evidence is the alleged obtaining, from Satyendra, a letter to Calcutta so that Rahman might obtain a bomb.

The letter is Ex. 57 and was said to have been written by Satyendra in Abdur Rahman's pocket-book.

According to Rahman he took his pocket-book to Calcutta, showed it to the addressee of the letter and returned with the letter still in his pocket-book to Midnapore; Moulvi tore the letter out and took charge of it.

Abdur Rahman was however unable to get a bomb, one of the reasons given why he could not get a bomb being a shortage of ice in Calcutta. This story is to my mind wholly untrue. A man of Satyendra's education would not write a letter to a friend in a note-book of Rahman's nor would the friend having read the letter leave it in the note-book to be taken back by Rahman to Midnapore.

No doubt the Moulvi's travelling allowance bill shows that he the Moulvi was in Calcutta from the 23rd to 26th February, but as I consider neither the Moulvi nor Rahman to be reliable witnesses and the probabilities of the story being untrue are so great that I reject it. I wholly disbelieve Rahman's story of the visit to the Annushilan Samity or to Bose's Circus on the maidan.

The next document alleged to have been produced by Rahman is the bomb recipe, Ex. IX. This document is alleged to have been dictated to Rahman while Jogjiban was out on bail during the pendency of the charge against him under the Arms Act. Jogjiban was let out on bail twice during the pendency of that case once on the 20th June and again on the 18th July. Rahman says that he was asked to lend his house for the purpose of preparing bombs but before agreeing to do so he consulted the Moulvi who in turn consulted Mr. Weston. Mr. Weston says he advised that Rahman should not do so but told Moulvi to get Rahman to obtain the formula for making bombs.

This story is again highly improbable. If Rahman's story be accepted then Jogjiban who had been released on bail on 18th July was so intent on making bombs that on the very next day he was trying to find a place to manufacture them.

Moreover, I think that the Moulvi in his evidence in the Sessions Court clearly intended to fix the date of this document at about the 20th June when Jogjiban was out on bail for the first time.

The endorsement now on the document giving its date as the 20th July with the impossible Hindu name of Pattopadhya is I am satisfied not genuine. Mr. Hadril says he cannot say if the pencil writing containing the date was on the document when he had it with him in the lower Court. There can be little doubt but that Mr. Dundas, D. I. G. of Police (Ranchi Range), took a correct view of this document when it was shown to him. He said "That appeared in the Juganter" and took no further notice of it. The probabilities are that the Moulvi would also know of this recipe having appeared in the Juganter more especially owing to his close touch with the officers in the C. I. D. I reject Ex. IX as a genuine document prepared as mentioned by Abdur Rahman. Nor am I inclined to accept the statements of Rahman and the Moulvi as to the advance by Rahman of Rs. 50 to Satyendra on a note of hand. Their statements are highly improbable and are not supported by Mr. Cornish. Moreover if this document had been in fact given by Satyendra it is quite certain that the authorities would never have allowed it to pass out of their possession without taking a photograph of it so as to establish the fact that Rahman had close relations with Satyendra. Then on the 2nd of May evening, according to Rahman, a dark man came to Satyendra's house speaking "in mixed English and Bengali," said the factories had been raided in Calcutta and that all had been arrested except Khirode and Noresh. As Rahman according to his evidence in the Sessions Court was in Mourbhunj on the 3rd May it is hardly possible that he could be in Midnapore on the 2nd May evening. Abdur Rahman appeared to me to be a witness who had learnt his lesson before coming to Court. When being examined in chief by Counsel for the Defendants he gave his evidence with surprising alacrity and readiness, but when he was cross-examined there were long pauses, hesitation and confusion. He is a witness on whose testimony, unless corroborated by good and independent testimony, I decline to place the slightest reliance. The only thing that one can say for certainty is that Rahman by reason of having been the instructor at the Akra where Satyendra played was acquainted with Satyendra, when Satyendra disappears from the scene Rahman ceases to supply any information true or false except Ex. IX which I have already found not to be a genuine document. Nor is he able to give any connecting link between Satyendra's conspiracy and the alleged conspiracy known as the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy. This is more especially to be noticed as Jogjiban with whom Rahman says he was on terms of intimacy is alleged to have been a conspirator in both Satyendra's conspiracy and the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy and was one of the accused in that case who were ultimately acquitted by the High Court on appeal.

Neither do I accept the statement of Rahman as to Satyendra having told him that they had sent a bomb through the post to Mr. Kingsford.

One other point as to the position in life of Rahman. That he is a man of no social position cannot be doubted. The statement of the Moulvi that Mahomedan gentlemen of position used to sit down with him whilst he read to them passages from a sacred book and afterwards gave his guests light refreshments is, I am satisfied, absolutely untrue.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Syed Zia Uddin who has been called as a witness for the defence in this case and is a Zemindar and Honorary Magistrate says quite clearly that the Mahomedan gentry would not sit down with Abdur Rahman. This evidence is, I am convinced, correct. Rahman appears to be the son of a butcher and was a petty trader in a very small way until he became an informer.

One other matter before parting with Rahaman. It appears from Ex. V (Extracts from the proof of Rahman in the Crown brief used at the Sessions Court Trial) that Rahman was to be examined as to a statement that Santosh had made to him that arms were being collected at Purulia. Rahman said in his evidence here that he never made such a statement to anybody. How then did this statement find its way into the proof in the Crown brief? Rahman's statement for the Crown brief was recorded by the Defendant, Lal Mohun. Nor do I think that the statements of Rahman as to his reasons for visiting Mourbhunj and Mahisadal satisfactory.

Mr. Weston for some time prior to this had been receiving anonymous threatening letters and letters as to arms being concealed. It is also a fact that Hem Chandra Das and some of the others charged in the Alipore Conspiracy came from Midnapore. Much stress has been placed on the fact that the Zemindars' Samiti at Midnapore made a grant of Rs. 200 to Hem Chandra Das to assist him in studying silpa (mechanical arts) abroad.

Doubtless, it is unfortunate that the zemindars have made this grant as events have proved. The mechanical arts which Hem Chandra was studying abroad have subsequently been proved to be the manufacture of explosives.

But on the other hand we have the statement of Inspector, Nagesh Chunder Mookherjee, who was Inspector in charge of Midnapore from 1904 to 1908 that the Zemindars' Samiti was not a seditious body. The Rs. 200 was forwarded to Hem Chandra through the Society for promoting Scientific and Industrial education amongst Indians.

Moreover, this is not the only case in which a Midnapore gentleman has assisted financially a youngman from the town who has gone abroad to advance his studies. For the evidence shows that Abinash Chandra Mitter, the Plaintiff in one of the other suits, assisted Mr. Birendra Nath De with a sum of Rs. 8,000 to enable him to proceed to Cambridge where Mr. De graduated amongst the Wranglers and subsequently passed into the Indian Civil Service and is now an Assistant Magistrate in the Central Provinces.

Mr. De's house is alleged to be one of the places where the conspirators in the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy Case used to meet and conspire together.

On the 30th April 1908, Mrs. and Miss Kennedy were assassinated at Mozufferpore by Khudiram by means of a bomb.

Following on this, on the 2nd May, a cypher telegram came to Mr. Cornish from the C. I. D., Calcutta. Mr. Cornish was unable to decipher the telegram and sent Moulvi up to see Mr. Plowden.

It had been the intention of Mr Plowden to have a simultaneous searches made at Calcutta and Midnapore but owing to the failure of Mr. Cornish to decipher the telegram this intention was frustrated.

On that day the Alipore Gang were arrested in Calcutta and the garden at

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Manicktollah raided. The Moulvi returned to Midnapore late on the night of 2nd May or early on the morning of the 3rd May.

On the 3rd May seven houses were searched in Midnapore. It is only material to give the names of two of the owners of the houses, namely, the Plaintiff and Satyendra.

The Plaintiff refused to open his door to the Police and kept them waiting 15 or 20 minutes. Ultimately the Police sent for Mr. Nelson, the Joint-Magistrate, and the Plaintiff permitted the Police to come in and make the search. The Plaintiff strictly was entitled to refuse the Police admission into his house to search it as no warrant to search the Plaintiff's house had been obtained.

Nothing was found in the Plaintiff's house on that occasion.

Certain Bande Mataram flags and badges which were taken possession of by the Police at the search of 8th July are said by the Plaintiff to have been in the house on 3rd May. The Defendant's deny this.

Mr. Norton suggested that during the delay in opening the door these articles had been taken to the house of Jogendra Mullick. That suggestion had however to be abandoned as it is admitted that the Police when about to search a house first of all surrounded it to prevent anything from being taken from the house.

At the same time it is to be noted that the search of the Plaintiff's house was under the orders of the Criminal Investigation Department in Calcutta so that the Plaintiff or his family must have been under some suspicion at the time. On the other hand when you find a system of espionage so complete as has been spoken to by the Defendant, Lal Mohun, in this case, viz., that every police-officer has his spy who is paid out of the secret service fund one must not assume that every information given to the Police is true or well-founded.

Pausing here for one moment, it seems to me very obvious that on the information then in the possession of the authorities Mr. Weston was bound to be very watchful over the District of which he had charge. It is not denied that at this time in fact there existed a criminal conspiracy at Midnapore which included Satyendra and Khudiram both of whom were subsequently hanged. They had also the fact that on the searches of the 3rd of May were found Swadeshi documents (some of them violent), copies of the Bartaman Rananiti and Mukte-kon-Pathe, swords, a bayonet and some other articles of a doubtful nature.

About the middle of May 1908, one Rakhal Chunder Laha was appointed by the Moulvi with the consent of Mr. Weston to be a paid informer.

There is a contest on the evidence as to whether the informer was a man of bad character or not. It is admitted that there are two men each called Rakhal Chunder Laha and that one of them is a man of bad character. In fact the Moulvi says that the Rakhal Chunder Laha of bad character was "a desperate character." The evidence is clear that the informer was the man of bad character. Mr. Cornish says the Moulvi told him that the informer was a drunkard and 'a bad lot.' Mr. Plowden says also that he was informed that the informer was a drunkard.

In Rakhal's proof for the Crown brief for use in the Sessions Court (Ex. S. S.) drawn up by Lal Mohun it is stated that Asadulla, Head Constable, took him to the house of Moulvi. The reason Mr.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Weston approved of the appointment of Rakhal as an informer he states was because he was a friend of Jamini Mullick's and also a relative of Baroda and Saroda Dutt. Whether Rakhal was at that time on terms of friendship with Jamini may be doubted for I find at p. 14 of Ex. S. S. the following statement. "For this I had a quarrel with him (that is Jamini Mullick) and I gave up going there and did not mix with them."

This is in accordance with the vernacular statement but Lal Mohun altered this in the translation as follows :—"For this I had the quarrel with him and I gave up going to the Akra and discontinued my visits to him." Doubtless two pages further in Ex. S. S. the informer says "I frequently go to his house" but this hardly seems to be consistent with the previous statement. The informer was, as I have said, appointed according to his own statement on the 20th May and on the 23rd May he is said to have commenced giving informations to the Moulvi. Up to the 31st May the Moulvi says that Rakhal used to come to his house and give his reports which the Moulvi wrote out in his confidential diary. From the end of May, the Moulvi says, fearing that the fact of Rakhal's coming to his house might become public he directed Rakhal to go in future to Asadulla, Head Constable, who would record his statement. Why Rakhal who is a man of education was not permitted to write his own reports has not been satisfactorily explained. The explanation that they were written by Asadulla because he could write more quickly than Rakhal hardly seems to be satisfactory.

When the Moulvi says that Rakhal was appointed because he was known to be one of the leading "Extremists" may be doubted because in the proof of Rakhal

(Ex. S. S.) prepared by Lal Mohun I find the following speech said to have been addressed by Moulvi or Asadulla to Rakhal on the 20th May at the Moulvi's house (Ex. S. S., p. 16) "you work on the side of the Government. It is a great sin to work against Government and it is an ill omen to the country. You mix with the Swadeshi agitators and let me know their doings." This coupled with the statement on p. 14 of Ex. S. S. that after the quarrel with Jamini Mullick the informer "did not mix with them" raises doubts as to the Moulvi believing that the informer was a conspirator deep in the confidence of his fellow conspirators. There is moreover a remarkable fact that the reports said to have been given by the informer open on the 23rd May with the reports of meetings of a fully organised conspiracy. One can hardly imagine that an officer with the experience of the Moulvi in criminal investigation would not have questioned the informer as to the origin and growth of such a formidable conspiracy. Before the Committing Magistrate the informer stated that he never gave the reports at all but they were drawn out by the Police and signed by him at one and the same time. We have two records of the reports said to have been given by the informer, Rakhal.

One is Ex. 56 which is said to contain the reports made from day to day. These reports commence from the 1st June. The other document Ex. G is said to have been written in October 1908 by Asadulla to assist the informer to give his evidence. It is said Ex. G was dictated by Rakhal the informer to Asadulla from four note-books in Rakhal's possession and that Asadulla added the marginal notes in red ink. Why if Rakhal had four note-books containing contemporaneous records of events and which he might use in Court to refresh his memory Asadulla should draw him up a document which he could not so use is not apparent. Moreover, if Asadulla's story is correct, it would appear that Asadulla was so anxious to save the informer's trouble that he signed Ex. G for him but the name he signed was "Ram Saran Laha" instead of Rakhal Chandra Laha. The word "Ram Saran" have been attempted to be erased from Ex. G but the words are still distinctly visible. Ex. G was subsequently handed over to the defence by the informer and Ex. 56 was disclosed by Mr. Sinha before the Committing Magistrate after the informer had failed the prosecution.

I must now glance shortly—for space will not permit more than a hurried glance—at the reports given by the informer, Rakhal.

In order, however, to get an introduction to the reports it is necessary to go to the informer's proof drawn up by Lal Mohun (Ex. S. S.).

There we find, on the 23rd May, the first information given by Rakhal after his appointment as an informer on the 20th May.

From Ex. S. S. we find that on that day the informer went to the house of Jamini Mullick. He states:—"I saw some strips of jute, sulphur and shots scattered there. Surendra said we shall prepare a bomb. The Police have arrested Satyendra, Jogjiban and Sarat Dey for nothing. If we can kill Lal Mohun, Moulvi and Mr. Weston, all obstacles will be removed." This is how the document reads in the original translation and the vernacular but Lal Mohun in the translation has struck out the last sentence and substituted "We must do away with the Police and the Firinghees." "This evening Kissen Saha, Jotindra Nath Sen and Sachindra Mohun Sen will return from Calcutta after learning the art of manufacturing bombs. This night I shall consult with them "

Then on the same evening we are introduced to the first secret meeting held at the Basanta Mulati Akrah.

The report of this meeting appears in Ex. G. The speaker at the meeting is said to have been the Plaintiff's son Ashutosh :

"There was a bench for sitting."

"Ashutosh Das slapped his chest and held forth 'Driving away the Firinghees and Police &c.'"

In Rakhal's proof prepared by Lal Mohun, the vernacular and original translation read "Ashutosh Das gave a stirring and inflammatory speech; Lal Mohun has altered this to, "Ashutosh Das jumped up, struck his chest with his hand and said."

Then we find, "There was no mattress but a bench only." Then in Ex. G we find a report dated the 27th May that on that day the informer was entrusted with a letter that Jamini Mullick had received from his nephew, Krishna Prosad Dey, from Calcutta. Now this clearly establishes that the letter was dated not later than the 27th May.

This letter is said to have been subsequently shown to the Moulvi on the 1st of June, when the Moulvi purported to take a copy of it. The copy shows that the alleged letter is dated the 28th May. Counsel for the Defendants admit that there is a difficulty as Ex. G. purports to show that the letter was in the hands of the informer on 27th May and suggests that the date copied by the Moulvi is a mistake. This does not seem to me to be probable; the terms of the letter and the way it is said to have been produced suggested far more strongly that the letter never in fact existed.

The terms of the letter are as follows:—

“Youngest maternal uncle, my respectful salutations to you. Besides what has been used in our work we have got 25 implements (Bombs) for putting down the Europeans in excess prepared in our factory. If you require them send a man as soon as you get this letter. If you cannot come please send a man as soon as convenient. If you cannot send any man write to me and I shall hand over the implements for putting down Europeans to the man who will come and show me letter in your handwriting. Why the three or four men of your Basanta Malati Akrah who learnt from us the art of making instruments for putting down the Europeans are sitting down silently? Can the enemy be submitted in this way? We shall wait for your letter or man two or three days and shall go away then with the implements towards any line (some Railway line) what more shall I write? It is useless to say further. 28th May 1908.

Krishna Prosad De,
Jorasanko.”

One would have imagined that 25 bombs would have been sufficient for the purpose of exterminating the Europeans in Midnapore. But in the report of the 4th of June (Ex. 56) we find the men who are alleged to have been taught bomb-making in Calcutta saying “when we ourselves have come (here) let us have a house, 25 is a most insignificant number, we shall prepare 2,000 even. Kristo asked us to go within three or four days and that time has been over simply in showing the letter to the members. Probably by this time Kristo has gone out towards any line (some Railway line).”

This story about the 25 bombs and the proposed 2,000 bombs is in my opinion unbelievable. If this story were believed in, it is quite certain that an urgent communication would have been made to Mr. Plowden to endeavour to seize the 25 bombs which the Midnapore conspirators considered to be an insignificant number before Kristo Prosad De went towards some Railway line. An anarchist outrage on a Railway with 25 bombs at one time seems also to be novel.

To this the Defendants say we ascertained the address of Kristo Prosad De and found it correct. That however seems to me to come to nothing. Whoever gave the report was hardly likely to be so foolish as to give a name and address which on the slightest inquiry would be found to be false.

To return to the informer's reports, having got the man from Calcutta who had learnt bomb-making the next thing is a question of ways and means.

The report of the 2nd June (Ex. 56) is the first mention of proposed subscription. The gentleman who is said first to have offered to pay is Babu Satkari Pati Roy, a Sub-Deputy Magistrate.

The Defendants rely on this largely. It appears that on the 2nd June this gentleman was on leave and it was not impossible for him to be in Midnapore. It is quite possible I think that he was in Midnapore on that day. Having regard to the spies and informers that were in the employ of the Police I think it quite possible if Satkari Pati Roy was in Midnapore that a report to this effect was made to the Moulvi.

This gentleman still remains in Government service.

On the 3rd June according to the report in Ex. 56 Jamini Mullick goes to Mr. K.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

B. Dutt with reference to subscriptions for making bombs and a place for making them.

Mr. Dutt is said to have written to the Raja of Narajole for a place. Then on the 5th June (Ex. 56) we find that Mr. K. B. Dutt had sanctioned Rs. 3,000 for manufacturing bombs.

Then on the 8th June (Ex. 56) we find Jamini Mullick saying that "K. B. Dutt, Barrister, sent Annada Charan Pal to the Raja of Narajole for the house but as the Raja's house at Narajole has been searched Raja has got frightened and does not agree to give his house at Gope."

The Raja's house at Narajole at this time had not been searched nor is there any reason to suppose that at the time he believed it was likely to be searched. Next under the same date we find a list of subscriptions for making bombs. The list is headed by Mr. K. B. Dutt with Rs. 100 but in Ex. S. S. (the informer's proof prepared by Lal Mohun) Lal Mohun has struck out Mr. Dutt's name. The 3rd subscription is Pleaders' Bar Library Rs. 400 (money raised by selling vakalat-namas)—this of course means the Bar Association at Midnapore from funds of the Association. The learned Advocate-General has described the Midnapore pleaders as unscrupulous. But even if that were so—a term I should hesitate to apply to gentlemen belonging to an honourable profession—it has not been suggested that they are fools.

That they were going to pay money out of their Association funds for making bombs when each and every pleader would be aware of the fact and the risk of detection would be great is not probable.

Then on the 11th of June (Ex. 56) there is said to have been a meeting at the house of the Raja of Mahisadal. There were 45 or 46 persons present at that meeting. The name of the informer appeared originally as being present at that meeting but his name has been struck out apparently at the time that report was written. Against the informer's name the Moulvi has written "stet."

It is a fact not unworthy of notice that neither in Ex. 56 nor in Ex. G does the name of the Raja's Manager, Nalini Kanta Sen Gupta, appear as one of those who were at the meeting. But a far more significant fact is that the presence of the Raja of Mahisadal's Manager at the meeting of the 11th June is not given in the reports alleged to have been given by the informer until the 26th August the very last report said to have been given by the informer. That report is in these terms "Raja's Ammuktcar Nalini Kanta Sen attended the secret meeting which was held in the lodging of Mahisadal on 11th June 1908."

Why such a report should have been given on the 26th August or why the informer's mind on that day was fixed on the meeting of the 11th June and the presence of the Raja's Manager at that meeting one cannot imagine.

At the meeting there is singing and speech-making. Gosto Behari Chandra and Nikunja Maiti sang together to a harmonium accompaniment a Swadeshi song. Then a speech about bombs was delivered.

Meetings advocating the making of bombs one would presume are held in secret. Doubtless this meeting at the Raja of Mahisadal's house is described in the informer's reports (Ex. 56) as "secret." But how far does a meeting at which there is singing, playing on the harmonium and speech-making answer one's ideas of a secret meeting? Besides where were the

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Police and the spies of the police-officers that they did not hear of this meeting which must have been noticed by everybody in the neighbourhood? Lal Mohun in his evidence here stated "my spy generally kept me informed of the doings of the Swadeshi extremists from time to time." But as at many of these secret meetings there was music and a large gathering it seems remarkable that the spies were not able to detect the fact that the meetings were held.

Next we come to the information of the 12th June (Ex. 56).

Deb Das Karan is said to have reported that "he went to Mr. K. B. Dutt, Barrister, and has made him write and post a letter to Surendra Babu in (or of) Calcutta to send bombs. . . . The moderate and extremists have all united."

We find the same thing set out in Ex. S. S. at p. 17. That Surendra Babu of Calcutta would to any Bengali mean Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee is clear from the evidence. We also know that at the Conference in December 1907 Surendra Babu and Mr. Dutt were two of the small remnant that remained as "Moderates" and it is also in evidence that Surendra Babu and Mr. K. B. Dutt are on terms of intimate friendship. In Ex. S. S. where the passage occurs I find the remark by Lal Mohun "omit." When the Moulvi was cross-examined as to this passage he said "Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee is not Surendra Babu of Calcutta, but Surendra Babu of Barrackpore." But no person that has lived in Bengal would accept such a statement; although it is true that Surendra Babu does in fact live at Barrackpore but the whole of his public life has been associated with Calcutta.

Then much reliance has been placed on the statement in Ex. O. O. O. "Surendra Babu not known." The Moulvi's evidence is that subsequent inquiries were made by the Police in Calcutta and they found out that it was another man altogether. But curiously his name also happens to be Surendra Nath Banerjee.

Mr. Plowden did not appear to know anything about this inquiry at all.

I think there can be little doubt that in the first instance at any rate it was intended to implicate Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee of the Bengali newspaper. Then we find under the same date "Deb Das Karan will settle (take on lease) the two-storied house of Paramananda Shaha to be let on hire for manufacturing bombs. There will be four houses for manufacturing bombs. If any one gives information to the Police and gets it detected the remaining three will serve the purpose." The next information to which it is necessary to call attention is the one reported on the 14th June (Ex. 56). This gives the return of Santosh and his drilling of the boys who become "excited." Then on the 15th June there was a meeting, said to have been intended to be held at the house of the Maharaja of Mournbhunj but the meeting was postponed as Deb Das Karan could not attend owing to the rain.

On the 16th of June (Ex. 56) the informer was informed that in accordance with the letter written by Mr. K. B. Dutt a bomb had been forwarded from Calcutta and it was being kept as a sample by Deb Das. I very much doubt whether bombs are made from a sample. Moreover the young men who had returned to Midnapore after learning the art of bomb-making at the Anushilan Samiti in Calcutta could hardly require a sample before setting to work. Then on the 17th June (Ex. 56) we find "on the day fixed Rash Behary Ghose will come from Calcutta to conduct the case against Satyendra Bose and others. He will not charge any fees for conducting the case." This of course is intended to implicate Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, the eminent Vakil, with Satyendra by showing that he was on such terms with Satyendra that he would come and defend him without fees. Every one in these Courts is aware that Dr. Ghose does not practise in the Criminal Courts.

Next we come to the 18th June (Ex 56). This purports to relate the story of the first production of the bomb by Surendra Nath Mookherjee at the house of Rajabala, a prostitute, where in the presence of the informer, Nikunja Maiti and Jnanendra Sircar, the bomb was placed on the bed of the prostitute and supported by two pillows. This is said to have taken place some time after 10 o'clock at night and it is evident both from Ex. 56 and Ex. S. S. and Ex. G that the prostitute was present.

The discussion that took place at the prostitute's house before the arrival of Surendra Nath with the bomb was "whether India might be free some time or other." The hour is somewhere after 10 o'clock at night. I doubt whether the house of a woman of the town is either the place or a late hour of the night the time where these young men would meet to discuss "whether India might be free some time or other." On this incident as set out in Rakhal's proof as drawn up by Lal Mohun (Ex S. S.) there is one matter worth noting.

The Moulvi and Asadulla have both sworn in this suit that after the end of May all the reports of Rakhal, the informer, which were drawn up by Asadulla were drawn up by him at his own house and that the informer on those occasions never come to the Moulvi's house. This the Moulvi says he did in order to avoid the public finding out the employment of Rakhal.

Now the account of the meeting at Rajabala prostitute's house is drawn up by Asadulla and signed, so is the report on the day previous. But look at Ex. S. S. and see how far the Moulvi and Asadulla's story is supported by that statement. The informer there says as taken down by Lal Mohun "At about 10 P.M., (on the 17th June) when returning home from the house of Moulvi Saheb, Deputy Superintendent of Police, I saw Jnanendra Nath Sircar, brother of Jogendra Nath Sircar "sitting at my door." The informer then proceeds to relate how he went with Jnanendra to Rajabala's.

It is certainly very curious that if the Moulvi and Asadulla's evidence is true that the informer should say he was coming from the Moulvi's house and that this fact was to appear in the proof of the informer upon which he was to be examined by Counsel in Court.

Under the entry of the 18th June in Ex. 56 there also purports to be a description of the wrecking of the train of the Lieutenant-Governor. This part of the alleged information is however omitted from Ex. S. S. (Rakhal's proof). The report states that the information as to the date of the journey of the Lieutenant-Governor was furnished by the elder brother of Khagendra Nath Banerjee (one of the Plaintiffs in the other suits) who was employed in the office of the Lieutenant-Governor.

It appears from Khagendra's evidence that none of his brothers is so employed. Between the 19th and 29th June there are no reports made by Asadulla as it is said he was ill. Moulvi says that during this time he recorded Rakhal's information in his confidential diary. That diary has not been produced.

Ex. G however does give reports of two meetings—one said to have been held at Kamini prostitute's on 23rd June and the other held at the house of Trailokya Nath Paul on the 28th June. At the first of these two meetings Satyendra Nath Bose was not only present but he was the speaker at the meeting and at the second meeting Jogjiban Ghose was present. At that time both Satyendra and Jogjiban were out of jail. But one naturally asks what was the first informer Abdur Rahman doing that he did not find out about these two meetings. He was then drawing his pay as a spy and according to his evidence he was on such terms with Satyendra and his party that they had supplied him with revolvers, given him a letter to get a bomb in Calcutta &c. Moreover according to Rahman the first thing that Jogjiban did when he came out of jail on the 18th July was to try and get Rahman to lend his house for the preparation of bombs. Hence Ex. IX.

On the 29th June (Ex. 56) the informer reports that Jamini Mullick said to him "S. P. Sinha, Barrister, was engaged by the Government in the case against Khudiram and Mr. Cotton, Barrister, was engaged on behalf of Khudiram and that S. P. Sinha wants to have Khudiram hanged while Cotton says if Khudiram be hanged there would be disturbance in India."

Then on the 30th June (Ex. 56) the informer relates an account of a meeting at which the bomb was produced. In Ex. S. S. (the informer's proof) the informer says nothing about bomb being produced. It is suggested by Counsel on behalf of the Defendants that the informer has made a mistake as to dates in this report and that he was only relating on hearsay what he has been told. I may pass over the report of the 1st July stating that a wealthy Zemindar, Iswar Chandra Chowdhury, had said "Now our work lies in killing the Firinghees" and subscribing Rs. 20 towards the manufacture of bombs and the report of the 2nd July stating that Santosh drilled the boys of Swadeshi Samiti.

Then we come to the report of the meeting of the 3rd July (Ex. 56) said to have been held at the house of Upendra Nath Maiti, the leader of the Bar at Midnapore.

This meeting is called in Ex. S. S. "a secret meeting." There were 37 people present at the meeting. There was again singing to the accompaniment of a harmonium and speech-making. Then it is reported "A photo of the Magistrate's house was shown." The Defendant's Counsel rely much on that statement. But at that date Hem Chandra Das's album which contained a photograph of Mr. Weston's house had been exhibited in the Alipore case and it is probable that the Police at Midnapore had been informed of this fact. The next statement, said to have been made by Rash Behari Bose, is "my friend Hem Chandra Das has given me these photos and he has also taught me to make revolvers. I cannot start a workshop for want of funds." The suggestion that in a few days Hem Chandra Das had taught Rash Behari Bose to "make revolvers" is of course absurd. The suggestion by Mr. Norton that what the report means is that Hem Chandra Das had taught Rash Behari to clean up rusty revolvers does not seem probable as it is not likely that Rash Behari would want to open a workshop for that purpose.

At this meeting on the 3rd July at Upendra Maiti's house the bomb found at the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July is alleged to have been produced. Therefore the meeting is an essential link in the chain of reports. Now the name of Upendra Nath Maiti does not appear in the earlier reports nor does it appear in the later reports. I take the following remarks from the judgment of the Chief Justice and Mookerjee, J., on the hearing of the appeal in the bomb conspiracy case :— "But Upendra Maiti is apparently a man of excellent character and high standing at Midnapore and though originally placed before the Magistrate as one of the conspirators, the Advocate-General, Mr. Sinha, withdrew the charge against him. The Additional Sessions Judge in his judgment has stated that in his belief Upendra Maiti has not done and said what was alleged against him—and before us the Advocate-General, Mr. Gregory, has conceded that the story of the meeting at Upendra Maiti's house must be discarded as false."

Mr. Gregory stated before me that he made no such admission at all. All that he says he did was to state that if he was asked what portion of his case he would abandon he said he would abandon the case against Upendra Maiti. I think Mr. Gregory's recollection is at fault. The case against Upendra Maiti had been abandoned by Mr. Sinha months before. The learned Judges who heard the appeal are clear in their recollection that Mr. Gregory made this statement and are supported by their judgment as to which no exception was taken until the hearing of this present suit.

Of course Mr. Gregory's statement cannot bind the Defendants in this suit. But the Moulvi was present in Court whilst the appeal was being heard and Mr. Gregory's statement must have been made in his presence. If the meeting at Upendra Maiti's did not in fact take place it creates such a break in the chain of the reports as almost to destroy the story.

Then the Defendants rely much on the statement in the report of the 5th July (Ex. 56) as to the list of the witnesses in the case against Jogjiban under the Arms Act. But such list if known to anybody would be known to the Police. Then we come to the report of the 7th July (Ex. 56) when the Raja of Narajole is said to have come to Jamini Mullick's to see the bomb. Now what was the Raja coming to see—to all outward appearances a ball wrapped up in jute.

This story does not seem very probable but when I turn to Ex. G. which was drawn up by Asadulla, Head Constable, to enable the informer to get up his evidence, I find that the date of 7th July is written and then a blank space is left so that the incidents of the 7th July may be written in subsequently. But this is not all. For when I go to the proof of the informer drawn up by Lal Mohun (Ex. S. S.) I find in the vernacular the report of the incidents of the 7th July as originally written were different to those contained in Ex. 56 for the same date. But subsequently the vernacular of Ex. S. S. has been considerably altered in a different ink to bring the story into line with that set out in Ex. 56.

Before proceeding to consider the application for the search warrant of the Plaintiff's house on the evening of the 7th July I will refer to the transfer of Ashutosh from Midnapore to Mozufferpur on the 3rd July.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Ashutosh was a mail clerk in the Midnapore Post Office and was transferred on six hours' notice to Mozufferpur by order communicated by telegram from the Postmaster General. That the transfer took place at the instance of Mr. Weston cannot be doubted. The only question is whether Mr. Weston took action on the representation of the Moulvi and Lal Mohun or on his own initiative.

Before the Sessions Judge Mr. Weston stated "The Police in charge of this case suggested to me that Ashu should be transferred. I took action on that representation."

Mr. Cornish's evidence is to the same effect.

But here Mr. Weston goes back from the statement he made in the Sessions Court and says that he asked Mr. Plowden to get Ashu transferred as letters sent by him got lost in the post.

If it was suspected that Ashutosh was stealing letters at Midnapore it hardly seems a good reason to transfer him to another post-office on six hours' notice where he could do the same.

Moreover, the request for Ashutosh's transfer coming through the Criminal Investigation Department suggests that the reason given by Mr. Weston before the Sessions Court and Mr. Cornish in his evidence here is the true one.

On the 5th July, Noresh, Sub Inspector, and Mohendra, Sub-Inspector, called at the Plaintiff's house to enquire about Ashu. Noresh says the Moulvi told him to find out where Ashu was. Santosh says that Noresh came and enquired about Ashu as he said he wanted to deposit money in the Post Office Savings Bank and he wanted Ashu to tell him the rules.

Santosh gave the police-officers a chil-lum of tobacco which they sat and smoked in the Plaintiff's britakhannah within a few feet of the bomb if the informer's story be correct.

I now come to the incidents on the night of the 7th July. On that night the Moulvi applied for and obtained from Mr. Nelson a warrant to search Santosh's house.

It is in dispute whether this application was made with the approval of Mr. Weston. The Defendants in their written statements admit that it was so made but on this suit being called on for hearing Mr. Norton applied for leave to amend the written statements by striking out this admission. The evidence however satisfies me that Mr. Weston did know beforehand of the intention to apply for the warrant to search Santosh's house.

Mr. Cornish so stated in his evidence and on the 3rd March (Friday) the Moulvi in cross-examination also so stated. But on the following Tuesday (7th March) he resiled from his previous statement. In my opinion the evidence of the Moulvi given on the 3rd March on this point is the true version.

Then early on the morning of the 8th of July the search party consisting of constables and Military Police under the command of Mr. Brett, Assistant Superintendent of Police, started from the Sub-Inspectors' quarters. The party was broken up into two—one party under the command of Mr. Brett proceeding to the Plaintiff's house, the other party in charge of Asadulla going to surround Hanumanjee's temple.

On arrival at the Plaintiff's house the Military Police surrounded the house and then knocked at the door. After some little delay the door was opened. There has been a good deal of evidence as to how long this delay was. However in any view of the evidence the delay lasted some minutes, quite long enough to enable Santosh to get rid of the bomb if he knew of its existence and he so desired. It is said that this could not be done because some of the Military Police were posted on the roof of the Plaintiff's house before the door was opened. This evidence I do not accept. It is put forward in this Court for the first time. The Subadar, Mr. Wilson, who was in charge of the Military Police who spoke as to the placing of the Military Police on the roof was not a satisfactory witness. The door being opened the Police entered with their search witnesses. The Moulvi pointed out Santosh to Mr. Brett. Then the boy Bonomali who had been sleeping either on a khat or on the floor beside a khat in the baitakhannah was immediately placed under guard by the Moulvi.

The Plaintiff said that before the search commenced he must have his own witnesses to the search. These were sent for and having arrived the search commenced. Santosh's room was searched first. Certain Bande Mataram badges and flags, lists of volunteers and some other papers were found there. Then the rest of the house was searched and lastly the baitakhannah. While the baitakhannah was being searched neither Mr. Brett nor the Plaintiff was present. Asadulla at that time came from the Hanumanjee's temple and was permitted to enter the Plaintiff's house. Asadulla's evidence is that as they had been kept waiting so long at the Hanumanjee's temple (about two hours) he came to see why the search party were taking such a long time. He says that Mr. Wilson, the Subadar, searched him before he allowed him to enter the house. This I do not believe. He made the statement voluntarily and not in answer to any question and Mr. Wilson was never asked anything about this in his evidence. Almost immediately after the arrival of Asadulla the bomb was discovered. It is said to have been first seen by a constable Chuni Singh and then by Asadulla. Asadulla ran to Mr. Brett and informed him that something round had been found.

The constable, Chuni Singh, has not been called as a witness in this case.

The bomb was found amongst some loose door frames which were leaning against the wall; near the door frames was a palki.

Now the information of the informer that Asadulla says he recorded on the evening of the 7th July states that "Santosh took the bomb to his baitakhannah the doors of which he shut up from inside." It is a remarkable fact, as I have already pointed out, that Ex. G contains no account of the incident of the 7th July, only the date of the 7th July being written, a blank space being left below to write in the incidents later.

In Ex. LXXXIIIA, a statement of Rakhal recorded by Mr. Weston on the 22nd August 1908, Rakhal in relating the incidents of the 7th July says he saw Santosh get the bomb from near the palki and when Santosh was taking the bomb back from Jamini Mullick's house the same day he said "I followed to see where the bomb was put and the same night I gave information to the Police."

Santosh when he saw the bomb said it was a benai ball (a ball used in some game) and then a langota (that is loin cloth worn when wrestling)—and Santosh wanted to pick up the bomb but he was prevented from doing so.

Then Santosh was arrested. Mr. Brett placed the bomb in his handkerchief and carried it so suspended.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Santosh after the excitement felt thirsty and wanted a drink of water and Mr. Brett took him into the inner apartments to his mother where he was given a drink of water and some refreshment as he had not broken his fast that morning. The old lady took hold of Mr. Brett's hand with which he was holding the bomb and raised the back of it a few times to her forehead. Unfortunately Mr. Brett at that time did not understand the vernacular and cannot therefore say what the old lady said. Mr. Norton suggests that the old lady was performing an act of reverence towards Mr. Brett imploring him to save her son Santosh and that the old lady's story ought not to be accepted. The old lady's story is that she told Mr. Brett that her son was innocent and that she was willing to stake her life on his innocence and if permitted would strike the bomb against her forehead to show that the article was not a dangerous one.

I have no hesitation in accepting the mother's story as to this. Then Santosh was taken away by the Moulvi and Lal Mohun. They went to the Hanumanjee's temple where a short search was conducted by Lal Mohun, after which Santosh was sent to the Thanah.

Then there is a conflict on the evidence as to whether the Moulvi returned to the Plaintiff's house that day. I am of opinion that he did and that the old lady's evidence on this point is substantially accurate. Her story is that in about half an hour after Santosh had been taken away the Moulvi returned and found her in tears. She said that her son was innocent and that this was the second time within a short period that her house had been searched by the Police. However she said she was the aunt (mashi) of Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and she would lay all the facts of the case before him and see her son righted. She says that upon her mentioning the name of Dr. Rash Behary Ghose the Moulvi said that Dr. Ghose was an old class friend of his own and therefore if she was Dr. Ghose's mashi she must be his mashi also. That all Santosh had got to do would be to follow the advice of the Police, and all would be well—and that he would call the next morning and tell her how to act. The Moulvi denies this interview with the old lady altogether.

I accept not only the fact of the interview but also substantially the old lady's account of what took place. Later, on the 8th of July, other house searches took place. Amongst the houses so searched was that of Jamini Mullick. The bomb was subsequently opened by Major (then Captain) Weinman, I. M. S., who found that the "core consisted of a yellowish brownish powder mixed with shot" and it was then taken by Mr. Brett and handed over in Calcutta to the Chemical Examiner. Major Weinman gave his certificates on the 9th July (Ex. 36). On the 8th July Santosh was kept at the Thanah hajut. Santosh's evidence is that there the Police tried to induce him to confess both on the night of the 8th July and the morning of the 9th July.

The mother's evidence is that on the morning of the 9th July the Moulvi saw her and later she visited Santosh at the Thanah.

It is said that in consequence of this Santosh was put up before Mr. Nelson as a confessing prisoner it being hoped that the mother had induced him to confess.

Now what do we find when Santosh is put up before Mr. Nelson, Joint-Magistrate, on the 9th July? Mr. Nelson denies that Santosh was put up as a confessing prisoner but what do the records of the Court show?

First of all Mr. Nelson has handed to him by a police-officer the Court Inspector Rash Behari Sen a form headed "Form for recording the confession of an accused person." He then proceeds to put to Santosh the question that is usually put by a Magistrate to a confessing prisoner.

"Q.—Do you understand that I am a Magistrate and that any statement you may make may be used in evidence?

A.—Yes."

Santosh's statement so far from making a confession stated that the article found on the 8th July was not a bomb.

Mr. Nelson's order-sheet for 9th July is also very instructive:—

"Date, Order.

- 9-7-08. Santosh Das makes no confession."

Mr. Nelson's memory is, I am sure, at fault in stating that Santosh was not produced before him on the 9th July as a confessing prisoner. The documents seem to me to be absolutely conclusive to the contrary. There is also the evidence of Lackhi Narain Sarkar, Mr. Nelson's bench clerk, who has been called as a witness for the defence in this case. He states that on one occasion Santosh was produced before Mr. Nelson in Court as a confessing prisoner and that he was placed at the side of the Magistrate's table to have his confession recorded. It is not suggested that this could be on any other occasion except the 9th July. The Court Inspector, Rash Behari Sen, though cited as a witness and present in the Court premises has not been called as a witness.

But if Santosh was produced before the Court on the 9th July as a confessing prisoner why was it supposed that on that day he would make a confession. The only reasons that can be suggested are that after the visits of the Police to Santosh and his mother and the visit of the mother to the son at the Thanah it was hoped that Santosh would make the desired confession.

On the 9th July, Mr. Nelson remanded Santosh to jail till the 23rd of July.

Now it is alleged by the Plaintiff that the bomb was placed in his house by the boy Bonomali at the instigation of the Moulvi.

Bonomali's story is that on a day just at the end of June a constable Kartick Singh came and took him to the house of the Moulvi where the Moulvi asked him if he was willing to enter his service and that Bonomali expressed his willingness to do so and the Moulvi said he would send for him when he wanted him. Bonomali's story is that on the 7th July the Moulvi again sent for him and the Moulvi gave him the bomb. Bonomali says that the Moulvi directed a constable to accompany him back to the Plaintiff's house. He says he was unable to place the bomb in Santosh's room as requested as Santosh was occupying his room but he placed it in the baitakhannah on a loose door frame that was resting against the wall and then informed the constable who left. Next morning the search of the Plaintiff's house took place.

Bonomali says that after the search he went to his mother's house and subsequently was taken by a constable to Santagachi where the constable left him. There he met a boy who took him to a place called Podra where he entered into service of one Kally Kristo Bose. There he says he remained for about three months, and then returned to Midnapore at the time of the Pujas. The Defendants deny the story altogether. They say that there is only one constable named Kartick

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Singh in Midnapore District and he was transferred from Midnapore Town to Ramjibanpore on the 24th May 1908 and there he remained until long after the end of June. The boy Bonomali identified the witness constable Kartick Singh as the man who took him to the Moulvi—so there is no doubt as to the constable the boy means. The Moulvi in his evidence before me at first tried to get out of the story told by Bonomali by stating that from the 27th June he was away from Midnapore undergoing medical treatment in Calcutta. That story has been conclusively demonstrated to be incorrect.

Is the evidence sufficient therefore to show that the constable Kartick was in Midnapore at the end of June? The evidence shows that one constable Kartick was transferred to Ramjibanpore on the 24th May. But Mr. Dutt suggests that this is a different Kartick.

The grounds he puts this suggestion on are first why should Bonomali say that Kartick out of the 600 constables in Midnapore District took him to the Moulvi if Kartick was not in fact in Midnapore. Next it appears from the District Order Book that a constable named Kartick Singh was censured for keeping a pistol without license. This ought, if it refers to the Kartick Singh at Ramjibanpore, to have been communicated to the Police Station at Ramjibanpore for communication to Kartick there. It appears from the evidence of the police-officers from Ramjibanpore that no such censure was communicated to them and therefore Mr. Dutt says that the censure does not relate to the Kartick Singh at Ramjibanpore but to some other Kartick. Then before the Committing Magistrate the Moulvi in cross-examination stated :—

"I have no constable by the name of Kartick. There was one of that name at the Thanah. I don't remember if he was there in July. I had to have him removed to the Thanah as he used to give out our secrets to the Extremists. I do not know if he was dismissed but he was reported against and sent away. I do not know where he is now. I do not know what Kartick's duties were. He was not working under me. I never sent Kartick constable to bring the boy to my house. He never brought the boy to my house." In the Sessions Court the defence summoned Kartick as a witness for the defence. The prosecution did not call Kartick neither did the defence. The case was closed. The defence Counsel had finished their addresses when the unusual procedure was adopted by the Sessions Judge at the suggestion of the Crown Counsel of calling not only Kartick as a witness but also two other witnesses Mon Mohan Roy and Mahomed Amir Khan to corroborate him.

The Sessions Judge then allowed the defence to call a witness Gyanda Nandan Sen and also to recall a witness Kishoripati Rai.

Kishori deposed that the reason Kartick had been summoned as a witness was because Kishori had met him at his (Kishori's) uncle's, an Honorary Magistrate, where Kartick told him he had taken the boy to the Moulvi and that after Kartick had been summoned as a witness for the defence at Sessions he went to see Kishori. Kishori said Kartick told him then that as he was in Police service he could not speak against the Police. That Kartick on coming to Midnapore after receiving his summons did go to see Kishori is not denied by Kartick in this Court although Kishori was not one of the pleaders engaged for the defence.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

The evidence seems to establish that Bonomali's story about going to Kali Bose's at Podra after the search is true. But after all the whole of the story as to whether the Moulvi had the bomb introduced into the Plaintiff's house hinges on the fact whether Kartick took the boy Bonomali to the Moulvi as alleged. Doubtless as I have pointed out there are some circumstances that may suggest that the Kartick that was transferred to Ramjibanpore on the 24th May 1908 is not the Kartick referred to by Bonomali.

The witness Kartick has denied that he was transferred for misconduct as alleged by the Moulvi before the Committing Magistrate.

There was also the desire of the Moulvi in his evidence to show that he was absent from Midnapore at the time it was said that Kartick took Bonomali to him but which had to be abandoned.

Then Mr. Dutt complained that none of the orders relating to the constable Kartick which were passed by Mr. Cornish were put to Mr. Cornish although he gave evidence before me. But that they have been proved by a subordinate officer who was not even stationed at Midnapore at the time the orders were passed.

The onus however of proving that Kartick took Bonomali to the Moulvi is on the Plaintiff. There may be some matters of suspicion on the evidence. I am of opinion however that the Plaintiff has not discharged the onus that is on him. As I have already said that the whole of the story of the bomb having been placed in the Plaintiff's house at the instigation of the Moulvi rests on the Plaintiff being able to prove that Kartick took Bonomali to the Moulvi. This the Plaintiff has not proved. On the evidence before me I am unable to say who placed the bomb in the Plaintiff's house but in my opinion Santosh did not.

I shall now deal very shortly with the rest of the reports said to have been given by the informer after the 8th of July.

Now one would have thought, after the searches on the 8th of July, the conspirators would be somewhat careful as to their movements, for if the story related by Rakhal be true they must have thought that the Police had got information as to the conspiracy. But one finds on the 10th July (Ex. 56) there is a meeting of 31 persons at the house of Mr. Birendra Nath Dey of the Indian Civil Service.

Again Gosto Behary is there singing to the harmonium. The song he sings is "the song of the 3rd July." If the meeting said to have been held at Upendra Maiti's on the 3rd July did not take place as both the Sessions Judge and the High Court on appeal held "the song of the 3rd July" is a somewhat serious difficulty. For if the song was not in fact sung on the 3rd of July it may well be argued that it was not sung on the 10th July.

Then speeches against the Firingees and in favour of bombs are delivered. All this takes place between 6 and 7 in the evening.

Again on the 12th July (Ex. 56) there is a report of a meeting at the house of Jamini Mullick at which 42 persons were present.

Gosto Behari again sings a seditious song to the accompaniment of a harmonium. Then there are speeches against the Firingees and about bombs. All this takes place between 11 and 12 in the morning. One cannot help asking what were the Police of Midnapore doing if they did not find any trace of these meetings held in the day time at the houses of leading citizens. Moreover with regard to

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Jamini Mullick at whose house this meeting is alleged to have been held it has to be remembered that his house had been searched on the 8th of July. It was therefore highly improbable that he would hold a meeting at his house in broad daylight four days afterwards at which there would be singing and speech-making. There is also a significant fact with regard to Jamini Mullick that it is common ground that on the 9th July, the day after his house was searched, a meeting took place between him and the Moulvi at the latter's house. Jamini's account of the meeting at the Moulvi's is that the Moulvi sent for him and demanded Rs. 10,000 and said it was better to pay Rs. 10,000 now than spend a lakh hereafter. The Moulvi's account is that Jamini came and asked him why his house had been searched and the Moulvi informed him he could not give him the reasons as it was by the Magistrate's order. During the cross-examination of Jamini by Mr. Garth he put it to him that he (Jamini) had told Dr. Bankim Chandra Ghose that the story about the Moulvi demanding Rs. 10,000 was untrue and that this interview between Dr. Bankim and Jamini was overheard by Sub-Inspector Noresh. Both Dr. Bankim and Sub-Inspector Noresh have been examined here as witnesses on behalf of the Defendants. Not a single question was put to either of them with regard to the alleged interview between Jamini and Dr. Bankim or of Noresh overhearing the conversation. I am inclined to think that Jamini's account of the interview he had with the Moulvi is the true one. But whichever account one accepts of the interview it is highly improbable that Jamini would hold a large meeting at his house on the 12th July. Then on the 13th of July (Ex. 56) the informer reports that Jamini has sent a letter by post to his nephew at 4 P.M., with envelope and paper on which was written Bande Mataram. This letter asked his nephew to keep ready "gun-powder" and other things necessary for preparation of bombs.

Space forbids me to do more than to deal shortly with the rest of the alleged reports of the informer. But the report of the 17th July cannot be passed over. The portion I refer to is as follows:— "Surendra Mookerjee prepares bombs, &c. The one he made on the terrace of Hanumanjee's temple exploded when being wrapped up. He has thrown that off (away) and is preparing a new one. He will prepare it within 4 or 5 days." One may doubt whether Surendra, the temple having been searched on the 8th July, was likely to be making bombs on the terrace of the temple on the 17th July. But the story that the bomb exploded whilst Surendra was wrapping it up and therefore he threw away the remnant is so absurd that it is impossible to ask any one to believe it. The bomb that was subsequently found at the Dutt's record house is said to have been substituted by Surendra in place of the bomb that exploded.

On examination by the Chemical Examiner this bomb was proved to be of a highly dangerous character. If the bomb had exploded in Surendra's hand there can be no doubt that not only would there be no part of the bomb left for him to "throw away" but that Surendra must have been terribly injured. But so far from being injured we find Surendra industriously working away at the new bomb, so much so that on the 19th July at 2 P.M. Surendra showed the informer on the terrace of the temple the new bomb "half prepared." Then at a meeting at Saroda Dutt's on the 23rd July at 9-30 A.M. Surendra produces the new bomb which was ultimately found in the record room of the Dutt's on the 31st July.

Between the 23rd July and the 30th July that bomb was going about from place to place. On the 30th July (Ex. 56) the informer reports: "last night Govinda Mookerjee and Nikunja Maiti went to kill the Magistrate, the Deputy Superintendent of Police and the Jamadar Asadulla with the bomb prepared by Surendra. But their work was unsuccessful. This morning at 7 or 8 A.M., Nikunja Maiti told me these words at the house of Nishi Goalini where Rajabala prostitute kept by Nikunja Maiti lives. I shall cause to be seized to-day the bomb prepared by Surendra Mookerjee which Baroda Dutt has kept."

This again seems to be improbable. That Govinda and Nikunja were likely to find the Magistrate, the Moulvi and Asadulla together at night so as to be able to kill them with one bomb is improbable. It may be noticed for what it is worth that Ex. G which was prepared by Asadulla to assist the informer in giving his evidence states that it was Nikunja Maiti alone who went with the bomb to kill the Magistrate and the Moulvi. Ex. S. S. the proof of Rakhal for the Crown brief prepared by Lal Mohun states that Nikunja Maiti took the bomb with intent to kill the Magistrate only. This closes Rakhal's reports so far as we have the originals. The last words written by the informer at the end of his report of the 30th July are "All these are false" (Everything that I have written down is false).

At what time the informer wrote these words it is impossible to say. I must not however omit to notice the report of the 16th July (Ex. 56) as a statement in this report is much relied on by Mr. Norton. The statement is "That the informer has learnt from Jamini that Deb Dass Karan has kept the bomb in a stone-built room in a tank or excavation in the house of Parmananda Shaha." It appears that Mr. Macpherson discovered that on the land adjoining Parmanand's house there is a well or tank hewn out of the rock. Mr. Norton says that this is strong corroboration of the informer's report. I do not agree in this view. On the 16th July 1908 it is improbable that there was no water in the well or tank. It is not likely that Deb Dass Karan would keep his bomb which was constantly being brought out in water. On the 31st July a search took place at the house of Baroda and Saroda Dutt resulting in the discovery of the bomb in a record room at their premises. This was followed by the arrest of the second batch of prisoners including Surendra Nath Mookherjee. The record room in which the bomb was found was used for storing the old zemindari papers and was very rarely opened. It was in the possession of Madhu Sudan Dutt, the common Manager of their joint estate. When the Police had broken open the lock of the door it was found that the floor was strewn with old zemindari papers. The room was thick with dust. In fact so much so that Mr. Cornish states that although he went into the room he came out because the dust was so thick. Now what would strike any man going to search a room in this condition in the early morning of the 31st July for an article which had not been there on the night of the 29th July? I should have thought obviously to see if there were any marks in the dust to show if any one had been into the room recently or of any of the papers having been recently disturbed. But no such precautions were taken. Lal Mohun began to shovel the papers on the floor from one side of the room to the other with a "piece of timber." At a spot not far from a window, in which there was a broken bar, Lal Mohun came across some old books of account, one placed across the top of the others separated into two heaps and lifting the top book off with his hand he discovered the bomb there. It certainly was fortunate for Lal Mohun that he ceased shovelling the papers just in time to find the bomb, otherwise the consequences must have been disastrous to him. One would certainly have thought when Lal Mohun came to the books, if the story of the finding of the bomb is true, that Lal Mohun would have noticed that these books had been recently disturbed and called Mr. Cornish's or some of the search witnesses' attention to the fact. I must confess for my own part that I feel a doubt whether an experienced police-officer would set about a search of a room in which he expects he may find a bomb hidden by shovelling the papers on the floor from one side to the other with a piece of timber.

Mr. Cornish in his evidence in this Court stated 'when I saw the window with the broken bar it did strike me that the bomb had been put in from outside. The bomb was found near the widow.' The evidence is very suspicious, but I cannot say that it is such that I can find that the bomb was placed in the record room by the Police.

In the judgment on appeal in the criminal case I find the following remarks "The Advocate-General (that is Mr. Gregory) has stated before us that he placed no reliance on this bomb and has refrained from discussing its discovery. But if, as we hold, there is strong reason to doubt the genuineness of that discovery it must affect our attitude towards the evidence which relates to the bomb in Peary's house." Mr. Gregory now stated that he made no such statement at all. All I can say, if that be so, is that it is exceedingly unfortunate that Counsel should allow this statement to go unchallenged for years.

The persons arrested on the 31st July were produced before Mr. Nelson on the 1st August and remanded by him until the 15th August.

It might have been expected that after what had happened on the 31st July the rest of the conspirators who had not been arrested would now at any rate for some little time remain quiet.

But on the 1st August, the informer reports again that "Surendra Bose, Sarat Chandra Patra, Jnanendra Sarkar went this day to Deb Das to bring the bomb to kill the Magistrate." Doubtless the informer says they did not get it.

In passing, I may mention that from the 1st August the original reports of the informer are not produced but only documents stated to be translations of the same. On the 2nd of August there is a report of a meeting in the drawing room of Baroda and Saroda who had been arrested on the 31st July. There was a discussion about bombs and picric acid was produced. On the 2nd August there is a long report about bombs.

On the 4th and 5th August the informer again reports. On the 6th August the informer reports about a bomb which Rash Behary Bose kept in the cash box of Rhidoi Suri, a wine merchant, and which he saw the wine merchant give to Rash Behari who having got it tied it to his waist and rode away on his bicycle. On the 7th August there is another report. Also on the 8th August, the 9th August, the 10th August, when Rash Behari Bose produces his bomb. Again on the 11th, 13th and 16th, the informer reports. On the 17th August the informer reports that Jamini Mullick produced from his pocket a bomb saying "see I am always keeping it with me, saying this he kept it back in his pocket and went away." On the 18th of August again there is a long report. On the 20th August there is a meeting about the establishment of a bomb factory and the preparation of bombs. On the 21st August there is another report. Also, on the 25th August, Jamini is reported to have said that he had sent to Calcutta for 40 bombs. And on the 26th August comes the last report, in some ways the most extraordinary. It says "Raja's Ammuktcar Nalini Kanto Sen attended the secret meeting which was held in the lodging of Mahisadal on 11th June 1908."

Why on the 26th August should the informer make such a report of his own motion does not appear.

On the 26th August the last batch of warrants were applied for and on the 28th August the third batch were arrested.

Before proceeding further, it will be convenient to consider what are the provisions that the Legislature in its wisdom has thought fit to impose as to information to the Police and investigation by the Police of alleged offences.

These are contained in Part V, Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Sec. 154 enacts: "Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officer in charge of a Police Station shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction and be read over to the informant and every such information whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid shall be signed by the person giving it and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the Local Government may prescribe in that behalf."

The first information is the basis upon which an investigation under Ch. XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure commences.

The careful and accurate record of the first information has always been considered as a matter of the highest importance by the Courts in India, the object of the first information being to show what was the manner in which the occurrence was related when the case was first started. It is really not necessary to quote any authority in support of this statement which is clearly deducible from the words of the section itself.

If authority however were required it would be sufficient for me to rely on the judgment of Prinsep and Henderson, JJ., in the case of the Emperor v. Kambu Kuki (3). "Such a practice" say the learned Judges is altogether contrary to sec. 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The first information if recorded as directed by sec. 154 at the time that it is made is of considerable value at the trial because it shows on what materials the investigation commenced and what was the story then told. Any statement recorded as in this case several days (in fact in that case it was four days) after the commencement of the investigation and after there had been some development is not only no first information but has very little or no value at all as the original story because it can be made to fit into the case as then developed. No one would accept such a statement as reliable in its details after the lapse of time even if it were admissible in evidence." What do we find in this case? No first information was recorded between the 8th of July and the 7th September.

(3) 11 C. W. N. 554 at p. 556 (1902).

The Moulvi says this was not done as "we don't do that in Conspiracy cases." He however admits that he is well aware of the provisions of the law set out in sec. 154. In these circumstances the explanation that "we don't do that in Conspiracy cases" hardly seems sufficient.

Nor is there any reason to believe that the provisions of the law as to the recording of first information are set aside by the Police in a particular class of cases.

The first information filed by the Moulvi on the 7th of September came into being in the following manner. On the 3rd of September the Inspector-General of Police (Mr. Morshead) accompanied by the Deputy Inspector-General (Mr. Plowden) visited Midnapore. They noticed that no first information had been filed. So it is arranged that a first information should be drawn up in Calcutta. Accordingly on Mr. Plowden's instructions Rai Ram Saday Mookerjee Bahadur of the C. I. D. who according to Mr. Plowden has had great experience in drawing up first information of this nature drew up the first information, it then passed through Mr. Plowden's hands, then Mr. Morshead's and was ultimately settled by an attorney, Mr. Withal. That a document drawn up like this is a proper first information within sec. 154 cannot be suggested for one moment.

What the law requires is not a first information drawn up by a police-officer (however much experience he may have had in drawing first information of this nature) and finally settled by an attorney but the statement of the person himself giving the first information.

As the first information can be used in evidence under secs. 157 and 158 of the Evidence Act to corroborate or impeach the testimony of the person lodging the first information it will be seen how valueless the document becomes if the first information is drawn up by some person other than the proper informant. One example of this from the first information filed on the 7th September must suffice though this is not the only one that might be drawn.

"The following are some of the important places where the members of the said society used to meet and conspire together for the above purposes and other unlawful objects

At the premises of the Raja of Mourbhunj Bakshibazar Midnapore."

There is nothing in the informer's reports giving the house of the Maharaja of Mourbhunj as a place where the conspirators used to meet and conspire although the informer does mention an intended meeting at the Maharaja's premises which was put off. Moreover the house of the Maharaja is not in Bakshibazar.

The Moulvi says this statement in the first information is a mistake. On the other hand Mr. Plowden says the first information having been gone through so carefully by himself, Mr. Morshead and Mr. Withal with the information which had been sent to the C. I. D. that the statement must have been taken from that information. Which of the two statements is correct it is impossible to state. If the provisions of the law had been observed, such a state of things could never have happened. The first information drawn up by the C. I. D. implicated 154 persons ranging as has been said from 'Raja to Beggar'!

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

I can only assume that Mr. Withal the attorney settled the first information in ignorance of the provisions of the law.

The next section of the Code of Criminal Procedure that it is necessary to refer to is sec. 172.

"(1) Every police-officer making an investigation under this chapter shall day by day enter his proceedings in the investigation in a diary setting forth the time at which the information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his investigation, the place or places visited by him and the statement of the circumstances ascertained through his investigation." The second sub-section of the same section authorises any Criminal Court to send for the diary and to use the same to aid it in the inquiry or trial. The object of the special diaries under sec. 172 (which are commonly called 'case diaries') has been well expressed by Edge, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Mannu (4). "The early stages of investigation which follows on the commission of a crime must necessarily in the vast majority of cases be left to the Police and until the honesty, the capacity, the discretion and judgment of the Police can be thoroughly trusted it is necessary for the protection of the public against criminals, for the vindication of the law and for the protection of those who are charged with having committed a criminal offence that the Magistrate or Judge before whom the case is for investigation or for trial should have the means of ascertaining what was the information, true, false or misleading, which was obtained from day to day by the police-officer who was investigating the case and what were the lines of investigation upon which the police-officer acted."

It is hardly necessary to state that the Moulvi and Lal Mohun both state that they are aware of the provisions of the law as to the keeping of "case diaries." Now what do I find in the present case? Between the 8th of July when Santosh was arrested and the 3rd of August, no "case diary" was opened. The Defendant, Lal Mohun, who was the investigating officer states that this was a mistake but this statement I cannot accept.

Therefore during by far the most important period of the investigation in the Bomb Conspiracy case the provisions of the law for enabling the courts to check the method of the Police investigation have been deliberately disobeyed.

I shall now consider the evidence that has been given on both sides as to the truth or untruth of the statements in the informer's reports. I shall first deal with the evidence given on behalf of the Defendants. From the case diary, Ex. V, it appears that on the 22nd August 1908 Lal Mohun held a consultation with his officers as to "a plan of action."

On the 23rd August the plan of action resulted in the production of two witnesses and this was the first evidence obtained corroborating the reports.

The witnesses all speak to having overheard words or seen incidents which had been uttered or taken place long before.

They one and all say that Lal Mohun sent a constable to bring them to him. How Lal Mohun was able to discover these witnesses may be matter for comment.

The first witness is Akhoy Kumar Pal. By way of introduction it may be stated that some time ago the widow of a pleader named Mookerji brought a certain suit against him. In answer to this suit Akhoy produced a receipt which the Subordinate Judge held to be a forgery and directed Akhoy to be prosecuted for forgery and on appeal the District Judge has confirmed this order. At least two of the other witnesses for the defence in that suit, Kangali Ghorai and Amir Ali, gave evidence in the suit brought by the widow against Akhoy to prove that they saw the receipt executed. Akhoy in his evidence here stated "the Government have now taken [me under their protection." There would appear to be some foundation for this for according to Akhoy's evidence the Government intended to settle certain lands with him but which lands after he had entered into possession he had to vacate because the lands belonged to a gentleman who defended the coolies in the train-wrecking case and not unnaturally this gentleman insisted upon his right to his own land.

It would also appear from Akhoy's evidence that he has been allowed to avail himself of the services of the Government Pleader. It is however only fair to the authorities to say that Mr. Macpherson, the Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, stated that he was wholly unaware that Akhoy was being allowed the services of the Government Pleader until he read it in the public press during the proceedings in this case. It does not appear that Akhoy could obtain no other pleader who would work for him so that the authorities had to allow him the services of the Government Pleader. For he said in evidence before me "I don't mean to say that all the pleaders and muktears declined to work for me. I engaged two or three pleaders to file my written statement." Akhoy's statement was recorded by Lal Mohun under sec. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 30th August. Akhoy cannot say how Lal Mohun came to send for him.

In the statement Akhoy said that he had seen the Raja of Narajole walking through the town in Bande Mataram processions. Such a statement as to the conduct of the Raja of Nafajole it is impossible to believe. Before me he has stated that what he meant was that when the Raja came out the people got excited and followed him and it looked like a procession.

It really is not worth while to go through the evidence of Akhoy, as I am satisfied he is a thoroughly disreputable and untruthful witness.

His statement however in his evidence here "I did not say one single word to Lal Mohun of my own accord," even if it means that Akhoy only answered questions put to him by Lal Mohun tends to show that his statement was not recorded very satisfactorily. Akhoy in his evidence speaks to a meeting held five, six or seven days before the Mozufferpore outrage at the house of Deb Das Karan. Akhoy is positive that Santosh was present at that meeting. It is established without doubt that at that time Santosh was at Ranchi. There is only one other matter relating to Akhoy Pal before parting with his evidence. That is with regard to Ex. 61 which has been produced by Akhoy as being, he alleges, a note sent by Mr. K. B. Dutt offering to pay him money if he would refrain from giving evidence. Akhoy says he knows Mr. K. B. Dutt's handwriting as he has on one or two occasions leant over Mr. Dutt's chair when Mr. Dutt was engaged in Court and had seen Mr. Dutt writing in English in the margin of his brief with a Bengali word every here and there. He also says that some years ago he saw a letter asking for votes in connection with a Municipal election. Counsel for the Defendants stated that they were going to call Mr. Hardless the Government expert in handwriting to prove the writing in certain documents and had these documents sent to the Survey of India for the purpose of having them photographed preparatory to Mr. Hardless's evidence. Ex. 61 was one of these documents. Mr. Hardless however has not been called by the Defendants, so presumably his evidence if he had been called would not have assisted the Defendants. There is no doubt in my mind that Ex. 61 is a forgery. But while saying this I am satisfied on the evidence that there is not the slightest ground for suspecting that either Mr. Weston or Mr. Hadrill had anything to do with it nor did they in any way suspect that it was not a genuine document.

The next witness on this branch of the case is Kangali Charan Ghorai. He was also sent for by Lal Mohun in Bhadra. Lal Mohun asked him about a meeting at Deb Das Karan's house and the witness answered. This witness gave evidence to prove the receipt in the suit brought against Akhoy Kumar Pal by the widow of the pleader.

Kangali also appears to be engaged in litigation of a very doubtful nature. His evidence is that "Moti Babu (i.e., the officiating Government Pleader) was engaged by the Government to conduct my cases. The Government have been paying the cost of these two cases and the Police are looking after them."

Doubtless after a night's rest he resiled to a considerable degree from this statement but I am not satisfied that the original statement is not correct.

One of these two cases referred to by the witness is a criminal prosecution against him and another witness for the Defendants, Radha Nath Raut, for defamation, the defamation charged being that these two men said that a woman died from the effects of abortion whereas apparently the body which was examined by a medical man showed that the woman died from the effect of a snake bite. The prosecution in that case alleges that the witness made the defamatory statement in order to extort money. The Deputy Magistrate has framed charges against the witness and Radha Nath and there the matter for the present rests. The witness also appears to have been concerned in other criminal cases. Lal Mohun recorded the statement of the witness under sec. 161 on the 13th October 1908. A constable took him to Lal Mohun. How again did Lal Mohun manage to get hold of this witness? The substance of the statement of this witness recorded under sec. 161 was to speak to the meeting held at Deb Das Karan's.

The witness is, I am satisfied, a thoroughly untruthful witness.

The next witness is Radha Nath Raut. He formerly worked with the last witness Kangali. He was convicted of some offence on the 20th August 1908, but having presented an appeal he was out on bail pending the hearing of his appeal when Lal Mohun sent a constable to bring him on 31st August 1908. This witness according to his statement was discovered by Akhoy Pal.

The witness also appears to be engaged in some litigation including the defamation prosecution in which he is jointly charged with the witness Kangali. He stated "I know the Government is paying the costs of one suit (of ours)." Again, this witness resiled from this statement.

The witness speaks to the meeting said to have been held at Deb Das Karan's. In my opinion there is no truth in his evidence.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

The next witness on this branch is Lal Mahomed Khan. He is a teacher in the Lower Primary School at Midnapore. He also writes up the books of account of one Mullick, a baker.

His evidence is that two or three days after the Ullarath in 1908 when leaving the baker's in the evening he determined to go and see his doctor as he was not feeling very well. When he was passing by the house of Mr. Birendra Nath Dey, I. C. S., he noticed two or three carriages there and people were going into the house. Whilst he was listening to the golmal he saw Babu Abinash Chandra Mitter drive up in his carriage. Abinash said "Hallo master, what brings you here"? The witness said he told Abinash that he was on the way to the doctor. Abinash said "now come with me" and the witness went into the house with Abinash and there he saw a large number of persons seated. The witness says he also saw a young Babu singing songs to the accompaniment of a harmonium and that there were 30 or 40 persons present. The witness said he made an entry as to his attending this meeting in the books of the baker. This witness also says he made his statement to Lal Mohun two or three months after the date of the meeting. How did Lal Mohun manage to find out this witness?

That Abinash was likely to invite a person he met casually in the street to come to a meeting where the making of bombs was going to be discussed two days after Santosh's arrest can hardly be suggested.

The next witness is Mohesh Chandra Kundu. He states that on the day previous to the Ullarath he saw the Raja of Narajole at dusk leaving the house of Jamini Mullick. This witness states that Lal Mohun sent a Daroga for him in September 1908, who took him to Lal Mohun where his statement was recorded. How out of all the 30,000 inhabitants of Midnapore did Lal Mohun in September find out that this witness who does not live near Jamini Mullick's house happened to see the Raja of Narajole leaving it on the evening of the 7th July?

As a complement to the last witness we have the evidence of Rakhal Bera. He states that on the evening before the Ullarath in 1908 he saw the Raja of Narajole arriving at Jamini Mullick's house in his carriage. At the back of the carriage where the syces generally stand were standing two men with swords. The witness says he salamed the Raja.

Again this witness says that Lal Mohun sent a constable to bring him in Bhadra (September) and that Lal Mohun then recorded his statement. The witness admits that during the time that the Raja of Narajole was out on conditional bail, he wrote and signed a document that one Pitamber Roy Kaviraj had tutored him to make the statement to Lal Mohun. Pitamber is described in Lal Mohun's case diary as "an enemy of the Raja of Narajole." The Plaintiff's Counsel suggests that Pitambar has what are delicately called relations with the Police.

Doubtless in his evidence here the witness has stated that he was compelled to give the statement in writing that he had been tutored by Pitamber. But I am not prepared to accept that statement of the witness.

Another witness on this branch of the case is Tajul Khan.

He says that a constable came and took him to Lal Mohun and Lal Mohun asked him 'if he had seen anything in connection with the Babus.'

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

He said that in the month of Jaista at about 2 or 3 in the afternoon as he was going to his work and happened to be passing by the premises of the Mullicks, he saw Babus entering the Rasmancha. His curiosity was awakened as he thought the Babus were going to have a jatra or a nautch at 2 or 3 in the afternoon. He went and peeped into the green room and saw a large number of Babus there. Then one of them told him to quit the place and he left.

On another occasion the mother of this witness happened to be ill. She had a fever and a "pain under her ribs" so he started off to find Dr. Abhoy Kundu with two bottles in his hand—one to cure the fever and the other the pain under the ribs. He first went to the house of Dr. Abhoy but finding his shop closed he went to his residence. There a lady came out and told him the doctor has gone to the Mullicks'. The witness hastened there and went near the Thakur-dalan and called for Dr. Abhoy who came out to him. He saw a large number of Babus sitting there, also a young Babu playing on the harmonium and another young Babu singing.

Again on another occasion whilst the witness was waiting for coolies to come to work, he saw Babus going into the house of Kamini prostitute. The witness says he calls the mother of Kamini sister. He asked the mother what was going on and she told him. The witness recognised several of the people mentioned by the informer. The witness was not sent for by Lal Mohun until 2, 3 or 4 months after he had seen the first meeting.

The next witness is Bankim Behary Haldar. He was sent for by Lal Mohun in September 1908. His story is that two days before the first Rath he went to Troylokya Nath Pal's house to see about some litigation in which a friend of his was engaged and as he passed the windows of Troylokya's house he heard the following words, but he cannot say by whom they were spoken, "that money would have to be collected until after the disposal of the Arms Act case, and that we should have to live with care up to that time." He also says he saw certain people whose names he had mentioned there.

Troylokya, he says, told him to come next day, then he left. This witness also appears to have had three criminal cases brought against him since 1906.

The next witness is Nibaran Chunder Ghose, a Mohurir. This witness made a statement to Lal Mohun on the 25th September 1909.

The witness occupied a room in the house of Nishi Goalini where also lived Rajabala, prostitute, who was the mistress of Nikunja Maiti.

The witness states that on one night when the door of Rajabala's room was closed he heard from outside these words being spoken in her room "The Firingeers would have to be killed by means of bombs."

He states that "two" voices said this—the two voices were the voices of Nikunja Maiti and Gosto Behary Kundu.

The next witness is Saday Jana. He seems to have had some previous experience of litigation as he has on two occasions been fined for bringing vexatious complaints.

Raja Sri Narain Pal is his zemindar with whom he had litigation some time during the last four days of Assar. He says Sri Narain Pal sent for him. The witness said he could not go to the Raja that morning but would go in the evening. He went to the Raja's house in the evening but finding that the Raja had gone to the cutchery of the Raja of Mahisadal, he followed him there, and when after some difficulty he arrived at the Mahisadal cutchery, he heard the words "that unless the Police were beaten, assaulted or killed, nothing could be done," but could not say who said these words. He saw 30 or 40 people some of whose names he gave.

Gosto Behary Kundu was playing on the harmonium and Ninkunja Maiti was singing a Swadeshi song. I am satisfied that there is not a word of truth in the evidence of any of these witnesses.

I shall interpose here the evidence of a witness Gajendra Nath Bhunia. The witness is the Mohurir of Mohendra Nath Das, pleader.

His evidence is that late in the night of the 13th September 1903, when he had gone to sleep at his master's premises, two constables—one of whom was Allabux—came and arrested him on the ground that he had a sword-stick with him.

Gajendra was taken to the Thanah where he says he saw the Defendant Lal Mohun and some Sub-Inspectors. Previously he says he had been approached by the Police to give false evidence in the Bomb case against Upendra Nath Maiti but he had refused. Gajendra further says that Lal Mohun asked him at the Thanah why he had not come and seen him although he repeatedly sent for him through Allabux. Gajendra also says that he suffered certain ill-treatment and the charge was altered to one of being drunk and disorderly. Shortly before 2 o'clock in the morning Gajendra was bailed out by one of his friends Haripada Bhunia, a Mohurir in the Collectorate, who has been called as a witness for the defence in this suit. Upon his release Gajendra went immediately to the house of Bepin Behary Ghosh, a pleader, who advised him to go and find some Magistrate who would be able to speak to his being sober.

Gajendra hastened to the house of Babu Sarat Chandra Roy one of the Deputy Magistrates at Midnapore.

The Deputy Magistrate (who has given evidence in this case for the Defendants) having been aroused from sleep came out, when Gajendra fell at his feet and told him of his arrest on a false charge. The Deputy Magistrate agrees in the story so far and says that Gajendra was perfectly sober and that he did not smell of liquor at all. But Sarat Babu says Gajendra did not make any complaint against the Police except that they had arrested him on a false charge. Haripada Bhunia, the Collectorate Mohurir, gave evidence to the same effect. Next morning when the case appeared on the file of the witness Sarat Babu (the Deputy Magistrate), Gajendra at once filed a statement Ex. A10 stating that he had been falsely arrested for refusing to give false evidence against Upendra Nath Maiti in the Bomb case.

The case only remained on the file of Sarat Babu for a few minutes before he transferred it to Mr. Mirza another Magistrate for disposal but it appears from the order of transfer that Sarat Babu had read Gajendra's statement. Gajendra said he could not get any pleader to file his statement. This can be well imagined for the other witness for the defence Haripada Bhunia says that at that time not only was he himself in fear of being arrested but some of his neighbours were in such a state of fear that they were flying from their homes. Mr. Norton quite frankly admits that having regard to the statements of his own witnesses and the statement filed before the Deputy Magistrate by Gajendra there can be little doubt that Gajendra was arrested on a false charge and that probably some of the inferior Police had been trying to get him to give false evidence against Upendra Nath Maiti but he says that there is no reason to suppose that Lal Mohun was concerned in this.

But why should I accept every portion of Gajendra's statement except as to the presence of Lal Mohun at the Thanah when he was arrested and taken there? Besides Lal Mohun was the investigating officer and he was procuring either by himself or through his subordinates the evidence in support of the case. It seems to me highly improbable that two Police constables would have approached Gajendra to give false evidence against Upendra Nath Maiti unless it was with the sanction of Lal Mohun.

• I accept Gajendra's evidence.

The Plaintiff on the other hand calls some thirty witnesses who state they did not do the things which Rakhal's alleged reports mention them as having done.

In my opinion the most important of these witnesses—not by reason of his wealth but on the ground of his respectability and position—is Babu Upendra Nath Maiti, the leader of the local Bar at Midnapore. He is one of the Plaintiffs in the other suits. He has given evidence before me and I am satisfied that his evidence is true. He states that no meeting ever took place at his house on the 3rd July 1908 or on any other date. The reports of Rakhal give a meeting as being held that day in his house at which there was singing and speech-making and the bomb found on the 8th of July at the Plaintiff's house was produced.

The learned Sessions Judge in the course of his judgment said with regard to Babu Upendra Nath Maiti "I may say at once that some of the persons incriminated in Ex. 56 have not in my belief done and said what is alleged against them. Babu Upendra Nath Maiti is an instance."

This view of Upendra Nath Maiti was also taken by the Appellate Bench on the hearing of the Criminal Appeal. In this view of Babu Upendra Nath Maiti I entirely concur. Now if one finds such an essential link in the story as the meeting of the 3rd July held at Upendra Babu's house to be untrue, I must confess it makes one look with some suspicion on the remainder of the report. For if the report of the meeting at Upendra Nath Maiti's on the 3rd of July be untrue why should one readily assume that the reports of the other meetings are true? Upendra Nath Maiti was arrested on the bare statement in Ex. 56 as to the meeting being held in his house on the 3rd July 1908.

The next witness on whose evidence I place much reliance is Babu Radha Nath Pati. He is a pleader practising at Midnapore.

Radha Nath Pati says he never attended any secret meeting or paid any subscription towards the manufacture of bombs. The reports give Babu Radha Nath Pati as having attended the meeting at Kamini prostitute's on the 23rd June. He says he was never in the house of a prostitute in his life. I have no doubt that the evidence of Radha Nath Pati is true. Another witness on this point is Abinash Chandra Mitter who is one of the Plaintiffs in one of the other suits. He is a man of considerable wealth. He says he took part in the Swadeshi movement and started a Swadeshi shop. He however denies that he did any of the things that are reported against him in Ex. 56. I accept his evidence on this point. Abinash was also one of the persons arrested. Then there is the evidence of Khagendra Banerjee, also another Plaintiff in one of the other suits. He denies attending any of the meetings which he is said to have attended.

In the report (Ex. 56) of the 18th June 1908 there purports to be a description of the attempt to wreck the train of the Lieutenant-Governor at Naraingarh with which I have already dealt.

There is no reason to think that Khagendra's brother was employed in the office of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Gopal Chandra Bannerjee is another Plaintiff in one of the other suits. He was also arrested. He denies attending the meetings which he was alleged to have attended. His evidence, I think, is true.

Space forbids me to go through the other witnesses on behalf of the Plaintiff on this point. It is sufficient for me to say generally that I am satisfied from their evidence that they did not do and say the things mentioned as done and said by them in Ex. 56 and Ex. G.

But while I say this it must not be taken that I agree with Mr. Dutt in saying that all these witnesses were loyal and law-abiding subjects. I think some of them probably were not. There appears from the evidence circumstances of suspicion against some of them that they were neither loyal nor law-abiding. But the question is whether they were in the conspiracy related by Rakhal and I am satisfied they were not. Take for instance the witness Piyari Lal Ghose. He seems to have been deeply in the Swadeshi and boycott movement. The house where the tantsala opened by Satyendra was carried on belonged to him. He was also a relative of Satyendra's. But I have heard nothing in this case to make me think that Piyari Lal Ghose was in the conspiracy said to have been reported by Rakhal.

Much has been said against the Raja of Narajole. I agree that there are circumstances which tend to show that some of the Raja's subscriptions were not above suspicion. But, again, there is nothing to connect those subscriptions with the alleged reports of the informer. I am satisfied that the Raja never went to Jamini Mullick's on the evening of the 7th July to see a bomb. This is the only meeting the Raja is alleged to have attended. The other reports against the Raja in the reports are also I think untrue.

The Raja says that he had to pay the Police the sum of Rs. 40,000 to extricate himself from the criminal case. The evidence shows clearly that the Raja did come to Calcutta and change Government Promissory notes for Rs. 30,000 into ten-rupee notes. That the Raja intended to make a payment with those ten-rupee notes that could not be traced is I think clear. He says that the Rs. 30,000 was handed over to his maternal uncle Ashutosh Roy for payment to the Police. Ashutosh Roy is said to be on terms of friendship with the Police. That the Raja intended to make a present of Rs. 30,000 to his maternal uncle in ten-rupee notes is not I think likely. The Plaintiff has however failed to call Ashutosh Roy and without Ashutosh Roy's evidence no Court could assume that the money reached the Police. Then the Raja spoke as to Lal Mohun and Noresh coming to him after he was released and asking for this Rs. 30,000 to be paid, as they said there was going to be an inquiry, and they might lose their posts. Whilst I am not prepared to say that the Raja's story as to this visit is untrue, it is obviously insufficient to prove the receipt by the Police of the Raja's money. Indeed the case of the Defendants is that Ashutosh Roy has "pocketed," as Lal Mohun said, the bulk of the money himself, and there certainly appears to be some grounds for this suggestion. Before parting with the Raja I must express my strongest disapproval of the language used by the Advocate General with regard to him. Unfortunately owing to the acoustic properties of the Court being so bad I did not myself catch the remarks of the Advocate-General at the time. The Assistant Registrar has however supplied me with a copy of a verbatim note of the words as taken by Dr. Suhrawardy, one of the Counsel for the Plaintiff in the case.

The words are as follows:—"There he (the Raja) sat, a disgusting sight, drink-sodden, more beast than man." No words more insulting to a witness could be imagined. That Dr. Suhrawardy's note is substantially correct there can be no doubt, for Mr. Norton informed me that he was instructed that the Advocate General stated that the Raja was "more beast than man."

- If I had heard at the time the words used by the Advocate-General I should instantly have checked him. The Raja, it must be remembered, is a nobleman amongst his own people, and however dissipated or disloyal the Advocate-General may think him to be, it does not entitle him to use such language.

The evidence of two of the Plaintiff's witnesses has been relied on by the defence.

The first is Rash Behari Bose. Doubtless there appears to be strong suspicion to connect him with that very improper portrait sent to Mr. Weston and which has been referred to as the stabbing portrait. But how does this connect him with the conspiracy said to have been related by Rakhal which makes no mention of this portrait? The other witness is Moti Lal Mookerjee. The Defendants rely on his case because he did not surrender until the 17th October although a warrant had been issued against him on the 26th August. His evidence is that he was lying ill in Calcutta and was attended by Dr. Pushong and therefore did not surrender earlier.

Then the fact that his father-in-law's residence was No. 2, St. James' Lane, Calcutta, has been relied on because this address is given on one of the exhibits in this case. These facts are obviously wholly insufficient in any way to establish the truth of the story said to have given by the informer.

The evidence therefore as to the truth of the informer's reports stands as follows:—

On the side of the Defendants there is the evidence of the witnesses to whose evidence I have already referred. There is also the deliberate attempt to get the witness Gajendra Bhunia to give false evidence. On the side of the Plaintiff there is a body of some 30 witnesses, some of them men of irreproachable character, all of whom have stated that they did not do what was alleged against them in the alleged reports of the informer. These coupled with the improbabilities of the reports said to have been given by the informer lead me to the clear conclusion that the informations are not true.

Whether the informer actually gave these reports or not it is impossible to say. That they were evolved by a drunkard like Rakhal the informer does not appear probable. Nor is the account of the way in which the reports are said to have been written as given by Moulvi and Asadulla satisfactory. In the absence of Rakhal it is impossible to say who wrote the reports.

Mr. Norton has stated that the Plaintiff ought to have called Rakhal as a witness. This obviously the Plaintiff could not do. Moreover it appears from some of the documents used at Mr. Macpherson's inquiry that the Police had Rakhal out of jail and examined him at that inquiry.

I must now go back and deal with the evidence relating to the period between the 8th July (when Santosh was arrested) and the 23rd July (when the Plaintiff was arrested).

The reasons set out in the written statements of the Defendants Weston and the Moulvi for the arrest of the Plaintiff is "of there being reasonable grounds for the belief that the Plaintiff has been accessory to the commission of an offence under the Explosive Substances Act in connection with the said bomb which was found in his house." This is the case in the pleadings which the Defendants set up in reply to the Plaintiff's case and upon this they came to trial.

The application for the warrant to arrest Peari on the 23rd July 1908 (Ex. R in No. 1) states that "the surrounding circumstances of the conspiracy give rise to a reasonable suspicion that the accused Santosh Dass's father Babu Peari Mohan Das who ... lives in the same house and mess with the accused is fully aware of the operations and the possession of the bomb for an unlawful object."

Now the case set up in the pleadings of the Defendants Weston and the Moulvi that the Plaintiff was arrested as there were reasonable grounds for the belief that the Plaintiff had been accessory to the commission of an offence under the Explosive Substances Act in connection with the bomb found in his house has been wholly abandoned at the hearing and an attempt made to set up a wholly different defence to that raised in the pleadings.

The Defendants are obviously not entitled to pursue such a course. The case the Defendants are now endeavouring to set up is not that they arrested the Plaintiff or caused him to be arrested on the ground that they reasonably believed him to be accessory under sec. 6 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, but that they arrested or caused him to be arrested under sec. 5 of the same Act.

Sec. 5 of the Act is in the following terms:—"Any person who knowingly has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object shall unless he can show that he had it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object be punishable with transportation for a term which may extend to 14 years."

The learned Advocate General stated that under this section whenever a bomb is found in a house every member of the family is liable to be arrested. That in my opinion is far too broad a statement. In this country the joint family system prevails and the family frequently consists of a very large number of persons. That every person in such family should, merely on the ground that a bomb is found in the joint family residence, be liable to be imprisoned and tried for an offence under the Explosive Substances Act is not in my opinion the law. Sec. 5 of the Explosive Substances Act only applies when a person has in his possession or under his control an explosive substance. Though doubtless when once it is established that a person has in his possession or under his control an explosive substance the Statute casts the onus of proving that he had it in his possession or control for an innocent purpose on such person, but still one has to come back to the question, when an article is found in the residence of a joint Hindu family, in whose possession or under whose control it is. If the article is found in a portion of the house, of which one member of the family has the exclusive use, then no difficulty arises, for such member must prima facie be held to be liable for anything that is found there. But if an article is found in a portion of the house of which all the members of the family have the use then prima facie the Karta (the managing head) of the family is responsible.

But in either case it is only a presumption which may be rebutted and if the Police act on information, which they believe, showing that an article found in a house is in the exclusive possession of one member of the family and the article is found in a portion of the joint family residence of which all the members of the family have the use, then I apprehend that the head of the family is not liable to arrest merely on the ground that the article is found in a portion of the house, to which all the family can resort.

These seem to be the principles which are reasonably deducible from the decision of Queen-Empress v. Singam Lal (5). In the present case there is not a word in the reports of the informer on which the Defendants say they acted to suggest that the Plaintiff was in possession of the bomb.

The story told by the Defendants here is as follows :—That Mr. Weston did not know of the application for the search warrant on the night of the 7th July and that when he came to hear of the search on the 8th July and saw the other two Defendants, he asked them why they had not arrested the Plaintiff. They said it had not occurred to them to arrest the Plaintiff as the information regarding the bomb implicated Santosh only. The Moulvi and Lal Mohun then offered to return and arrest Piyari but Mr. Weston said that was not necessary as the Plaintiff would not run away and he would wait until he knew whether the article was really a bomb or only a hoax. That until the evening of the 20th July when the Moulvi says he got the demi-official of the Chemical Examiner's report, which he says he gave to Mr. Weston that same night or on the next morning, Mr. Weston was not certain whether the bomb was a dangerous article or not. But that upon receiving the demi-official report of the Chemical Examiner Mr. Weston directed that the Plaintiff should be arrested as the owner of the house. Then inquiring the date for which Santosh's case was fixed and being told it was fixed for the 23rd July, Mr. Weston said it would be sufficient if the Plaintiff were arrested on the 23rd July and accordingly the Plaintiff was so arrested. The whole of this story rests upon one fact, namely, that Mr. Weston did not know the nature of the article found at the Plaintiff's house on the 8th of July earlier than the evening of the 20th July or the morning of the 21st July.

This time has to be fixed, as Mr. Weston admits that he had an interview with the Plaintiff on the 19th July and also because the Plaintiff has preserved a note (Ex. h) which Mr. Weston wrote to him on the 20th July. If it is established that after the date when Mr. Weston was fully aware of the character of the article found in the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July, Mr. Weston not only had an interview with the Plaintiff but also wrote to him appointing another interview, then the story told by the Defendants that as soon as the character of the article was ascertained Mr. Weston decided that the Plaintiff should be arrested and after that date had no communications with the Plaintiff, falls to the ground.

Now on the 9th July Major Weinman gave a certificate (Ex. 36) as to the bomb found at the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July.

The certificate states that "the core consisted of a yellowish brownish powder mixed with shot."

With regard to this Mr. Cornish states "after I had seen Major Weinman's certificate I had no doubt as to the dangerous character of the article found in Santosh's house," and again, "on the 11th July the Moulvi and Lal Mohun had no doubt as to what the bomb contained nor do I know that Mr. Weston had any doubt "

Mr. Nelson states that "I had no doubt after Major Weinman had examined the bomb as to its dangerous character."

But we have a much more extraordinary piece of evidence than the statements of Cornish and Mr. Nelson. On the 12th of July the Moulvi addressed to Mr. Weston a letter (Ex. 70) asking for permission for himself and Lal Mohun to have an interview with Santosh in jail to question him about the bomb. This letter ends with the very significant sentence "In his statement before the Joint-Magistrate in charge of the Sadar Sub-division he (i.e., Santosh) said it was a ball made of rags and intended for benafi whereas on examination it has been found to contain certain explosives and shots." Mr. Weston states that he does not remember seeing this document. But that he saw it is clear from the endorsement by Mr. Weston in the margin "Jailor please allow this, D. Weston. 11th July 1908." And why should Mr. Weston allow the two police-officers to question Santosh in jail as to an article he thought might be a hoax?

Then again the evidence shows that Mr. Weston was in possession of the demi-official of the Chemical Examiner's report earlier than the night of the 20th July or the morning of the 21st July.

The copy of the demi-official report sent to Midnapore has written beneath it "Calcutta July 1908. Copy forwarded to W. H. Cornish, Esq., Superintendent of Police, Midnapore. (Signed) G. C. Denham, Special Assistant S. B. Bengal 17-7." The evidence shows that a letter posted in Calcutta in the evening reaches Midnapore early next morning and that a letter posted in Calcutta in the morning reaches Midnapore the same evening.

Mr. Cornish's evidence is that he showed the demi-official report of the Chemical Examiner to Mr. Weston immediately after he received it by post and then made it over to the Moulvi. The Defendants' case is that Mr. Cornish gave the document to the Moulvi and that Moulvi showed it to Mr. Weston.

I accept Mr. Cornish's evidence on this point. Then again Mr. Cornish says 'I must have received it (i.e., the demi-official report) on the 18th July.' The Defendants' case is that the document was not received in Midnapore until the 20th July.

In my opinion the demi-official report was in Midnapore without doubt on the 18th July. It is not likely that the document would be three days in the post between Calcutta and Midnapore nor that Mr. Denham having signed the copy of the demi-official report on the 17th July would not have it posted in the ordinary course. I therefore find as a fact that the demi-official report of the Chemical Examiner was received by Cornish on the 18th July and immediately shown by him to Mr. Weston.

I do not accept the date written by the Moulvi on Ex. 79 as a genuine date.

On the evidence I come to the conclusion that Defendants after Major Weinman's report of the 9th July had no doubt as to the dangerous character of the bomb although probably they did not know the nature of the explosive used. On this view of the evidence the Defendants' story as to why the Plaintiff was not arrested falls to the ground. I am satisfied that this story put forward by the Defendants has no foundation in fact. It was suggested by Lal Mohun that Mr. Plowden had given orders for Peary's arrest. But this Mr. Plowden says is not so. Mr. Plowden did say that when he saw Lal Mohun he did make a remark, "just a casual remark," as to whether the owner of the house had been arrested. I think Mr. Plowden's memory is at fault with regard to this. He spoke to this remark long after it had taken place and it is possible that Mr. Plowden may have been asked about this incident and quite honestly after discussion have thought he remembered it.

The evidence shows clearly that Mr. Plowden in fact had nothing to do with the arrest of the Plaintiff.

I now turn to the Plaintiff's story as to the reason why he was arrested.

On the 9th or 10th July Peari presented a petition to the Joint-Magistrate (Mr. Nelson) praying that he might be allowed to supply Santosh with some clothes in jail. Under the provisions of the Prisons Act and the Jail Code the Plaintiff was entitled as of right to be granted this. Under-trial prisoners are not required to wear jail clothing. This application was rejected by Mr. Nelson.

Moti Lal Mukerjee, the pleader, states he saw this petition being taken with a red slip on it towards Mr. Weston's house. Mr. Nelson states that 'on the 9th July I distinctly remember an application being made to me by Peari for leave to send clothes to Santosh in jail. I cannot remember what I did with it. I did not send it to Mr. Weston for orders.' Mr. Weston says he does not remember this petition.

That Mr. Nelson rejected this petition is clear. But why? Mr. Nelson could hardly be desirous of preventing Santosh from having proper clothing in jail. Mr. K. B. Dutt suggests that Mr. Nelson rejected this petition at the instance of Mr. Weston so that the Plaintiff might go and present a petition to the higher authority, Mr. Weston. There is nothing on the evidence to show that that was so. The result however of the rejection by Mr. Nelson of that petition was that Peari went to see Mr. Weston on the 11th July.

It is unfortunate that the petition presented by Peari to Mr. Nelson, like many other documents in this case, is missing. It ought to have been with the record in the Joint-Magistrate's Court.

On the 11th July the Plaintiff went to Mr. Weston's house. It is admitted by Mr. Weston that the Plaintiff had an interview with him on that day. The Plaintiff's evidence is that at that interview Mr. Weston did not say anything about the desirability of making Santosh confess. Mr. Weston says that the Plaintiff asked his advice and that he advised that the best thing for Santosh to do would be to confess or rather make a clean breast of it if he were guilty and penitent and perhaps the Court would take a lenient view of Santosh's offence. Mr. Weston is not an inexperienced officer. He acted for some years as Chief Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta and he must have known that if Santosh followed his advice he could not hope to get a light sentence. Moreover Mr. Weston's evidence is that at this time he was only waiting for the Chemical Examiner's report to see if the Plaintiff should be arrested. On the other hand, it cannot have escaped Mr. Weston's notice that with regard to the conspiracy said to, have been reported by Rakhal he had no evidence on which he could hope to convict the conspirators—nay more on the evidence then in his possession it might even be difficult to convict Santosh. This statement of Mr. Weston's as to the advice he then gave the Plaintiff does not seem to fit in with his statement that he did not know the character of the article found at the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July. For if Mr. Weston then felt any doubt as to the dangerous character of the article or thought it might be a hoax, one would have expected him to advise the Plaintiff to wait and see what the article proved to be. On the 11th July the Plaintiff under an order obtained from Mr. Weston went to the jail to see Santosh but he was not allowed to do so as the jail authorities said Santosh was not well.

After seeing the Plaintiff on the 11th July, Mr. Weston saw the Moulvi and Lal Mohun and gave them an order to visit Santosh. On the same day the Moulvi and Lal Mohun went to the jail and had an interview with Santosh in his cell. They say they were with Santosh for about 15 minutes but Santosh said he was not well and told them that they should come the next morning. Santosh, on the other hand, says he was perfectly well and that the Police were with him for over an hour. The jail gate-register shows that the police-officers or rather the Moulvi was in the jail from 4-10 P.M. to 6 P.M. Santosh's statement as to the time the Police were with him is far more probable than that of the Defendants. Nor could Santosh's illness be of such a serious character as to prevent him holding a conversation with the police-officers for the police-officers say they saw him at 8-45 next morning, that is only about 15 hours later, when Santosh appears to have been perfectly well.

Santosh's account of what took place at that meeting on the 11th July was that the Moulvi and Lal Mohun told him that he ought to confess and that all that he would have to say was that the Raja had gone to Jamini Mullick's the night before his (Santosh's) arrest and also he would have to speak to the meeting at Kamini's and at Saroda and Baroda Dutt's and to some other meetings. Santosh says that the police-officers also told him if he did not consent to make a confession his father would be arrested and that they would come again to-morrow by which time he had better make up his mind.

On the following morning, the 12th July, the Moulvi and Lal Mohun again saw Santosh in his cell. The interview took place about 8-45 A.M. The Moulvi and Lal Mohun say that the Moulvi questioned Santosh about secret meetings but he made no reply and all that he said was that he would make a statement to the Magistrate after consulting his father.

Santosh, on the other hand, says that the police-officers asked him to admit being present at the meetings held at Baroda and Saroda Dutt's, at Kamini's and at Upendra Nath Maiti's and also as to the Raja of Narajole going to Jamini Mullick's on the evening of the 7th July. Santosh also says that the police-officers showed him a warrant for the arrest of his father the Plaintiff and that by threat and persuasion they made him write a letter to the Magistrate (Ex. 69). The Moulvi and Lal Mohun say they never saw Ex. 69 until they saw it in the Sessions Court.

The truth of Santosh's account of this interview must therefore largely depend on whether Santosh's story as to the writing of the letter Ex. 69 to Mr. Weston is true. Santosh says that the Moulvi produced from his pocket a piece of paper, and pen and ink having been sent for, he wrote the letter at the dictation of the Moulvi.

This letter Ex. 69 is written on a piece of country made paper commonly called "Bally" paper.

The Jail Code provides that in case of convicted prisoners their correspondence shall be written upon Jail Miscellaneous Form No. 87. True it is that the Jail Code does not in words provide that the correspondence of under-trial prisoners shall be written on the same form, but Capt Salisbury's and other evidence shews that when an under-trial prisoner expresses his desire to write a letter, he is given a Jail Miscellaneous Form No. 87.

The Jail Code moreover provides that all correspondence of both convicted and under trial prisoners shall pass through the Jailor who shall certify that the contents of the letter are admissible under the rules and the Jailor shall then take the orders of the Superintendent of the jail who may direct that the letter may be posted

Now what do we find with regard to this letter of the 12th July (Ex. 69)? First it is not written on Jail Miscellaneous Form No. 87, nor does it bear the usual endorsement of the Jailor that the contents are admissible under the rules, nor the order of the Superintendent that the letter may be posted. There is also the absence of the usual official covering letter from the Superintendent to the District Magistrate, "Jail Miscellaneous Form No. 79."

In place of these we find a memorandum endorsed without any date "Forwarded to Magistrate of Midnapore for favour of disposal, S C Chakravarti for Superintendent of Central Jail, Midnapore." The practice is, as Ex. 68 shows, for the Superintendent to forward such letters to the District Magistrate with a covering letter. Mr. Weston says he cannot say how Santosh's letter of the 12th July came into his possession. The Moulvi and Lal Mohun say that they had nothing to do with this letter. I accept Santosh's story supported as it is by all the probabilities that this letter was written by him in his cell on paper supplied by and at the dictation of the Moulvi and that the Moulvi took the letter away with him. That being so I in substance accept Santosh's account as to what took place at the interview in his cell on the morning of the 12th of July. Early on the same morning, the 12th July, the Plaintiff had presented to Mr. Weston a petition (Ex. 67) asking that he might be allowed to visit Santosh in jail on that day and on every alternate day. Mr. Weston sent this petition to the Superintendent of the jail for disposal and on the same day Major Weinman ordered that the Plaintiff should be allowed interviews with Santosh twice a week, on Wednesdays and Sundays.

The Plaintiff's story is that he and his son Ashutosh drove together to the jail on the morning of the 12th July, that the Plaintiff on going to the jail office found the Moulvi and Lal Mohun there. The Plaintiff also says that, on seeing Santosh, he told the Plaintiff that the Moulvi and Lal Mohun had been trying to get him to implicate respectable people, and had made him write to the Magistrate. Ashutosh says that he did not go into the jail office but remained outside, and that when Santosh was being brought from the jail, their eyes met, and he shouted out to Santosh that he was convinced of his innocence and would see that it was established. That thereupon the Moulvi and Lal Mohun having Police cases in their hands rushed at Ashutosh but the Plaintiff intervened and told Ashutosh to go and sit in the carriage. The Moulvi denies this story altogether but says that as he and Lal Mohun were driving away from the jail, they passed the Plaintiff's carriage going to the jail.

Immediately they had passed the Plaintiff's carriage the Moulvi suddenly recollected that he had forgotten to give a private message to the Assistant Jailor. The Moulvi thereupon stopped the carriage and got down and walked back to the jail. There he saw Ashutosh making signs to Santosh.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

The Moulvi says he gently reproved Ashutosh, telling him it was very wrong of him to make signs to Santosh. Having given his message to the Assistant Jailor the Moulvi left the jail. He says he did not see the Plaintiff. Lal Mohun says he did not see the Plaintiff's carriage pass them on the way to the jail.

The story about the Moulvi immediately he passed the Plaintiff's carriage suddenly remembering that he had a message to give to the Assistant Jailor and his return to the jail and the gentle reproof to Ashutosh appears to me to be highly improbable. I accept the Plaintiff's account of what happened at the jail office on the 12th of July. To return now to Ex. 69, the letter of Santosh of the 12th of July to Mr. Weston

Mr. Weston now says that he has no recollection whatever as to how he received Ex. 69. Before the Sessions Judge Mr. Weston said "I received this (Ex. 69). On it I must have allowed Santosh's father to see him. I sent the petition on to Mr. Cornish."

Mr. Cornish's evidence here is: "An interview must have been arranged between the father and the son. The application was made to the Magistrate. The interview took place. The Magistrate arranged it."

Now if this be true, as I think it is, then the probabilities are that Mr. Weston sent for the Plaintiff after receiving Ex. 69. The Plaintiff's story is that he received a chit from Mr. Weston on the 13th or 14th July asking him to come and see him. With regard to chits received by the Plaintiff from Weston, the Plaintiff's evidence is that "Mr. Weston sent me chits asking me to come and see him." "I received three. I lost two. Lal Mohun and Moulvi brought them all. I got two chits between the 12th and 19th July." Having regard to Ex. 69 and

Mr. Cornish's evidence the probabilities are strongly in favour of the Plaintiff having received a chit from Mr. Weston on the 13th or 14th July. The Plaintiff says that the next interview he had with Mr. Weston was on the 14th July. All the probabilities are that this interview took place following on the receipt by Mr. Weston of Ex. 69 (Santosh's letter of 12th July).

The Plaintiff's account of what took place at that meeting is as follows:—He says he swore before God that his son was innocent. Mr. Weston said he should not be so nervous as the Police had made no reports against him (the Plaintiff). But if he sought his son's safety, he should get his son to be an approver. The Plaintiff fixes another interview with Mr. Weston on the 15th or 16th July, but as to this there is nothing to confirm him. I hold this interview not to be proved.

The next interview that took place is common ground between the parties—that is the interview on the 19th July.

Now why should the Plaintiff go and see Mr. Weston on the 19th July 1908 which was a Sunday? It could not be that he wanted to see Mr. Weston in order to get an order for an interview with Santosh in jail on that day, for the Plaintiff had already under Ex. 67 got an order to see Santosh on all Wednesdays and Sundays.

I can hardly think in these circumstances that the Plaintiff went to Mr. Weston of his own accord. If he did not, then the probabilities are that Mr. Weston sent a chit for him to come and see him. If that be so then this would account for the third chit which the Plaintiff said he received from Mr. Weston. Mr. Weston says he does not remember what took place at that interview except that the Plaintiff wanted to see his son.

That does not seem satisfactory in view of the documentary evidence that we have. Ex. H. which is a note sent by Mr. Weston to the Plaintiff, on the 20th July is in the following terms:—"I cannot see you as arranged at 7 P.M. on Tuesday. Come at 9 A.M. on Wednesday."

Now why did Mr. Weston arrange an interview with the Plaintiff at 7 P.M. on Tuesday which was the 21st July 1908?

The hour, Mr. Weston agrees, is unusual as he usually sees people on these matters in the early morning. He says that he thinks 7 P.M. in the evening was probably fixed so that the Plaintiff might see him after he had seen Santosh.

There can be no doubt that this note (Ex. H) shows that this proposed interview on the 21st July with Piyari was arranged by Mr. Weston so that he might see the Plaintiff after he had had an interview with his son Santosh. But what did Mr. Weston want to see the Plaintiff for after he had seen his son in jail?

Mr. Weston says he remembers nothing further that passed at the interview on the 19th July except that the Plaintiff wanted to see his son.

The Plaintiff's evidence is that Mr. Weston told him the only way to save his son was to make him an approver and that if he could not manage to get his son to make a statement he himself would be arrested.

Then we have the fact from Santosh's history ticket that the Plaintiff did see Santosh in jail on the 21st July which was a Tuesday. Mr. Weston must have authorised this visit. I have no doubt but that the Plaintiff's account of this interview is correct.

The next interview that the Plaintiff alleges he had with Mr. Weston is on the 22nd of July.

By this note of the 20th July (Ex. H)

Mr. Weston had appointed 9 A.M. on the 22nd of July as the time of meeting.

The Plaintiff, however, says that he did not keep the appointment as he had failed to induce Santosh to agree to make a confession on the 21st. In the afternoon of the 22nd July, the Plaintiff says, he mustered up courage to go and see Mr. Weston. The Plaintiff says that Mr. Weston told him he would give him one more chance and that he gave him an order so that he might be allowed to see Santosh in jail. The Plaintiff says that when he arrived at the jail, he saw the Superintendent who told him that he had come late and it was just about closing time. But as the Plaintiff had brought an order from the Magistrate, he allowed the Plaintiff to see Santosh. Santosh however, the Plaintiff says, did not agree to make a confession. The Plaintiff says he returned to Mr. Weston and told him the result of his interview with Santosh and Mr. Weston said he would think over what should be done.

Next morning Santosh was produced before Mr. Nelson and the Plaintiff either in the Court room or just outside it was arrested. Between the 12th July and 23rd July interviews in jail took place between the Plaintiff and Santosh as appears from the history ticket on the 15th, 19th, 21st and 22nd July. There was also, according to the evidence of the Plaintiff and Santosh, the second meeting in jail on the 22nd July, late in the afternoon.

In his retractation, dated the 7th September 1908, Santosh states "My father while visiting me in jail in the afternoon previous to the day of his arrest (that is the 22nd July) told me, if I did not turn an approver, then the Magistrate would cause him to be arrested. He also showed me a slip that the Magistrate had given him "

The evidence also satisfies me that during the period between the 9th and 22nd of July, there were frequent visits by the Moulvi and Lal Mohun to the Plaintiff's house and that pressure was brought to bear on the Plaintiff to induce him to get Santosh to confess and as time went on, this pressure passed from inducement and persuasion into threats.

The evidence on the part of the Plaintiff is that some of these visits took place when Romesh Bose, the Plan-maker, a Government servant, was present making a plan of the Plaintiff's house for the purpose of being used in the criminal case. The Plan-maker has not been called by the Defendants as a witness.

The story as to the Moulvi explaining the Explosive Substances Act to the Plaintiff and his wife is I think true.

There is also substantial corroboration of the story told by the Plaintiff and his witnesses in the statement of Ashutosh of the 18th August 1908 sent to the Government on the 27th August. Counsel for the Defendants has suggested that this statement is the invention of the Bar at Midnapore. This suggestion seems to me to be quite impossible having regard to the date and other circumstances relating to the document. The document was, I think, clearly a genuine statement of Ashutosh's. As against this evidence given on behalf of the Plaintiff, there is the case set up by the written statements that the Plaintiff was arrested as an accessory which has been wholly abandoned and the case attempted to be made at the trial that Mr. Weston determined to arrest the Plaintiff as soon as he knew the dangerous character of the article found at the Plaintiff's house, which has wholly failed.

I must now take shortly the events subsequent to the Plaintiff's arrest on the 23rd July.

The history ticket of the Plaintiff states that on his entry to the jail "health-bad old age"; across the corner of the history ticket I find written "to be strictly segregated." The evidence shows that the Plaintiff was kept in solitary confinement during the whole time he was in jail. The Plaintiff who was suffering from diabetes with accompanying ailments might surely have been let out on bail. His applications for bail, however, were opposed, but each of the Defendants had denied that he had anything to do with the opposition to them.

The treatment of the Plaintiff in jail was in clear breach of the provisions of the law. The rules contained in what is known as the Jail Code are rules framed by the Local Government under the powers contained in the Prisons Act and subsequently sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council. Rules when so framed and approved have the same force as the Statute and it is not open to any person to set aside the provisions of such Rules.

Then who was responsible for the order on the Plaintiff's history ticket "to be strictly segregated?"

It must be either Mr. Weston, Mr. Nelson, or Major Weinman. All three of them deny any knowledge of this order. Accordingly I am unable to decide by whose authority the Plaintiff was kept in solitary confinement, a result which cannot be considered satisfactory. On the 29th of July, the Moulvi and Lal Mohun again visited Santosh in his cell.

Now what were the Police doing in the cell of Santosh again on the morning of the 29th of July?

There can be little doubt, to my mind, that they had come to see the effect of the father's arrest on the son. The Plaintiff was sent for and taken to Santosh's cell. There the Police appealed to the higher feelings of Santosh to save his father in his old age and to make a confession. But the Plaintiff said that they must have some time to think the matter over.

Later in the day the Police returned to Santosh's cell representing that his father had consented to his making a statement and took him to Mr. Weston's house.

Mr. Weston says he examined Santosh and finding that he was willing to make a confession, he sent for Mr. Nelson to record the confession. Mr. Weston admits that he was present at the recording of the confession and that he did put some questions to Santosh from papers he had in his possession and suggested other questions to Mr. Nelson.

This course cannot be justified at all. Mr. Weston obviously had no right to be present at the recording of the confession. Then much has been made of the preliminary questions put by Mr. Nelson to Santosh which are as follows :—

"Do you know who I am?"

"Yes."

"Any statement you make will be of your own free will. You are under no compulsion I understand." It has been much argued as to whether the words "I understand" are an answer to the questions that go before or form part of the previous sentence. I think obviously they are not an answer. First "I understand" is not an answer to the question "You are under no compulsion." Then in the whole of the confession I cannot find that Mr. Nelson has omitted to write a full stop in any other place where one ought to appear. It seems to me clear that Mr. Nelson did not properly comply with the provisions of sec. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. Nelson says that he never heard the police-officers had been visiting Santosh in jail. Probably if he had known this he would have been more careful to comply with the provisions of sec. 164. Now Santosh had come to confess how he had come into possession of a bomb. Instead of doing this he commences to relate his history as from October or November 1907.

Then we have the extraordinary coincidence that in Ex. 56 the name of a man said to be present at some of the meetings alleged to have been held is given as Gosto Behary De, his real name is in fact Gosto Behary Chandra. The name of this man as given in Santosh's confession in two places was originally Gosto Behary De. The word "De" being subsequently struck out and the word "Chandra" written in place thereof.

Moreover in Ex. G this man's name is written "Gosto Behary Chandra (Dey?)."

Then again in the confession Santosh states that he attended a meeting on the 30th June. This is also the date given of this meeting in Ex. 56. According to the Defendants, subsequent enquiries show that this meeting was held on the 29th of June.

Then, again, the first four names mentioned in the report of the 30th June in Ex. 56 are given in exactly the same order as in the confession. These may be coincidences only, but they are, to say the least of it, peculiar.

Then the following expression "The Raja of Narajole gave Rs. 2 per month," "Satyendra Nath Bose gave nothing," "No bomb was produced," "I think I could identify him," "I can't remember the date," show clearly that portions of the confession which purport to have been given by Santosh in a narrative form must in fact have been given by him in answers to questions put to him.

There can be no doubt to my mind that this confession was not recorded in the manner required by sec. 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which requires every question put and every answer given to be recorded. But whilst I say this I altogether disbelieve the suggestion that Mr. Weston and Mr. Nelson or either of them put to Santosh questions which they knew to be untrue. The truth of the matter is, I think, that Mr. Weston thought that with a little judicious examination Santosh might make a full disclosure with regard to a considerable portion of the conspiracy. Mr. Weston did not, however, bear in mind the visits of the Police to Santosh and the arrest of the Plaintiff.

Although I think Mr. Weston's conduct as to the confession of Santosh was improper and irregular, I can see no ground for suggesting that Mr. Weston put to Santosh questions and received answers which he knew to be untrue.

The 7th of August was the day fixed for the production of the Plaintiff and Santosh before Mr. Nelson. It is admitted that neither of them were so produced. This was in manifest breach of the provisions of sec. 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. Norton admitted that if Mr. Weston knew of this it would be his duty as District Magistrate to call Mr. Nelson's attention to the fact. I find from a letter, dated the 9th August (Ex. 33), which Santosh wrote to Mr. Weston, the following:—"The date of appearance of the Petitioner and his father was fixed on the 7th instant, but they were not brought to Court on that day. If the Petitioner's old father be detained here any longer period, he may be deprived of his life."

It would appear therefore that Mr. Weston did know that the Plaintiff and his son were not being produced before Mr. Nelson in the manner provided by law.

On the 5th of August, Mr. Nelson passed an order remanding Surendra Nath Mukerjee to Police custody for seven days but Suren-dra owing to ill-health could not be handed over to the Police until the 7th August when he was handed over, by the jail authorities to Lal Mohun.

From the 7th August to the 12th August Surendra was kept at the Midnapore Thanah and during such period he says he was tortured by the Police.

Under sec. 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code before a Magistrate remands an accused person to Police custody the accused must be produced before him, for the section says "The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded "

The section also requires that a Magistrate remanding an accused person to Police custody shall record his reasons for doing so. Mr. Nelson did not observe any of these provisions.

Moreover, it is provided by the Bengal Police Code, Chap XVI, pp 374-388, that an application for remand to Police custody under sec. 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be made personally by the Chief Police Officer present to the Chief Magisterial Officer present, that is to say, at the head-quarters of a district (as Midnapore is), by the Superintendent of Police to the District Magistrate unless this is impossible owing to the absence of one of the officers concerned or through some other exceptional cause.

Surendra's story is that between the 7th and 12th August he spent most of his time at the Sub-Inspector's quarters where he was ill-treated by Lal Mohun and other police-officers.

Further that on the 11th August the ill treatment was so severe that after it he was in a state of collapse and that Dr. Bankim Chunder Ghose was sent for by the Police to attend him.

It is common ground between the parties that on one occasion while Surendra was in

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Police custody he was in urgent need of medical aid. The Moulvi and Lal Mohun fixed this date as the 31st July the day of Surendra's arrest when they saw Surendra was suffering from an attack of simple fever and they sent a constable to find the Assistant Surgeon, but not finding him at home he brought Dr. Bankim Chunder Ghose. Dr. Bankim's fees are stated by Lal Mohun to have been paid out of the Secret Service Fund and that a receipt which he gave for his fees was handed to Mr. Cornish. Mr. Cornish was not asked anything about this receipt.

Mr. Norton stated it was probable that Surendra did suffer ill-treatment of some sort from subordinate police-officers during this lengthened detention at the Thanah in Police custody but he denies that Surendra was ill-treated by Lal Mohun or the Moulvi. Surendra's statement that he was tortured whilst in Police custody must, of course, be taken with some reserve and can only be accepted if it is either corroborated or fits in with the probabilities of the case.

The first point to decide is when did Dr. Bankim Chunder Ghose attend Surendra?

Now Dr. Bankim Chunder Ghose has produced two of his books in support of his statement, namely, a Prescription Book and a Dispensary Book. He had two other sets of books which he has not produced. In the Prescription Book which he has produced I find an entry of the 31st of July of a prescription for Surendra Nath Mukerjee. Counsel for the Plaintiff suggested that as the 31st of July was the last day of the month there was a blank space where a prescription might be written in. This standing alone would obviously not be sufficient. But when one takes the entries of the next day the manner in which the book has been altered is apparent. In fact Mr. Norton admits that the entry is a suspicious one. This entry on the 1st of August is for quinine pills which it is suggested were for Surendra on the morning of the 1st of August.

But the merest glance at the name at the heading of the prescription shows that it was originally "For Upendro," then that a capital "S" has been squeezed in between the "for" and "Upendro." Then to the "p" in Upendro has been added a slanting stroke converting it into a capital "R", but with half of the "R" below the line. Dr. Bankim Chunder Ghose admits that the stroke which converts the "p" into an "r" in Upendro is written in different ink to the rest of the letter. The net result of the alterations to the word "Upendro" is that it is altered into "Surendro," the first three letters "Sur" being all capitals, half of the "r" being below the line.

Then the word Upendro so altered is penned through and Dr. Bankim writes above it Surendro Nath Mukerjee A. M. B. case (accused Midnapore Bomb Case).

Then I come to the Dispensary Book.

Now if you take the entries in the Dispensary Book for the 30th and 31st July and 1st August as originally written, that is omitting the entry of the alleged prescription for Surendra on 31st July and subject to the alteration of the name of the person for whom the quinine pills were prescribed on the 1st of August, the book before the alterations were made was in correct order. On the pages which contain the entries for 31st July I find the number of every prescription has been altered the alleged prescription for Surendro being written last on the page.

If one turns back to the page on which the prescriptions for the 30th of July are entered one finds that the last prescription entered on the 30th of July bears the same number as the altered number of the first prescription of the 31st July.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Then on the page which contains the entries for the prescriptions of the 1st of August, I find the name of the person for whom the quinine pills were prescribed is altered.

But a portion of the first letter of the name that was originally written is visible and the Court Interpreter informs me that the portion visible appears to be the tail of a capital Bengali "U," and there can be little doubt that the word written originally was "Upendro."

Why should these entries be altered in this manner unless it is to support the case that Dr Bankim attended Surendra on the 31st July? It seems to me quite clear that Dr. Bankim's books have been altered for this purpose

When once one comes to the conclusion that Dr. Bankim attended Surendra on some day other than the 31st July, one gets rid of the story set up by the Moulvi and Lal Mohun.

Then it has been suggested that even if Mr. Bankim did not attend Surendra on the 31st of July yet he may have attended him on some other date for fever. That suggestion it is not possible to accept, the Defendants having put forward a definite case that Surendra was treated by Dr. Bankim for fever on the 31st July. Accordingly I am of opinion that Surendra was attended by Dr. Bankim on the 11th August

Now, why should Dr. Bankim be sent to treat Surendra on the 11th August? Surendra's story is that since he had been in Police custody from the 7th August, he had been subjected to ill-treatment to try and induce him to confess, and on that day Lal Mohun had so ill-used him that he lost control over himself and having been compelled to evacuate on the floor he lay in a state of collapse. That Dr. Bankim was hurriedly sent for to come and attend him and that a Mehter was sent for from the Municipal Office to clean the place and a blanket that had got soiled. *

I have looked at certain works on Medical Jurisprudence in order to see if a kick in the stomach would produce the effect that Surendra has stated it produced on him. Apparently the shock to the nerve centre might produce the effect which Surendra has stated. But what has weighed with me more than this is that the Defendants called two medical men, Major Weinman and Dr Bankim Chunder Ghose, as witnesses. No questions were put to them that assuming that Surendra was kicked in the manner he has stated the kick could not have had the effects Surendra has related.

Why then are the Moulvi and Lal Mohun so anxious to fix the date of Dr. Bankim's attendance on Surendra as the 31st July which is clearly not the true date?

It seems to me there can be no other reason for this except that on the date that Dr. Bankim did attend Surendra, something had happened to Surendra which they are anxious to conceal. This being so, I think, one can reasonably accept the evidence of Surendra corroborated by Bholanath, Ramtullah and Sanyasi as to the main incidents as to what happened on that day.

It is only fair to Mr. Weston, however, to state that I am satisfied that he knew nothing about the treatment of Surendra at the Thanah.

On the 12th August, Lal Mohun started for Salboni taking Surendra with him. He returned to Midnapore on the 13th August; the train arriving at Midnapore Railway Station at 1-30.

According to Ashutosh's evidence, from the 24th July he was having frequent interviews with the Moulvi. He also from time to time saw Mr. Weston. It is not, however, necessary to go into this portion of the evidence, although some interviews are admitted, or as to whether during this period attempts were being made to get Ashutosh to be a witness in the Conspiracy case. It will be sufficient to start with the incidents of the 13th of August. But before considering the incidents of the 13th August I ought to state that Mr. Weston saw the Plaintiff in jail on the 5th August. Mr. Weston says the only complaint the Plaintiff made to him was that the jail officials had taken away his bed-stead. Mr. Weston says that upon enquiring of the jail officials why this had been done he was told that they were afraid that the Plaintiff would commit suicide by standing the bed-stead on its end and then hanging himself to it. It does not seem to have occurred to Mr. Weston to question the jail officials as to what sort of treatment the Plaintiff had been subjected to that they should be afraid he would commit suicide. Mr. Weston ordered the Plaintiff's bed stead to be restored.

Then again, on the 11th August, it is agreed on both sides that Santosh in answer to his letter of the 9th August (Ex 68) had a further interview with Mr. Weston. Mr. Weston says that Santosh at that interview wished to add two further names to his confession. Santosh says he sought the interview in order to ask Mr. Weston to release his father. Ex 68 shows clearly that this was the thought uppermost in Santosh's mind. Then we come to the incidents on the 13th August. It is agreed that on the afternoon of that day both Santosh and Ashutosh saw Mr. Weston. The story of the Defendants is as follows :—

That in the afternoon—the Moulvi fixes the time about 3 o'clock—whilst the Moulvi and Lal Mohun were driving with Santosh from the jail to the Thanah, having taken him into Police custody for three days, Ashutosh ran up to the carriage when they were near to Mr. Weston's compound and asked to be allowed to speak to his brother Santosh. The police officers said they could not allow this without the consent of the Magistrate. Thereupon they drove into Mr. Weston's compound and they all saw Mr. Weston who said Ashutosh might have an interview with Santosh at the Thanah. Mr. Weston further said that if Ashutosh wished to make a statement the police-officers might record it but he warned Ashutosh that he could not expect a pardon if he made a statement.

The improbability of the police-officers disturbing Mr. Weston in the afternoon to ask if Santosh and Ashutosh might have an interview may be left out of account for this story is conclusively proved to be untrue. Lal Mohun returned to Midnapore with Surendra on the 13th August by the train reaching Midnapore at 1-30. The jail gate-register shows that Santosh on the 13th August left the jail at 1-25. At Midnapore the evidence shows that they keep standard time. It was therefore impossible for Lal Mohun to be driving with Santosh to Mr. Weston's house as stated.

Ashutosh's evidence, on the other hand, is as follows :—

That he had been ordered to be at Mr. Weston's house on the morning of the 13th August and that he went there as directed but was told that Mr. Weston was sleeping and that he was to come back later. That he in accordance with this order went back later to Mr. Weston's and after a time the Moulvi arrived in a carriage bringing Santosh with him but that Lal Mohun was not there. That they went in and saw Mr. Weston and that Lal Mohun arrived subsequently. That it was then decided to take Santosh into Police custody for three days and to confront Santosh, Ashutosh and Surendra together.

Santosh's jail history ticket supports this view. There are two entries on the history ticket for the 13th August, the first: "Went to see the Magistrate," the second: "Made over to Police custody for three days."

Surendra, in the meantime, who had been left by Lal Mohun at the Police office had been sent back to jail. He was brought back from jail to the Thanah. On the 13th and 14th August, Santosh, Ashutosh and Surendra and Jotindra Sen (Ashutosh's nephew) were tutored at the Thanah and Surendra persuaded to make a confession.

On the morning of the 15th August Ashutosh and Surendra were taken to Mr. Weston's house. There is a conflict on the evidence as to whether Mr. Weston saw Ashutosh on the morning of the 15th August. Mr. Weston says he did not. All that happened he says was that he was shown a statement of Ashutosh's which he thought concealed more than it stated and therefore he told Lal Mohun to tell Ashutosh to go away. Lal Mohun says that Ashutosh was standing near a Mahomedan shrine in Mr. Weston's compound about 80 or 100 yards from the house and he went and gave Mr. Weston's message. Then Ashutosh left the premises. Ashutosh's story, on the other hand, is that he saw Mr. Weston and he asked Mr. Weston if his father would be released if he made the statement. Mr. Weston stated, that did not rest with him, thereupon Ashutosh said he declined to make the statement until he had seen his father. Mr. Weston gave him an order to see his father and he left Mr. Weston's house. The original of Ashutosh's statement that he made to Lal Mohun is missing. The document purporting to be a copy, Ashutosh says, is not in fact a copy. Whether that be so or not it is impossible to say. It is certainly a most extraordinary fact that so many original documents are not forthcoming.

Ashutosh's evidence as to what happened at Mr. Weston's house on the morning of the 15th August is, I think, correct and is substantially corroborated by documentary evidence.

First, there is Lal Mohun's case-diary of the 15th August "Asu Das brother of Santosh at first wanted to make a statement before the Magistrate regarding his knowledge in the affairs and then took time to consider over the matter." This certainly suggests that Ashutosh saw Mr. Weston on that morning.

Secondly, there is Ex. 45 which is an application by Ashutosh of the 15th August to be allowed to see his father which was allowed by Mr. Weston on the same date.

Ashutosh's evidence is that he wrote this on the verandah of Mr. Weston's house on the morning of the 15th August.

Now this application of Ashutosh's differs from all the other applications that he presented to Mr. Weston as it is written in the vernacular. All his other petitions to Mr. Weston were written for him in English by a dismissed post-master.

This document shows that the story about Ashutosh not getting within 80 or 100 yards from Mr. Weston's house is not true. Ashutosh's evidence as to what happened on the morning of the 15th August is, I am satisfied, true and is confirmed by his statement of the 16th August (sent to the Government on the 27th August) Ex. F.

Then Mr. Weston proceeded to deal with Surendra. He sent for Babu Surendra Nath Chakrabarti, Deputy Magistrate, to record Surendra's confession.

Surendra's confession was recorded in Mr. Nelson's house by the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Nelson being present most of the time. If Santosh's confession suggests that portions of it were not given in a narrative form but in answer to questions, Surendra's confession does so with far greater force. In fact the Deputy Magistrate who recorded it stated in his evidence before me that any one reading the confession would probably think that it had been recorded in answer to questions put to Surendra. The Deputy Magistrate also states that he was not aware that Surendra was coming out of a long period of Police custody which was obviously a material fact for the recording officer to know.

Now the first matter that strikes one, on looking at the confession and the statement of Surendra recorded by Lal Mohun which was with the Deputy Magistrate and Mr. Nelson at the time when the confession was recorded, is a most extraordinary coincidence. Lal Mohun in writing the word "Das" in English writes the letter "a" open and the letter "S" he forms in a peculiar manner with a tail so that any person unacquainted with his writing would think the word written was "Dey." Then there is a very extraordinary fact that in two places in the confession of Surendra which was recorded in Bengalee the word originally recorded was "Dey" instead of "Das." This was subsequently altered into "Das." Surendra says this was done at Mr. Weston's house later. Space forbids more than a few instances being given of Surendra's confession which must have been recorded in answer to questions put to him.

First, near the beginning where Surendra is purporting to speak of the Basanta Malati Akra: "The Raja of Narajole used to pay a monthly subscription of Rs. 2 for that Akra. I don't exactly remember the name of the Raja of Narajole."

Considerably later in the confession we find the following statement:—

"Before the last Ulla Rath in the month of Asar (I do not remember the date and the day) the Raja of Narajole whose name is Raja Narendra Lal Khan came to Jamini Mullick's house."

Can any one doubt that in the first part of the confession a question was put to Surendra as to what was the name of the Raja of Narajole and that he answered "I don't exactly remember," and on the second occasion Surendra was asked if the name of Raja of Narajole was Raja Narendra Lal Khan? Then we come to the part of the confession as to the meeting said to have been held at the Basanta Malati Akra.

The confession as to this is as follows:—

"That meeting was held at about 8 P.M. There was no special arrangement for sitting. There was only one bench. There was no bed."

I cannot doubt that questions were put to Surendra as to the seating arrangements at that meeting. Moreover we have a very significant fact that in Ex. G which was drawn up by Asadulla to be used by the informer Rakhal for the purpose of getting up his evidence there is this statement with regard to the meeting at the Basanta Malati Akra. "There was a bench for sitting."

Next, one other statement as to the meeting at the Basanta Malati Akra:

"I do not remember what other things were said in that meeting by what other persons." Then as to the meeting said to have been held at the Rasmancha of the Mullicks':

"I don't exactly remember who were present at that meeting. Jyoti Das, Jamini Mullick and Moti Babu were there. Hem Chandra, Abhoy Chandra Kundu too were present. It might be 25 or 30 persons in all. I can say if names are mentioned to me.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Q.—(Suggested by Mr. Nelson, struck out) Was Jogendra Mullick there?

A.—Yes. Jogendra, Gobinda Pal, Hari Kristo Patal, Rakhal Chandra Pal, Ashutosh Kundu, Ashutosh Das (originally written Dey) all these persons were there. . . . I don't remember what other speeches were made."

Then at the meeting at the house of Kamini prostitute:

"I don't remember who else made speeches."

Then take the meeting at the Raja of Mahisadal's house:

"The date I cannot exactly remember I cannot say who live at the Mahisadal Raja's house and whether those who live there were present at the meeting."

Then, lastly, one further example. The confession originally recorded gave the name of "Honorary Magistrate Abinash Chandra Dutt." Later in the confession we find "whether Abinash's title is Mitter or anything else I do not know." Whereupon the former part of the confession "Honorary Magistrate Abinash Chandra Dutt" is altered to "Abinash Babu."

In my opinion there can be no doubt but that by far the greater portion of this confession was obtained from Surendra by means of questions put to him and that the confession was recorded in a form in manifest breach of the plain provision of the law which according to the Deputy Magistrate's own statement were well-known to him. I do not, however, believe that Mr. Nelson and the Deputy Magistrate knew that the confession that Surendra was making was untrue.

The Deputy Magistrate admits that if he knew Surendra was coming out of Police custody he would be much more careful. It is unfortunate that that the Deputy Magistrate was not so told.

On the 15th August under the permission given by Ex. 75 Ashutosh saw his father in jail. Ashutosh informed his father what had taken place and his father advised him to go to the Bar Library and see the pleaders. The same afternoon Ashutosh went to the Bar Library and related his story how his father had come to be arrested and the attempts made to get him to be a witness.

A deputation accompanied by Ashutosh waited on Mr. Bradley Birt, the Additional District Magistrate, but Mr. Bradley Birt told him that he could not interfere and that they must go to Mr. Weston. The deputation said that Mr. Weston was absolutely in the hands of the Police. On the 16th August a number of gentlemen of Midnapore wrote to Mr. K. B. Dutt who was then the Chairman of the Midnapore Municipality requesting him to acquaint the Lieutenant Governor with the existing state of affairs. Pursuant to this requisition Mr. Dutt telegraphed to the Chief Secretary on the 16th August, the telegram (Ex N) in which it is stated 'We are satisfied on materials which we desire to place before the Government that evidence implicating respectable and absolutely innocent persons is being fabricated.' On the 27th August Mr. Dutt forwarded to the Government two statements of Ashutosh dated respectively the 16th and 18th August, a statement of Jotindra Nath Sen (the Plaintiff's grandson) and also a statement of Upendra Nath Mukerjee (the brother of Surendra Nath Mukerjee).

Counsel for the Defendants suggest that these statements were invented by the Bar at Midnapore. That seems to be quite an impossible theory. I think the statements are genuine and on the whole they contain a substantially accurate account of what had happened.

The 15th August had been fixed as the date on which the persons arrested on the 31st July should be produced before Mr. Nelson. None of them were so produced.

On the 21st August Santosh was produced before Mr. Nelson but not in open Court but in some other room at the Court premises. This again was in direct contravention of the provisions of the law.

Sec. 352 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts "the place in which any Criminal Court is held for the purposes of enquiring into or trying any offence shall be deemed an open Court to which the public generally may have access so far as the same can conveniently contain them."

The Plaintiff says that on the 21st August he was not taken out of jail at all. I think he is right in this but it matters little whether he was or was not.

The production of Santosh but not in open Court on the 21st August seems to suggest that his non-production on the 7th August was done of a deliberate and set purpose.

On the 21st August two petitions for bail were filed on behalf of Santosh and the Plaintiff (Ex. LXXXVI in No. 1 and Ex. K. K. K. in No. 1). The petition of Santosh stated that he was innocent. The Plaintiff's petition stated in paragraph 2 "The petitioner's said son was pressed from the very beginning to make a confession but he denied all knowledge of the bomb Para. 3. That after the arrest of Santosh Chandra Das your petitioner was pressed by 'various authorities' to induce his son to make a confession which not being done your petitioner was arrested on the 23rd July 1908 and was remanded to kajal on the very day where he is rotting since then."

This petition sets out clearly the cause of the Plaintiff's arrest, viz., his failure to induce Santosh to make a confession. The only thing that is not stated specifically is who were the "various authorities" that caused the Plaintiff to be arrested.

By the 21st August it had been found out that the confessions of Santosh and Surendra contained mistakes which did not fit in with the reports of the informer. According to Lal Mohun, on the 21st August he went to the Police office at the Court and questioned Santosh as to his confession. Santosh according to Lal Mohun immediately cleared up all difficulties, corrected the dates and brought the incident of the 7th July into line with the alleged reports of the informer. Lal Mohun says that he recorded this additional statement of Santosh. Santosh says he gave no such statement. I accept Santosh's statement. The additional statement if true was one of considerable value. No statement of Santosh recorded by Lal Mohun could be used in evidence. There was a Magistrate in the building, and it is inconceivable, if Santosh did make this statement, that Lal Mohun would not at once have taken him before a Magistrate and had his statement recorded.

Surendra in his confession had come to grief more, because he had given, as being present at the meeting at the Busanti Malati Akra, Santosh who was then in Ranchi and Satyendra Nath Bose who was then in jail.

Lal Mohun says he went to the jail on the 21st August and saw Surendra who immediately corrected the errors in his confession. Surendra says he did nothing of the sort. I accept Surendra's statement. I am satisfied if he had made this important correction he would have been taken before a Magistrate and the alteration would have been recorded.

On the 28th of August, as I have already stated, the third batch was arrested. It is said that it was intended to arrest Ashutosh on that day but this could not be done as he was absconding.

I am satisfied that Ashutosh was not absconding. He was present in Court on the 31st of August. It is now said that the Plaintiff's house was again searched on the 28th of August by Asadulla.

Not a single question as to this search was put to the Plaintiff or any of his witnesses.

This search I am satisfied never took place and the return to the warrant by Asadulla is not genuine.

The warrant (Ex. CCXXV in No. 1) purports to show from the return on the back of it that the search took place in the presence of one witness, Abdulla, only. Sec. 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that there shall be at least two witnesses to a search.

Asadulla now says that there were two other witnesses—a doctor with leprosy on his hands and a blacksmith—neither of whose names does he recollect.

I reject Asadulla's evidence. The search I am satisfied never took place. Then on the 31st of August the Plaintiff, Santosh, Surendra and others were produced before Mr. Nelson in Court.

Mr. P. K. Bose, a Barrister, who is described in the list of Moderates and Extremists (Ex. LXXX) as an Extremist and supporter of all the Akras, appeared for the Crown. The first thing that occurred in Court on that day was that Mr. Keays applied for bail on behalf of the Raja of Narajole.

Then Mr. Dutt applied for leave of the Court to hand over to the Plaintiff, Santosh and Surendra three petitions to sign if they desired. It appears that Mr. Dutt said they were important petitions. (See evidence of P. K. Bose on behalf of the Defendants).

The petition handed to the Plaintiff was according to Lal Mohun "a long petition" and when he had read a page or two of it he got his son Santosh to read the rest of it to him. The three petitions were then signed and handed back to Mr. Dutt. So far there is not much controversy on the evidence on this point.

The Court then adjourned for lunch. Lal Mohun's evidence is that he spent the luncheon interval in conversation with a connection of his wife who had come down to the Court to see him. This I do not believe. The evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff is that the Police asked Santosh and Surendra during the adjournment of the Court what the petitions they had signed were and they said they were petitions for bail.

The evidence also is that the police-officers told the Plaintiff that he was going to be released but as he had signed a petition he could not be released unless he withdrew it. On the Court resuming after the adjournment the Plaintiff asked for his petition back and struck his name out.

A petition (Ex. B) which is said to have been the petition signed by the Plaintiff is produced here. At first it was challenged by Counsel that this was not the petition on the ground that the petition signed by the Plaintiff on the 31st of August was a short petition. Lal Mohun's evidence put an end to this suggestion for he says the Plaintiff's petition was a long petition. Ex. B consists of a petition written on five and half sheets of foolscap the writing being on one side of the paper only, anything much shorter than this could hardly be described as a "long petition."

The evidence satisfies me that Ex. B was the petition signed by the Plaintiff on the 31st August.

To return to what happened in Court on the 31st August after the midday ad-jourment. Lal Mohun first gave some formal evidence and the case was withdrawn against the Plaintiff and two others.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Then Mr. K. B. Dutt made an application for bail for Santosh and Surendra and some other of the accused. Mr. Nelson's evidence is that it is the usual practice for applications for bail to be founded on petitions.

So in the usual course the application for bail on behalf of Santosh and Surendra would be supported by petitions.

Santosh's petition (Ex. 43) withdrew his confession and asked for an opportunity to make a statement which would disclose the circumstances under which he was by threat, inducement and persuasion compelled to make his confession. Surendra's petition (Ex. 44) did not formally withdraw his confessions but he asked that an opportunity should be given him of making a statement in Court.

Apparently, while Mr. Dutt was making his application, Mr. Nelson was not paying great attention to it for the evidence shows that he was writing orders on other petitions. Mr. Nelson rejected the application for bail and immediately afterwards the case was adjourned, the record being immediately carried away by the Court Inspector, Rash Behary Sen, who is a police-officer who conducts prosecutions in the Court.

The Court Inspector at that time had charge of the record in the case. He was, as I have already said, cited as a witness by the Defendants in this case but was not called. Presumably, therefore, his evidence on this point, if he had been called, would not have supported the Defendants' case.

The question is, were these two petitions put in on the 31st August or were they, as Counsel for the Defendants says, "smuggled into the record."

According to Mr. Norton, Mr. Dutt deliberately "cheated and defrauded the Court" on that day.

Mr. Cornish's evidence on this matter is as follows :—

"On the 31st August I heard of applications being signed by Santosh, Surendra and Peari. I think the Moulvi told me this before I went to the Club. He told me some petitions had been signed and put in. I think he said, but I can't remember, that they had been surreptitiously filed He must have told me what the petitions were. He told me I think that they were petitions of retractation of Santosh and Surendra. To the best of my belief I went and reported the matter to Mr. Weston. Mr. Weston wrote to Mr. Nelson and asked him if these petitions had been filed. Mr. Nelson so far as I remember knew nothing of them. When Mr. Nelson looked he found that they were with the record. This was on the 31st August. The Moulvi told Mr. Weston that the petitions were retractations."

If Mr. Cornish's evidence be accepted there can be no doubt that the Defendants knew about these petitions being filed and that they were petitions of retractations, on the 31st August.

The Moulvi's evidence now is that he was in Court for only a few minutes on the 31st of August. But before the Committing Magistrate, on the 8th September 1908, he said "I was in Court on the 31st (i.e., the 31st August). I did not hear of any applications to retract confessions. I do not know up to now if any such petitions were filed. I had not heard that two such petitions were filed and disappeared from the record. I have not heard of the existence of such petitions and their disappearance.

To Court. I have heard of some petitions being smuggled into the record."

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

No reliance can be placed upon the evidence of the Moulvi.

Then the evidence of Lal Mohun is that he saw Santosh and Surendra sign the two petitions in Court on the 31st August but they were not filed in Court on that day. At the rising of the Court he says he glanced through the record but could find no petitions filed on behalf of Santosh and Surendra. He then says he went and informed Mr. Weston that Santosh and Surendra had signed but had not filed two petitions.

This, however, does not agree with Lal Mohun's evidence at Sessions where he said "Bail petitions were made for all the accused on the 31st August. They were presented in my presence.

Q. The petition for bail and the petition for retraction of confession is the same identical petition.

A. I know now. I did not know at the that time."

Lal Mohun at the Sessions evidently meant the Court to believe that petitions were filed on behalf of Santosh and Surendra on the 31st August but he thought they were petitions for bail.

Then, again, the account given by Mr. Weston here is substantially different from the account he gave at the Sessions.

At Sessions, Mr. Weston said "I had the petitions of retraction in my house because I wanted to see them. I am in the habit of seeing records; it is part of my duty. I sent for them from Court. These were then in a flat file with the record, not part of the record. They came from the custody of the Court. I know there is a dispute as to what had become of them. They were underneath the record-forming no part of the record. I heard of their existence because applications were put in for copies of them before the trying Magistrate."

This is a different story to that which

Mr. Weston has told here. On the 1st September, an application was made to the Court for copies of the confessions and "also for copies of the petitions filed by Santosh and Surendra filed on the 31st August."

Mr. Nelson rejected the application for copies. In his order of the 2nd September he states "These petitions were certainly not brought to my notice during the hearing. A perusal of them shows that both Surendra and Santosh demanded to be examined that day" Mr. Nelson had been concerned in recording both Santosh and Surendra's confessions and one would have thought, as soon as he became aware of the petitions of Santosh and Surendra asking for an opportunity to make a statement to him, he would at once either have gone to the jail or have had Santosh and Surendra produced before him and given them the opportunity of making a statement to him

On the 2nd September Lal Mohun and Moulvi went to the jail and saw Santosh

The Moulvi says he did not go into the jail and see Santosh but he waited outside and that Lal Mohun only went in.

The entry in the case-diary of Lal Mohun for the 2nd September is as follows:—

"With Moulvi Mazharul Huq went to the jail and questioned Santosh Das about the petition alleged to have been signed by him on the 31st in Court of Joint-Magistrate, and he said that he signed it without reading its contents considering it to be a bail application." Why "alleged to have been signed," when Lal Mohun saw Santosh sign the petition in Court? Santosh's evidence is that the Moulvi and Lal Mohun came to him in jail and tried to get him to disclaim the petition of the 31st August. Santosh's story is, I think, far more probable.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

First of all, the police-officers on the 2nd of September did not go to question Surendra in jail, the reason apparently being that Santosh's petition formally withdrew his confession whilst Surendra did not do so but only stated that he wanted to make a statement to the Court.

Secondly, when Mr. Reid—Mr. Nelson having been transferred on the 2nd September—went to jail on the 3rd September and asked Santosh and Surendra about the two petitions, "they admit their signatures and that the petitions are theirs" (See Mr. Reid's order of the 3rd September). Santosh made no reservation on 3rd September that he thought he had signed the petition as a bail petition.

Mr. Reid's order on the 3rd September was "Orders will be passed thereon later." No orders were in fact ever passed on these two petitions. I cannot help thinking it would have been wiser that Mr. Reid on the 3rd of September had given Santosh and Surendra an opportunity of making a statement.

The conclusion I come to with regard to the two petitions of the 31st August is as follows:—First that the two petitions were without doubt filed in Court on that day, that Mr. Nelson was not attending to what was being said in Court but was writing orders on other petitions. That when Mr. Nelson was questioned about these petitions subsequently he did not know of their existence and therefore it was assumed that the two petitions had been improperly put into the record. I think that it was owing to this that the subsequent unpleasant events arose. The evidence doubtless is in some parts suspicious as to there being an attempt to suppress these two petitions, and if Mr. Cornish's evidence is accepted doubtless it goes far to establish the Plaintiff's contention. But on the whole after very careful consideration of the evidence I am of opinion that the whole incident arose out of a misunderstanding.

Then the Plaintiff's evidence is that on the night of the 31st August and again on the 1st September Lal Mohun came to his house to induce him to try and get Santosh to stick to his confession and that Ashutosh did write a letter to Santosh to this effect. But whether that be so or not, it is common ground that on the 2nd of September Lal Mohun and, as I hold, the Moulvi also interviewed Santosh in his cell with reference to his petition. Whatever instructions Mr. Weston may have given the police-officers, I am satisfied that on the 2nd September they tried to persuade Santosh to disclaim his petition of the 31st August. On the 4th September, Ashutosh was arrested and put up before Mr. Reid when he filed a petition for bail (Ex. L. L. L.). In this petition he stated that "the Police and the superior officer (Urdhatam Karmachari) have been for a long time trying to make your Petitioner a witness in the Bomb case." That the "superior officer" refers to Mr. Weston is not open to doubt. I have little doubt but that the arrest of Ashutosh was a move to try and get Santosh to stick to the confession which had required so much trouble to obtain and without which the Defendants knew the criminal case would probably go to pieces.

On the 3rd September Piyari Lall Ghosh, Vakil, wrote to the Superintendent of the jail asking for an interview with Santosh and Surendra and other prisoners. This interview was granted as regards the prisoners other than Santosh and Surendra. With regard to Santosh and Surendra Mr. Weston himself came to the jail with Lal Mohun on the 5th September and says he asked Santosh and Surendra if they wished to see a Vakil.

PRARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

Mr. Weston then says he entered an order in the visitors' book as follows:—"I visited the confessing prisoners with whom a Vakil had asked for an interview. As the prisoners expressed no wish to see him the Superintendent may inform the Vakil accordingly." Other attempts by legal advisers to see Santosh and Surendra proved also unsuccessful. There seems to have been a very heated interview between the Superintendent of the jail and Mr. Keays and Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri.

Major Weinman in his evidence before the Committing Magistrate said "when the Counsel asked me to see Santosh and Surendra, I asked why should I put it into his head that he could see them when he had already said he did not want to see a legal adviser." Major Weinman says however that he went and asked Santosh and Surendra, "Do you want to see a Vakil?" Major Weinman knows perfectly well that an European or any other Barrister is not described in the vernacular as a "Vakil."

The evidence satisfies me that every possible difficulty was being put in the way of Santosh and Surendra seeing their legal advisers.

The net result was that before being taken to Court on the 7th of September, Santosh had seen his pleader for three minutes that morning, and Surendra had not seen a legal adviser at all. It is suggested by Counsel for the Plaintiff that the pleader was allowed to see Santosh for three minutes on that morning, because Santosh had formally withdrawn his confession, and that special rules framed by Mr. Weston and Major Weinman as to interviews with confessing prisoners did not apply to Santosh.

On the 7th September the accused were taken to Court. Immediately Counsel applied for an interview with Santosh and Surendra. Mr. Reid allowed it "with certain precautions." Mr. Cornish was stationed outside the room in which the interview took place.

The interview appears to have lasted about two hours. Santosh and Surendra both signed petitions setting out the facts. They also—Santosh on the 7th September and Surendra on the 7th and 8th September—in the Court of Mr. Reid wrote out more detailed statements. These statements if true are of great importance. Now until the morning of the 7th September Santosh and Surendra had seen no one who could have tutored them to make these statements.

Counsel for the Defendants say, however, that the legal gentlemen at the interview allowed by Mr. Reid on the morning of the 7th September tutored Santosh and Surendra. This is pure suggestion and there is not a word of evidence to support it.

The legal gentlemen who saw Santosh and Surendra on the morning of the 7th September were Mr. Godfrey, now Assistant Government Advocate in Burmah, Mr. K. B. Dutt, Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri, Mr. A. C. Dutt, and probably also Mr. Keays, now Second Presidency Magistrate, and Mr. H. Mullick. There was also the pleader Piyari Lal Ghose present.

The Defendants try and get rid of the European barristers as tutoring counsel by saying they were present only a few minutes. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that these statements were not written by Santosh and Surendra without any outside assistance. I have already stated what happened in the Bomb case resulting finally in the acquittal of Santosh, Surendra and Jogjiban in this Court. A great deal of evidence has been given on behalf of the Plaintiff in this case as to the treatment of the under-trial prisoners in the Bomb case in jail. There can be little doubt that the treatment of many of the prisoners was contrary to the provisions of the Jail Code.

Major Weinman was a most unsatisfactory witness. He came here and gave evidence that the evidence he gave before the Committing Magistrate was incorrect or as he said it contained "many, many mistakes" I think his evidence before me contained many mistakes also and I am not satisfied that his evidence before the Committing Magistrate was incorrect.

I refrain from going into the treatment of the prisoners in jail not because I accept Major Weinman's or Mr. Brett's evidence but because I think that the evidence that has been given here is insufficient to establish that any of the Defendants are responsible for such treatment

To sum up.

From a careful appreciation of the evidence and having had an opportunity of seeing the witnesses on both sides in the witness-box I find the following facts :—

First, that the story given in the reports alleged to have been given by Rakhal Chandra Laha was not in fact a true story.

Secondly, that the Plaintiff has not proved that the bomb found in his house on the 8th July 1908 was placed there at the instigation of the Defendant, the Moulvi.

Thirdly, that the Defendant Weston believed that the story contained in the reports alleged to have been given by Rakhal Chandra Laha was true.

For this purpose it might be sufficient for me to say that the Defendant Weston's belief in the story would be sufficiently evidenced by the manner in which he had his house guarded by armed constables. But as in the course of this judgment I have had occasion to severely criticise the Defendant Weston's conduct, it is only fair to him that I should state that I am satisfied that not only did he believe in the story set out in the alleged reports of the informer but also that if he had suspected that the reports were untrue he would not have acted on them.

I apprehend that it is no part of a District Magistrate's duty to be an expert in criminal investigation. The Defendant Weston, however, does appear to have endeavoured to have taken some steps to try and satisfy himself that the story was true. But he had neither the time, for his charge at Midnapore seems to have been an extraordinarily heavy one, nor the experience to do this in a satisfactory manner.

In this respect there seems to have been an extraordinary blunder somewhere Mr. Cornish's evidence is that he was really ousted from any control over the police-officers engaged in the investigation of this case. His control, he says, was altogether nominal and that he understood that the police-officers were working under the control of the Criminal Investigation Department. Mr. Plowden, the Deputy Inspector-General, having control of the Criminal Investigation Department, says that his Department had nothing to do with the investigation into the Bomb Conspiracy case at all except that occasionally he was asked for and gave advice. The result was that the Defendants, the Moulvi and Lal Mohun, were under the control of no superior police-officer. Whether Mr. Cornish's view is correct or not, it is not necessary for me to state. There can be little doubt that Mr. Cornish had not a strong belief in the story related in the reports—nay more, he stated in his evidence that when the bomb was found in the record room of the Dutts on the 31st July, he suspected that the Police had put it there. It does not appear that he communicated this suspicion to the Defendant Weston.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

I think that the Defendant Weston was misled as to the truth of the reports by the other two Defendants.

Fourthly, I find that the Defendants, the Moulvi and Lal Mohun, did not believe in the story set out in the alleged reports of the informer.

This I infer from the procuring and attempting to procure false evidence, the tutoring of confessing prisoners and others by these two Defendants.

Doubtless it does not follow as a matter of necessity that because these two Defendants did these things that they know that the story was not true. But when evidence has been given establishing these facts it raises a strong presumptive case against these two Defendants which if they fail to displace is in my opinion sufficient proof of their not believing in the story.

Fifthly, I find that the reason of the Plaintiff's arrest was to put pressure on his son Santosh to confess and not in the belief nor with a reasonable or other suspicion that the Plaintiff had anything to do with the bomb found in his house nor on the ground that the Plaintiff was the owner of the house in which the bomb was found. I also find that prior to the arrest of the Plaintiff, each of the Defendants, at first by advice and persuasion and then by threats, tried to induce the Plaintiff to get his son Santosh to make a confession and on his failure to induce Santosh to confess the Defendants caused the Plaintiff to be arrested.

The evidence to my mind establishes conclusively that the three Defendants were working together in concert for a common object. The motive of the Defendant, Mr. Weston, for joining the conspiracy may be very different from that of the two other Defendants. But the law does not permit of a man being arrested in order to put pressure on his son to confess, even if the person causing the arrest believes that by so doing he will get evidence that will lead to the conviction of persons engaged in a huge conspiracy.

I disbelieve altogether the suggestions of a corrupt motive that have been made against the Defendant Weston.

The story of the sale of his motor car to Mahisadal Raj has been satisfactorily explained by him, although it may not have been very discreet of him to sell it to the Raj at the time the Dewan was cited as a witness for the defence.

I must now deal shortly with the points of law that have been raised by Counsel. First, it is said that the standard of proof in a case like the present is the same as if the Defendants were being tried for a criminal offence. Doubtless the English textbook writers are not agreed on this point. Such eminent writers as Taylor and Stephen support the view that the standard of proof is in a case like the present such as would be required in a criminal case. The tendency, however, of the authorities in England appears to me to be the other way.

However, in India the law of evidence is modified. The Act defines when a fact is said to be proved although, of course, in a case like the present due regard must be had to the presumption of innocence. This matter is, however, not open to argument in this Court. The point has recently been decided by Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J., in In the Goods of Gopessur Dutt, deceased (6), in a judgment delivered so recently as the 18th July 1911 in which they decided that whatever may be the rule in England there is no rule under the Indian Evidence Act that the standard of proof in a case like the present must be the same as if the Defendants were being tried on a criminal charge.

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

The next point argued is that a suit to recover damages resulting from a conspiracy is not maintainable in British India. The argument is put in this way. That as the only conspiracy which constitutes a criminal offence under the Indian Penal Code is that of a conspiracy to wage war against the King, therefore no suit can be maintained for damages resulting from a conspiracy. To that argument I am unable to assent. This being a case instituted in a Court in the mofussil the Court has to apply the principles of justice, equity and good conscience to the case, that is to say the principles of the law of England so far as suited to India and the state of society here.

That the Indian Penal Code took away by express words any civil remedy cannot be suggested nor can I see that it did so by necessary implication. I have therefore to consider the case apart from the provisions of the Indian Penal Code. On what principle of justice, equity or good conscience ought a Plaintiff in a suit in a Court in India not to be entitled to recover damages which have resulted from a conspiracy to injure him? In my opinion in such a case the Plaintiff has a right of suit in India.

To hold otherwise would I think be a blot upon our system of jurisprudence.

The learned Advocate-General has referred as part of his argument to a memorandum by Lord Dunedin and Sir Arthur Cohen annexed to a report of the commission on trade disputes expressing the view that it was only such conspiracy as amount to a criminal offence that can give rise to civil liability. But the report obviously refers to conspiracies which are indictable according to the common law of England. Lord Macnaghten in his judgment in Quinn v. Leatham (7) expressly lays down that because a Statute has exempted certain conspiracies from the purview of the criminal law, this does not in any way affect civil liability. Nor are judges of the highest eminence all agreed that it is only such conspiracies as are indictable that can give rise to civil liability.

The next point raised by the Advocate-General is that the Plaintiff has brought his suit on a conspiracy and he must be kept strictly to the cause of action that he has set out in his plaint. To that view I assent.

But then argues the learned Advocate-General that this suit is in substance only one for malicious prosecution against joint tortfeasors, and therefore the Plaintiff's suit must fail. To that view I cannot agree.

I take the following from Lord Coke's Commentary on Littleton, Hargrave and Butler's edition, published in 1794, a book of the highest authority amongst English lawyers.

Note on 161 A.

"II. Where two or more conspire to harass any person by false and malicious suit whether criminally or civilly it is a crime punishable by indictment or the parties injured may sue for damages by writ of conspiracy; and both of these remedies lie at common law, that part of the Statute or Ordinance Articuli super chartas which gives remedy against conspirators by writ out of Chancery being according to both Staunford and Lord Coke only an affirmance of the common law, Staunford P. C., 172, 2 Inst. 561, 562."

"IV. There is also a remedy for a false and malicious prosecution though the aggravation of a conspiracy or confederacy is wanting and the injury comes from one only; for in such a case the party prosecuted may have an action upon the case for damages."

PEARY MOHAN DAS v. D. WESTON.

A conspiracy to maliciously prosecute a man is obviously indictable according to the common law of England.

As Lord Brampton pointed out in the case of Quinn v. Leathem (7). "A conspiracy consists of an unlawful combination of two or more persons to do that which is contrary to law or to do that which is wrongful and harmful towards another person, it may be punished criminally by indictment or civilly by an action on the case in the nature of conspiracy if damage has been occasioned to the person against whom it is directed. It may also consist of an unlawful combination to carry out an object not in itself unlawful by unlawful means. The essential elements whether of a criminal or of an actionable conspiracy are in my opinion the same though to sustain an action special damage must be proved. This is the substance of the decision in Barber v. Lesiter (8)."

Applying the test given by Lord Brampton it is clear that if the conspiracy is a criminal one it gives rise to civil liability if special damage has been suffered by the Plaintiff. The conspiracy in the present case would obviously be indictable at common law in England and therefore if damage resulted the Plaintiff would have a good cause of action in England. In my opinion he has a similar right in India.

The truth of the matter is that in a case like the present the Plaintiff has two causes of action, one to recover the damage that has been occasioned to him as the result of the conspiracy, and the other to recover damages for malicious prosecution against the Defendants as joint tortfeasors. This is well illustrated by the case of Quinn v. Leathem (7). There the Plaintiff in his pleading charged in the first four Courts as separate causes of action four separate acts each of which was alleged to have been done wrongfully and maliciously and with intent to injure the Plaintiff and to have occasioned him actual loss, injury and damage. The fifth count charged as a separate cause of action that the Defendants unlawfully and maliciously conspired together and with others to do the various acts complained of in the previous counts with intent to injure the Plaintiff and his trade and business and that by reason of the conspiracy he was injured and damaged in his trade. The jury returned a verdict in favour of the Plaintiff on all five counts and the verdict and judgment were upheld on appeal in the House of Lords.

In my opinion the present suit to recover damages resulting from the conspiracy is maintainable by the Plaintiff. These points of law as to whether a suit to recover damages resulting from a conspiracy and as to the nature of the present suit do not in any way affect the merits of the suit. Their importance lies in the fact that if the suit is only one for malicious prosecution then the suit is barred under the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act as being brought after the statutory period has expired. I therefore decide the first issue in favour of the Plaintiff and also the second issue so far as relates to the overt acts mentioned in cls. (c), (d) and (e) of that issue.

The third issue is whether the Defendants were entitled to notice of this suit under sec. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In my opinion they were not. A public officers sued in respect of an act done in bad faith is not entitled to notice under sec. 80. The decisions in this Court of Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (9) and Raghubans v. Phool Kumari (10) establish this proposition without doubt [See also Muhammad v. Panna (11)].

In these circumstances it is not necessary for me to determine the fourth issue.

The fifth issue is whether this suit is barred by limitation.

The article of the Indian Limitation Act 1908 which applies to the present suit is, I think, Art. 36. This suit is, I think, a suit "for compensation for any malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance independent of contract and not herein specially provided for;" the period of limitation for such a suit is two years from the time when the malfeasance, misfeasance, or non-feasance takes place. In this view the Plaintiff's suit is brought within time. I do not agree with the argument that this suit is governed by Art. 23 as being a suit "for compensation for a malicious prosecution," the period of limitation for which is one year from the time when the Plaintiff is acquitted or the prosecution is otherwise terminated.

If this suit is not governed by Art. 36 I should hold that Art. 120 applies. That article fixes six years as the period of limitation with regard to suits for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Second Schedule to the Act.

I am therefore of opinion that the present suit is not barred by limitation.

The sixth and last issue is what damages is the Plaintiff entitled to. In order to sustain an action of this nature the Plaintiff must prove special damage. The conspiracy must be the proximate cause of the damage or the damages must be such as to have been in the contemplation of the parties.

In the present case the Plaintiff has given evidence that he was compelled to spend a considerable, though not a heavy sum, owing to his arrest.

The question is whether these damages legally resulted from the conspiracy. The case principally relied up on by the Defendants is the decision in Barber v. Lesiter (8).

But all that decision laid down was that on the facts alleged in the declaration the conspiracy was not the proximate cause of the damage nor was the damage to the Plaintiff in the contemplation of the parties.

The damages in the present case are not in my opinion too remote. I adopt Lord Justice Fitzgibbon's statement in his charge to the jury in Quinn v. Leatham (7), "I told the jury that pecuniary loss directly caused by the conduct of the Defendants must be proved in order to establish a cause of action and I advised them to require to be satisfied that such loss to a substantial amount had been proved by the Plaintiff. I decline to tell them that if actual and substantial pecuniary loss was proved to have been directly caused to the Plaintiff by the wrongful acts of the Defendants that they were bound to limit the amount of damage to the precise sum so proved."

I accordingly award to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,000 as damages. The Defendants must pay to the Plaintiff his costs of this suit on Scale No. 2.

Before parting with this case I wish to make a brief reference to a matter which, though not bearing directly on the result, is intimately connected with the conduct of this case and involves a serious imputation of unprofessional conduct, which two senior members of the Bar, one of them being the Advocate-General, have seen fit to make on the conduct of Counsel opposed to them.

It was made a matter of deliberate and unrestrained attack on Mr. Dutt that he had not gone into the witness-box. Mr. Dutt has himself explained the reason of his abstention and that reason appears to me to be satisfactory. His client in whose favour his testimony would have been given, with full knowledge of this saw fit to retain him as his Counsel and it cannot be suggested that there was anything improper in Mr. Dutt's accepting this retainer. Having done this it was in strict accordance with the rule of professional ethics of almost universal application that having taken up the position of an advocate he should refrain from testifying on a trial which was being conducted by him. I may observe that this rule of professional conduct was not, I regret to say, observed by Mr. Dutt's opponents. I may further add that I viewed at the time and still view with complete disapproval Mr. Norton's unfounded and abusive attack on Mr. Dutt's junior, Mr. H. D. Bose.

surely affect its efficiency and the public will be obliged to pay more for less efficient work.

IT IS ABSURD TO SUPPOSE THAT ANY BODY OF MEN can possibly estimate the exact requirements of the public in the matter of the number of lawyers. It is only in its most exaggerated forms that the want of proper adjustment between demand and supply in the profession can become apparent, as when lawyers are generally found to be charging enormous fees or when a large body of them is found to be on the verge of starvation. The necessary adjustment between these extremes is scarcely capable of proper estimation by mere observation. With a free access to the profession these adjustments are naturally made; for when the profits of the profession come below normal, people would naturally refrain from flocking to it.

THE CHIEF COURT OF LAHORE HAS TAKEN THE somewhat novel step of setting up arbitrary limitations to the number of lawyers in the Punjab. It has absolutely stopped the enrolment of more mukhtears and has notified to the intending candidates for the law degrees of the University that only such number of them would be admitted as will be notified by the Chief Court; only the Court has undertaken to declare three years previously what that number would be in any year.

WE MUST CONFESS AT THE OUTSET THAT THE question of the congestion of the legal profession is not without its difficulties and we are prepared to accept that it would be very much better for the country if our young men should try to open up new avenues of life rather than crowd into the Bar. But it is open to the gravest doubt whether drastic measures like those adopted by the Lahore Chief Court would not be a remedy worse than the disease. There can be no question that it would lead to a fall in the efficiency of the members of the profession. For, under the system now in force everywhere except in the Punjab a successful practitioner has to rise to his eminence through a course of keen struggle and competition which has a most useful influence in his self-education for the work. Besides it is with him always a survival of the fittest from amongst a fairly large number to which every one satisfying the preliminary requirements is welcome. Arbitrary limitation of their number would shut out a large number of these not because they were not the best fitted for their work but on quite other grounds. Such limitation would likewise tend to create a more or less close body which would

THE ONLY EFFECTIVE WAY OF CHECKING THE evil would seem to lie not in the hands of lawyers and judges so much as in the hands of the Government and the people. It is time that close attention were given to technical education and also to the problem of providing for our young men who are receiving education. It is also an imperative public duty of every man who can afford to do so to attempt to find out means for the profitable employment of their energies. New paths must be carved out and new spheres of ambition must be found for them. When avenues of life bringing better and surer reward than law are found out, the profession of law would have far less attraction for them than it has now. The adjustment of demand and supply will then take place naturally and there would be no necessity for putting artificial checks on the growth of the number of lawyers. We have already got too many checks in our social, economic and administrative conditions to young men of education getting a decent living and too few openings for life. It is scarcely fair to add this new check and leave numbers of educated young men to shift for themselves. If any restriction is at all expedient or necessary, we should prefer some less artificial method working less hardship than the arbitrary one we are discussing. Such a limitation may possibly be found in the German system of which we gave an account not very long ago (15 C. W. N. cclxxxiv), requiring intending practitioners to pass through a period of probation and apprenticeship and to show possession of means of livelihood for five years. This would add both to the efficiency and respectability of the profession. We think this system would be infinitely better than the arbitrary limitations imposed by the Lahore Chief Court.

THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS RELATING to professional conduct and practice which appear in the Bar Council's Report for 1911, will be of interest to the profession :—

The council have had under their consideration the following questions submitted to them by a member of the English Bar practising in India :—(1) If a counsel knows or has reason to believe that he will be an important witness of fact in a case about to be tried, ought he to accept a retainer in the case? (2) If, neither knowing nor having reason to believe that he is likely to be such witness, he accepts the retainer, but at the opening or any subsequent stage of the case, before the evidence is concluded, it becomes apparent that he is an important witness and the other side objects to his appearing as counsel, ought he to persist in so appearing? (3) If a counsel knows or has reason to believe that his own professional conduct in matters out of which an action arises is likely to be impugned in the case, ought he to accept a retainer in such action? (4) If, in the case last put, he neither knows nor has reason to believe when he accepts the retainer that his professional conduct is likely to be impugned, but finds in the course of the case that it is so impugned, ought he to persist in appearing as counsel in the case? (5) In either of the cases (2) and (4) above-mentioned, is there any rule of "professional ethics" which debars the counsel, if he continues to act as counsel in the case, from going into the witness box and being cross-examined?

The council were of opinion that the answers to the above questions should be as follows : (1) If a counsel knows, or has reason to believe, that he will be an important witness of fact in a case about to be tried, he ought not to accept a retainer in the case. (2) If a counsel, neither knowing nor having reason to believe that he is likely to be such witness, accepts the retainer, but at the opening or any subsequent stage of the case before the evidence is concluded it becomes apparent that he is a witness on a material question of fact which is in issue, he ought not to continue to appear as counsel unless in his opinion he cannot retire from the case at that stage without jeopardising the interests of his own client. The council do not consider that the objection of the other side has any bearing on the course which counsel ought to adopt. (3) If a counsel knows, or has reason to believe, that his own professional conduct in matters out of which the action arises is likely to be impugned in the case, he ought not to accept a retainer in such action. (4) If a counsel neither knows, nor has reason to believe when he accepts the retainer, that his professional conduct in matters out of which the action arises is likely to be impugned in the case, but finds in the course of the case that it is so impugned, he ought to adopt the same course of conduct as mentioned in answer to question (2). (5) In either of the cases (2) and (4) above-mentioned, there is no rule of professional ethics which debars a counsel, if he continues to act as counsel in the case, from going into the witness box and being cross-examined.

LINGUISTIC BOUNDARIES OF BENGAL.

"With a few exceptions, Bengali is the language of the great sub-province of Bengal proper, Hindi of Behar and Chota Nagpur and Oriya of Orissa. North of the Ganges, however, Bengali has invaded Behar territory and in the portions of Purnea and Malda which lie to the east of the Mohananda river, the language in common use is Bengali and not Hindi."—Gai's Census of India, 1901, Vol. VI, Pt. I, p. 315.

"In Purneah the number of persons speaking Bengali is estimated by Dr. Grierson to be 603,000," i.e., roughly speaking $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the total population of the District which was 1,874,794 in 1901. As you proceed further west of the Mohananda, Bengali as spoken in Bengal proper is gradually replaced by a dialect "which according to Dr. Grierson," is in the main Bengali with a strong admixture of Hindi but it is written in the Kaithi character in which Hindi and not Bengali is usually written."—Gai's Census of India, 1901, Vol. VI, Pt. I, p. 315.

In Malda, "Bengali is spoken by 74 per cent. of the population and Behari by 21 per cent." This Behari in the western part of the District is greatly influenced and affected by Bengali.—Imperial Gazetteer of India, 1909, E. B. and A., p. 243.

"South of the Ganges, in the Sonthal Parganas, Bengali is current in the whole of the eastern and southern portions, in the Dhalbhum Pargana of Singhbhum, in the greater part of Manbhum and in about half of the State of Seraikela. It also, according to the census, projects to some distance into the District of Hazaribagh."—Gai's Census of India, 1901, Vol. VI, Pt. I, p. 315.

In Sonthal Parganas "Behari is returned as the language of 13.5 per cent. of the population, the dialect in common use being Maithili. The Maithili (which is spoken in the western part of the district) is influenced more or less by the Maghai and partly also by Bengali. The result is a well-marked dialect called the Chhika-Chheki Boli. The Rajmehar Hills separate the speakers of this dialect from those who speak Bengali but in the Deoghur Sub-division the two vernaculars are seen to overlap without combining. . . . Bengali is the language of 13.5 per cent. of the population and is common in the east of the district."—Bengal District Gazetteers, 1910, Vol. XXII, p. 66.

The Chhika-Chheki Boli is also used (1) in the

* In Grierson's Seven Grammars of the Dialects and Sub-Dialects of the Behari Language, in Part VIII, under the heading Maithili-Bengali Dialect of Central and Western Purneah, the following observation occurs "Towards Central Purneah this dialect shows a distinct tendency towards Bengali. The dialect of Eastern Purneah is a variety of Bengali."—Ed.

"Bengali is current in the Dhalbhum Pargana of Singhbhum."—Gait, p. 315.

Along the Oriya Bengali boundary line, "the Oriya of North Balasore shows signs of being Bengalised . . . the character employed in writing is usually the Bengali."—Gait, p. 316.

"Goalpara is not a part of Assam proper : and 69 per cent. of the population speak Bengali."—Imperial Gazetteers, 1909, E. B. & A., p. 516.

In Sylhet "Bengali is the common speech of of the people, and was returned by 92 per cent. of the population."—Imperial Gazetteers, 1909, E. B. & A., p. 421.

In Cachar, "rather more than half the population speak Bengali, 21 per cent. Hindi and Hindusthani, 10 per cent. Manipuri and 4 per cent. hill Cachari."—Imperial Gazetteer, 1901, E. B. & A., p. 444.

As a matter of fact in Cachar 66 per cent. speak Bengali. If Cachar hills portion of the district is left out, then the whole of the rest is practically Bengali speaking.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL FOR THE PRESIDENCY OF BENGAL AND THE REGULATIONS.

The raising of the five Divisions of Bengal proper into a Presidency Government will necessitate a reconstitution of the Legislative Council for Bengal and modification of the Council Regulations.

Before going into the question of reconstitution, the Government should take this opportunity of removing the restrictive regulations which did not exist under the Regulations framed under the India Councils Act of 1892 but appeared for the first time under the Indian Councils Act, 1899, and which chiefly marred the reputation of the Reform Scheme. These restrictive clauses have been condemned by public opinion throughout India and now that an opportunity has presented itself the Government of India should amend them. In our issues of 22nd November and 29th November of 1909 (14 C. W. N. notes, pp. 6, 7 and 14), we pointed out the objectionable features of these restrictive clauses and we shall now more specifically deal with the main heads of these objections.

MUNICIPALITIES AND DISTRICT BOARDS.

In the first place, the only seats that are available to the educated community, the professional classes and the general body of rate-payers and tax-payers of the country are the seats to which a candidate may be returned by the Mofussil Municipalities and the District Boards. These were the old constituencies under the Act of 1892 and under the old Regulations thereunder the only restriction to one's candidature for these constituencies was that one must be ordinarily a resident within the constituency, which was interpreted in certain election cases by the Bengal Government to mean that one must have a place of residence in and practical connection with the Electoral Division. Thus under the older regulations, Mr. S. P. Sinha and Dr. Rash Behary Ghose were qualified candidates for election by the Municipalities or District Boards of the Burdwan Division. But under the Regulations framed under the Act of 1909, they have been disqualified. For, under the new Regulations no one who is not a Municipal Commissioner or a member of a District Board or has been one for three years, is eligible for election by either. The result of this has been to disqualify the best men of the Division and of the Province for seats in the Legislative Councils.

ANTECEDENTS AND REPUTATION OF CANDIDATES.

Then again some general restrictive clauses as regards candidature have for the first time been introduced in the new Regulations. Of these, Reg. IV, cls. (a) to (e) are not open to any objection. But cls. (f) to (i) are and even the Government may be said to admit that they are so, because they conclude with a proviso that the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor may by his order remove the disqualification in any of the cases falling under (f) to (i). Of the disqualifying clauses, (f) provides that no dismissed Government servant may be eligible; (g) that no one who at any time has been sentenced to imprisonment by a Criminal Court for an offence punishable with imprisonment for more than six months or bound down, is eligible; (h) that no legal practitioner debarred from practising is eligible; (i) that none whose reputation and antecedents in the opinion of the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor would make his election contrary to public interest is eligible.

Of these restrictions (f), (g) and (i) are open to very serious objections. Dismissal from Government service does not necessarily imply or leave a moral stain on a man's character. The same may be said with regard to convictions, or binding down orders by Criminal Courts. A man may be sentenced to imprisonment for simple assault, contempt of Court or a number of other offences which do not necessarily imply moral turpitude or bound down for land dispute or literary or journalistic indiscretions and it would be most unjust to disqualify him for life in consequence.

In the absence of any similar restrictions in the Regulations under the Act of 1892 and having regard to the fact that for nearly twenty years the Government had no occasion to take any exception to any candidate returned under the old Regulations on the ground of any such moral delinquency of the candidate or of his "antecedents" and "reputation," the restrictions imposed in the new Regulations above referred to are without any justification.

It may be pointed out here that the effect of the new restrictive Regulation has been to disqualify a public man of the standing of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea who had served in the old Council for more than 10 years and to find a constituency for whom the Bengal Government had on one occasion caused a redistribution of seats amongst the constituencies. Of course, it is now optional with the Government to waive the disqualifications in such cases as it may think fit. But men with any sense of self-respect would not offer themselves for election when they know that they are not eligible as of right but as a matter of favour. The Regulations therefore are in this respect reactionary and retrograde and should be amended. Should it however be felt desirable by Government that some power should be reserved for disqualifying any person on the ground of his "antecedents" or bad "reputation," cl. (i) of Reg. IV might be retained and cls. (f) to (h) might be repealed, since cl. (i) covers all the cases contemplated under cls. (f), (g) and (h) and even (e).

EDUCATION AND INCOME-TAX AS QUALIFICATIONS.

We would further suggest that special electorates should be formed for the Indian educated community and the Indian commercial community. The member for the University is at present elected by ordinary fellows who are mostly Government nominees. It is strongly felt by the educated community that the registered graduates of the University should also be allowed to take part in the election of the representative of the University. The European commercial communities have constituencies of their own. But the representatives of the Indian commercial community are nominated. Nothing can be easier than to create suitable constituencies for them by reference to the income-tax or trade licenses in Municipal towns.

LANDHOLDERS' CONSTITUENCIES.

Landholders' qualifications vary widely in Eastern and Western Bengal. They ought to be brought into line and the money qualification should be so reduced as to enable landholders of the middle class to vote and to be eligible. It is the landholders of the middle class who are generally more intelligent, better educated and more representative of their class than the upper ten. There is also a popular feeling that the landholders' interests are over-represented in the Councils. They have their special electorates. Then again, as in Eastern Bengal, they are put down as eligible by the District Boards as well. In West Bengal they are not so eligible. The Regulations for the Presidency of Bengal should follow the Regulations for West Bengal in this respect.

MAHOMEDAN CONSTITUENCIES.

As for the special electorates for the Mahomedan community the qualifications in Eastern and Western Bengal should be made uniform. Government title should not be made a voting qualification either in the case of landholders or Mahomedans.

THE STATUTORY LIMIT TO MEMBERS.

Regarding the reconstitution of the Legislative Council for the Presidency of Bengal we shall assume that the Council will, as at present, consist of 50 members although we must say that the general feeling is that the number should in the new Statute be increased so as to create general electorates by reference to education and income-tax or trade licenses and enable the general public to take part in the elections and to send representatives of the middle class people to the Councils. The Municipalities only represent the towns and the District Boards only theoretically represent the landlord and tenant's interests in rural areas but the latter being semi-official bodies the representatives of the District Boards are ordinarily and practically official nominees.

ELECTED, NOMINATED AND OFFICIAL MEMBERS.

Thus the general body of the educated classes and of Indian merchants and traders except in the big cities have no votes or representation at all in the Provincial Councils. But for the present we shall consider the question of the re-constitution of the Council for the Presidency of Bengal on the basis of the existing Statute of 1908 and the Regulations for Bengal and Eastern Bengal thereunder. We shall assume that for the present there are to be only 50 members for the Bengal Presidency. Of these under the Bengal Regulations, 26 are now elected and 24 are nominated by Government. Out of the latter 17 must be officials but as regards the remaining seven there is no statutory bar to the Regulations being modified and some of the seats at any rate made over to suitable electorates. How many of these may or ought to be so made over we shall consider after we have examined how the 26 seats which are now given by election should be allotted between the five Divisions, Burdwan, Presidency, Rajshahye, Dacca and Chittagong.

ELECTORATES OF WEST BENGAL.

The separation of Behar, Orissa and Chota Nagpur has left the following 13 seats which were given by election to the Burdwan and Presidency Divisions and Calcutta.

Calcutta Corporation	1
Calcutta University	1
Burd. & Presy. Division Municipalities	2
Burd & Presy. Div. District Boards	2
Burd. & Presy. Division Landholders	2
Burdwan (and Orissa) Mahomedan Communities	1
Presidency Div. Mhd. Community	1
Bengal European Chamber of Commerce	2
Calcutta European Trades	1

ELECTORATES OF EAST BENGAL.

Similarly the separation of Assam from Eastern Bengal leaves the following 13 seats which were given by election to Eastern Bengal.

District Boards of the Rajshahye, Dacca and Chittagong Divisions	3
The Landholders of the 3 Divisions	2
Jute interest	1
Chittagong Port Commissioners	1
Mahomedan Community for the 3 Divisions	3
Municipalities of the above 3 Divisions	3

It should be noted however that the Chittagong Division, including the Surma Valley Division, elected one member for the Council alternately with the Assam Valley Division.

SEATS BY NOMINATION.

Assuming that the constitution of the new Council will be similar to that of Bengal, there will remain 24 seats at the disposal of the Governor of which not more than 17 may be officials and two experts who may be nominated by him in connection with any measures before the Council. This leaves 5 seats, of which one was assigned to planters, 1 to the Indian commercial community in West Bengal and the remaining three were filled by nomination by Government.

Planting community.—With regard to the seats by nomination the Government will have to consider whether a seat should continue to be assigned to the planting community when the bulk of that community would now be in Behar and Assam. There are no doubt some planters in the Darjeeling district but to assign one member to only one district would be unfair to the claims of other constituencies and communities. Besides Darjeeling has a large number of votes through its Municipality.

The Indian commercial community in East Bengal who were given a seat by nomination to the Eastern Bengal and Assam Council, should be given a seat in the new Council and this will have to be done without curtailing the representation of other larger communities.

Nominated non-official members.—As regards the three seats reserved by Government for nomination of non-officials the feeling of the educated community in the country is that they should be thrown open to the educated community by election.

REDISTRIBUTION OF ELECTORATES.

Now with regard to the 26 seats above-mentioned which are given by election we have to make some suggestions in accordance with the prevailing public opinion in the matter.

Municipal and District Board Seats.—One seat to each Division should be assigned to each of these constituencies and no difference observed between West and East Bengal such as is to be found in the present Eastern Bengal and Assam Regulations in this respect. Or in other words in all 10 seats should be assigned to the five divisions, five to the Municipalities and five to the District Boards. For reasons already stated the qualification of candidates should only be limited by the residential clause as in the Council Regulations under the Act of 1892. Should, however, past or present membership of any of the Municipalities or District Boards be retained as a qualification, the clause in the Eastern Bengal and Assam Regulations that a landlord may also offer himself as a candidate for election by the District Boards should be omitted. Because, in the first place there is no such provision in the Bengal Council Regulations; next, since the landholders have special electorates of their own, they should not be allowed to have further representation through the above constituencies which have been reserved for the professional and middle class people.

Landholders' seats.—While in Eastern Bengal two seats are given by rotation to three Divisions, in West Bengal one seat is given to the Presidency Division and one to the Burdwan Division. The landholders' seats in the Council should not on any account be increased. We would suggest that the four seats reserved for landholders should be given by rotation to the five Divisions. As Bengal is now one province no distinction should be observed between West and East Bengal.

MIDDLE CLASS LANDHOLDERS.

Further there is a very substantial and just grievance amongst the landholders of the middle class that under the present Regulations the franchise has been given only to the opulent zemindars who are not in touch with the general body of landholders and whose interests in many respects are opposed to those of tenureholders and the landholders of the middle class. So the landholders in the Legislative Councils, both Provincial and Imperial, are not regarded by the public as representatives of the landholders but as representatives only of their own selves. There is a strong feeling both in Eastern and Western Bengal that the electoral qualifications of landholders should be so modified as to enable the tenure-holders and the landholders of the middle class to vote and to elect at any rate some of the representatives of the landholding classes from amongst them. In Madras all zemindars having an annual income of three thousand rupees may vote and are also eligible. Why cannot the same or similar qualifications be adopted in the new Regulations for the Presidency of Bengal. In Bengal the electoral qualification is the payment of Rs. 7,500 as Government Revenue or of Rs. 1,875 in cesses; in Eastern Bengal, land revenue of Rs. 3,000 or cesses, Rs. 750; in Surma Valley (including Sylhet which desires to be included in Bengal) it is, land revenue Rs. 500 or cesses, Rs. 125.

If the Madras Regulation is not adopted, the scale of Government revenue or cesses fixed for Sylhet may be adopted in order to enable the landholders of the middle class and tenure-holders to vote and to be eligible. In the interests of tenure-holders a moderate cess-limit should be fixed and such cesses when paid to zemindars should be considered as satisfying the electoral qualification.

Jute interest.—In the Eastern Bengal Regulations one of the seats was given to the Naraingunge Chamber of Commerce as representing jute interests. All the jute firms in Naraingunge have their offices in Calcutta. The Calcutta firms are represented in the Bengal Council through the Bengal Chamber of Commerce which has 2 seats in the Bengal Council. The Naraingunge Chamber got a separate representation in the Eastern Bengal Council because they and their Calcutta firms or representatives were placed under two separate administrations. Now that they are both placed under the same administration and the Bengal Chamber of Commerce has been given two seats, in the place of one under the old Regulations, to retain a separate representation for such a small and sectional body as the Naraingunge Chamber of Commerce would be unfair to other communities. This seat should be given to a general electorate, including the educated, trading and commercial classes.

In case the seat assigned to the planting community is retained the gap that will occur in respect of the seat that was assigned to the Indian commercial community in the E. B. & Assam Council may be filled up by making over the seat assigned to jute interest to them. In that case all the jute merchants at Naraingunge may also be included in the electorate. East and North Bengal is the home of jute and Indian merchants of these parts are no less interested in jute than the European jute merchants. So whether the seat be reserved for jute interest or thrown open to the general body of merchants in Eastern and Northern Bengal, in all common fairness the electorate should be re-cast by the inclusion of Indian merchants into the constituency.

Chittagong Port.—Should, however European merchants in Eastern Bengal desire to be represented by a European constituency they might together with Chittagong Port Commissioners form one constituency. The Calcutta Port Commissioners do not form a separate constituency by themselves and why should Chittagong?

Mahomedan electorates.—We have always been opposed to all communal or special electorates. But since assurance has been given in Lord Hardinge and the Earl of Crewe's recent Despatches that the interest of the Mahomedan community, evidently in Eastern Bengal, would not be affected by the inclusion of Eastern Bengal within Bengal, we would not oppose the retention of special electorates for Mahomedans, although in the reconstituted province Hindus and Mahomedans are numerically almost equal. No better illustration can be found than here, that "the privileges of one community amount to disabilities of another." In common fairness therefore special electorates ought to be given to both. In any case, we do not think that it would be fair to assign to the Mahomedan community more than four special electorates in the Presidency.

In the Eastern Bengal and Assam, they have only four seats. In Bengal, Behar and Orissa, the seats reserved for them are also four. The effect of the changes is that Bengal loses five Divisions and gains three Divisions only from Eastern Bengal. The reconstituted Presidency of Bengal is not any larger than the Province of Bengal or that of Eastern Bengal and Assam. So this special electorate for the Presidency of Bengal should be limited to four. In no Presidency or Province in India is the Mahomedan electorate in excess of four and the assurances in the Delhi Despatch would be fulfilled if the Mahomedan electorate is limited to that number. These four seats may be given by rotation to the five Divisions. Further, the severance of Balasore and Cuttack, which are important Mahomedan centres, ought not to entitle Burdwan Division to retain one seat by itself. For, that would amount to adding to this special electorate and not maintaining the provincial limit in this respect as before. Burdwan may, therefore, be tacked on to Presidency Division for this purpose and both considered as one electorate.

GENERAL ELECTORATES.

The Reform Scheme will never be popular in the country unless at least one general electorate is formed in each Division in which people irrespective of class or creed may take part in the elections and choose representatives from amongst themselves by virtue of education and moderate property qualifications. It will be for the Government to decide whether they would create these electorates by either increasing the statutory number or by carving them out of the seats now given by nomination and assigned to special electorates as has been pointed out by us above.

CONCLUSION.

The redistribution of seats in the Legislative Council of the Presidency of Bengal as suggested above will then be as follows :—

BRETT'S LEADING CASES IN MODERN EQUITY. Fifth Edition. By J. A. Shea wood, Esq., and W. G. Hart, Esq.; L. L. D. London: Butterworth & Co.; Calcutta, Butterworth & Co., (India), Ltd. 8-2, Hastings Street. 1911.

Brett's Leading Cases in Equity has long been an invaluable hand-book for students of Equity. Its essential characteristic lies in being the exposition of what Sir George Jessel characterised as "Modern doctrines of Equity." For this purpose the learned author took illustrative cases exclusively from modern reports, referring in the notes to such old cases as had laid down principles which have been retained unmodified up to this date. In stating the facts and decisions of the cases the utmost brevity was the aim of the author and the principles were illustrated at greater length in the notes by copious extracts from judgments in the leading case as well as other cases. The subsequent editions of the work led to an overburdening of the notes to an extent inconsistent with the original object of the work. The present editors have however reverted to the old model by polishing off the notes, by excluding cases which since the first edition have become a little out of date and altogether giving the work that conciseness and lucidity which would best serve the interests of the students.

The mode of treatment of the cases in this book is extremely helpful to students who are very often not used to reading complicated reports of cases. The relevant facts and the decision thereon are shortly stated. Then follows the exposition of the principles illustrated by the case and in this the editors not only give, so far as we have been able to examine the work, almost all the relevant passages from the judgment in the principal case but also short statements of facts of other important cases as well as important extracts from other judgments. The result has been a fairly comprehensive and thoroughly up-to-date account of the Equity law, so far as possible in the words of the judges. We only wish that the editors in their anxiety to make the work an exposition of modern Equity law had not so rigorously excluded old cases merely because they are old. Huguenin v. Basely, Allcard v. Skinner, Stapilton v. Stapilton, Fox v. Mackreth, Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth, Penn v. Baltimore and several other cases of a similar character, which despite all changes still continue to be leading authorities on the subject have, we notice, received but scanty attention. Yet a student of Equity can hardly afford to do without a good knowledge of those cases.

THE INDIAN DECISIONS (OLD SERIES). By T. A. Venkasawmy Row. Vol. 11, Supreme Court Reports, Bengal, Madras: The Law Printing House, Mount Road. 1911.

This is the second volume of the series of reprints of the reports of cases decided by the Supreme Courts and Sadar Dewanny Adawluats in India, the first volume of which we have already noticed in these columns. In this volume appear cases reported in 1847 and 1848 in George Taylor's Reports, between 1849 and 1853 in the three volumes of Taylor and Bell's Reports, and Gasper's reports of Small Cause Court cases determined by the Supreme Court of Calcutta between 1850 and 1859, with a general index for all the cases contained in the above reports. That this cheap reprint of these not easily available reports will be useful goes without saying.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Staffordshire and Worcestershire Canal Navigation v. Bradley. Before Mr. JUSTICE EVE. 15th November 1911.

Right of fishing, if appurtenant to land and can it be leased—Fishery in gross—Extent of profit à prendre.

This was an action for a declaration that the Defendant had no right to fish from any of the Plaintiffs' towing-paths. The defence was that the Defendant was a member of a club to which the rights of fishing had been leased by the Earl of Shrewsbury. Three questions arose for determination, namely, (1) whether the right to fish carries with it the right to enter on the towing-path, (2) whether those rights were vested in the Earl of Shrewsbury, and (3) whether those rights could be the subject of the lease.

The learned Judge found the first in the Defendant's favour, but the second against him. He accordingly decreed the suit. He said

As to the second point it is necessary to ascertain what was the right conferred by sec. 74. It was a right to take fish from the canal. Is that a right capable of being made appurtenant to the land? The answer to that question is to be found in Chesterfield v. Harris ([1908] 2 Ch. at p. 410, where the Master of the Rolls says: "I think our law does not allow such a profit à prendre. It is claimed as a right in gross, but as a profit à prendre in a qua estate or in other words as appurtenant to land. Apart from authorities the very idea of a qua estate seems to involve some relation between the needs of the estate or its owner and the extent of the profit à prendre. A right in an indefinite number of people to take a profit à prendre without stint and for sale must tend to the entire destruction of the property."

Now here the only relation between the owner and profit à prendre is the area determined by the frontage to the canal. That is not the sort of relation referred to by the Master of the Rolls. I think therefore that this fishery was a fishery in gross, and not appurtenant or reputed to be appurtenant to the land. Was Lord Shrewsbury clothed with this right? It is said that it was swept in by the general words of the deed of 1845. I cannot hold that the right passed under that deed. The chain therefore of the Defendant's contentions breaks at the second point, and that really disposes of the case.

Assuming, however, that the grant was capable of being made appurtenant and capable of passing under the deed of 1845, was Lord Shrewsbury capable of granting a licence to members of the Angling Society to fish? I do not see why he should not do so. It is said if the members were very numerous it would cast a serious burden on the company. But the members would be limited by the amount to fish to be caught, and the right to fish must be exercised so as not to prejudice or obstruct the towing-path. The result is that the Defendant cannot justify his entrance on the towing-path, and that the Plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration and injunction with costs.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. CIVIL RULE No. 4600 OF 1911. NARENDRA NATH BOSE, Petitioner v. ABDUL HAMID MUNSHI AND OTHERS, Opposite Party. 19th December 1911.

Time allowed to put in deficit Court-fee—Last day Court-holiday—Deposit on following day, if valid.

This Rule was obtained on behalf of the Petitioner on 14th August 1911.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—

The Plaintiff brought a money suit against the Defendant. The Court-fee being insufficient the Court passed the following order on the 18th March 1911:—"Plaintiff to pay deficit Court-fee Rs 4-13 within 10 days." The 28th March being a Court-holiday the Plaintiff deposited on the next day, i.e., on the 29th March. Ultimately the suit was dismissed on the ground that as the deficit Court-fee was deposited after the expiry of 10 days, i.e., after the 28th September 1911 the suit was barred by limitation.

The Plaintiff moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Petitioner submitted that if the law or a Court directs a thing to be done within a fixed period and it is found impossible of performance on the last day so fixed for no laches on the part of the party required or directed to do that act, it will be taken as properly done if it is done on the next day it is possible of performance. He cited in support of his argument, 10 C. W. N. 535, 8 C. L. J. 339, 8 W. R. 223, 21 Mad. 385, 22 Mad. 179, 18 Cal. 231.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE enquired what would have been the case if the time was fixed by contract.]

Held—Having regard to the case reported in 10 C. W. N. 535, the Rule must be made absolute.

Impartible estate—Will, contest as to validity of, ended by compromise—Subsequent admission of will to probate—Rights of parties, if determined by compromise or by will—Impartibility, whether put an end to or not—Construction of compromise.

An application by the widow for probate of the will of a deceased owner of an estate S. M. was contested by S. the next in the line of heirship according to the rule of primogeniture which prevailed in the family so far as this estate was concerned. S. also brought a separate action against the widow for recovery of the property upon declaration of the invalidity of the will, and in this action the parties entered into an agreement of compromise by which (according to the construction put on it by the High Court) it was provided that subject to the enjoyment by the widow for life of the income and profits, the estate would devolve upon S. as an impartible estate. After this compromise the will was admitted to probate :

Held—(Approving of the High Court's interpretation of the compromise), that the question whether the property went to S. with or without the incident of impartibility, depended upon the construction of the compromise and not upon the validity or otherwise of the will—the very thing which the agreement of compromise was made to avoid.

That the impartibility of the estate having been preserved by the compromise, the rights of S. under it was not affected by the subsequent admission to probate of the will.

This was an appeal from a judgment* and a decree of the High Court of Allahabad, dated the 29th of May 1908, which set aside a decree of the District Judge of Jaunpur, dated the 24th February 1906, and dismissed the suit of the Plaintiff, the present Appellant.

The main question for determination in the appeal was as to the effect of a compromise, dated the 25th April 1896, and the nature of the estate passed under it.

The circumstances out of which the appeal arose were as follows :—

A valuable estate, known as the Singra Mau estate, situated in the district of Jaunpur, in the North-Western Provinces of India, was admittedly, up to the time of the death of Rai Randhir Singh, the last male owner, an impartible estate.

On the 15th of December 1894, Rai Randhir Singh executed a will by which he devised his entire estate to his wife, Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, to the exclusion of his nephew, Thakur Sheopal Singh. The testator died on the 4th January 1895, and on his death a dispute arose as to the right of succession.

On the 1st of April 1895, the Collector of Jaunpur placed Sonao Kunwar, the widow of the deceased, in possession of his estate, and thereafter on the 28th of March 1895 Sheopal Singh brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur to have it declared that the will was void and to obtain possession of the estate of Randhir Singh. In the course of his plaint he stated the following :—

“ Rai Randhir Singh was the occupant

* Reported in I. L. R. 30 A 405 (1908).

THAKURAIN LEKHRAJ KUNWAR v. THAKUR HARPAL SINGH.

of the gaddi and in possession of the estate in accordance with the old custom and usage. The said Randhir Singh under the old practice and on account of the nature of the property and also because a co-sharer of a joint property had no right to transfer the joint property, was not competent to execute any deed of transfer.

"Rai Randhir Singh as a matter of fact on account of old age, weakness, seriousness of the illness which threatened his death, was quite incapable of entering into any contract or of understanding any transaction; nor did he execute any formal document after considering the exigency and consequence of the transaction."

The principal Defendant in this suit was Sanao Kunwar, and on the 25th of April 1896 she entered into a compromise with Sheopal Singh. The material terms of the compromise are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Sheopal Singh died on the 27th July 1899, leaving a widow, the present Appellant, and a daughter but no son. He predeceased Sanao Kunwar, who died on the 20th of June 1904. On the 6th of July, the Collector of Jaunpur ordered that the name of Harpal Singh, the Respondent, should be entered in the revenue records in the place of that of Sanao Kunwar and, on appeal, this order was confirmed by the Commissioner of the district.

The Appellant then brought the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, and in her plaint, dated the 24th of August 1904, prayed for possession of the estate valued at one lakh on the ground that it was the self-acquired property of Sheopal Singh whom she represented as his widow. She contended that under the will of Randhir Singh his widow, Sanao Kunwar, acquired an absolute estate which passed from the family of Randhir Singh. The nature of the property and the rules of inheritance became changed and no member of the family of Randhir Singh had any right left to it. The Plaintiff also contended that, by virtue of compromise and the decree based thereon the personal representative of Sheopal Singh acquired the absolute estate on the death of Sanao Kunwar.

The Defendant alleged (inter alia) that the estate of Singra Mau had always been an impartible estate, and according to the custom of primogeniture descended to the eldest son of the eldest branch, that Randhir Singh became the owner of the estate in accordance with the custom, that under the will executed by Randhir Singh, his widow Sanao Kunwar acquired merely a life-interest, that Sheopal Singh acquired by the deed of compromise no right to the estate except the right to receive an annuity of Rs. 12,000 a year of maintenance, that as he predeceased Sanao Kunwar his widow acquired no right on the death of Sanao Kunwar, that in no way did the estate become the personal and self-acquired property of Sheopal Singh nor by the execution of the will and compromise did the nature of the family or of the estate undergo any change, that if Sanao Kunwar, who had only a life-interest, made any grant of land to Sheopal Singh by the deed of compromise the grant was ultra vires and could not prejudice the Defendants.

The District Judge to whose Court the case was transferred for trial from the Court of the Subordinate Judge, framed several issues of which the following are material :

Under the ordinary rules of Hindu law, did the Will executed by Randhir Singh, on the 15th December 1894, convey to Musammat Sonao Kunwar an absolute title to the entire estate?

THAKURAIN LEKHRAJ KUNWAR v. THAKUR HARPAL SINGH.

If an absolute estate was devised to Musammat Sonao Kunwar, did it become her self-acquired property? Did it not retain a special custom of succession? And its impartible character?

Under the same supposition, did the deed of compromise and the decree create a vested interest in Thakur Sheopal Singh? Was this vested interest his self-acquisition? Did it not in his hands retain a special custom of succession?

Were the compromise and decree of April 1896 between Sonao Kunwar and Sheopal Singh a compromise of doubtful rights between members of the same family, and did Plaintiff take an absolute estate as a beneficiary under the arrangement?

The District Judge upon the several issues held—

(a) That Sonao Kunwar acquired an absolute alienable estate under the will dated the 15th December 1894.

(b) That the estate devised by the said will became the self-acquired property of Sonao Kunwar and that it lost its character as an impartible estate and that the special custom of descent which governed its devolution till then was no longer applicable to it.

(c) That under the compromise of the 25th of April and the decree of the 27th of April 1896 based thereon, an estate in remainder vested in Sheopal Singh.

(d) That the said estate in remainder was his self-acquisition divested of impartibility and special custom of descent.

(e) That under the ordinary rules of Hindu law the Plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate against the Defendants.

Dissatisfied with the decree of the District Judge Thakur Harpal Singh, the first Defendant, filed an appeal to the High Court at Allahabad. The appeal was heard by Stanley, C. J., and Banerjee, J., who, on the 29th of May 1908, delivered their judgment* and decree by which they set aside the decree of the District Judge and ordered that the suit of the Plaintiff should be dismissed. In the course of their judgment they said:—

"We must advert to another point which has been made upon the compromise by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent and that is this. These words are to be found in it. 'After the death of Musammat Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, I, Thakur Sheopal Singh, or any representative of mine who may be living at the time will be the absolute owner of all the moveable and immoveable properties possessed by Rai Randhir Singh and will occupy the gaddi.' It is contended that the words 'any representative of mine' mean the personal representative of Sheopal Singh and that the intention was that the estate should devolve on Sheopal Singh in case he survived Sonao Kunwar, but that in case of his predeceasing her it should devolve on his personal representative. The translation of the words 'or any representative of mine' does not accurately express the vernacular words used. The words in the vernacular are kaem makam, that is one who takes the place of another, i.e., a successor. The word which denotes personal representative is waris. Translating the words kaem makam, as 'successor' they would be quite appropriate words to use to denote the successor to an impartible estate whether that successor happened to be a son or a more distant relative. As the representative was also to be his successor on the gaddi he could not have intended that his widow would be included in that term. The words seem to be used as words of limitation marking out the estate which Sheopal Singh was intended to take, namely, an absolute estate just as the word 'heirs' in English law in, for example, a grant to a man and his heirs denotes a fee-simple estate. We do not think therefore that there is any force in this argument.

"The learned District Judge appears to us not to have correctly apprehended the meaning and effect of the compromise. At the time it was entered into, the position was this. Sonao Kunwar claimed the estate of her husband under his will. Sheopal Singh disputed the will and claimed the estate as the successor to Randhir Singh. If the will were established Sonao Kunwar would be entitled to the estate; otherwise Sheopal Singh was entitled to it. A clear issue was knit between them and there was undoubtedly a good fighting case." Then after referring to the cases of Rani Mewa Kunwar v. Rani Hulas Kunwar (1), Gobind Krishna v. Abdul Qayyam (2), Bachhe Kunwar v. Dharam Das (3), Ram Shankar v. Ganesh Prasad (4) and Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibi (5), their Lordships concluded as follows :—

"It appears to us clear upon the true interpretation of the compromise entered into between Sheopal Singh and Sonao Kunwar that Sheopal Singh took an absolute vested estate in the property, the enjoyment of it being postponed during the life of Sonao Kunwar. We also think that upon the language of the compromise it is not possible to hold that the character of the estate as it had been handed down from father to son for generations was changed. As an impartible estate Sheopal Singh laid claim to it and the compromise provided that as an impartible estate it should devolve upon him. The concession made to Sonao Kunwar by him was that she would enjoy it for her life and sit upon the gaddi as gaddinashin, his occupation of the gaddi being postponed. On the death of Sheopal Singh therefore the estate in our opinion devolved according to the rules of primogeniture governing impartible estates and did not pass to his widow as an estate governed by the ordinary rules of Hindu Law."

Hence this appeal.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellant submitted that she was entitled under the Hindu Law to succeed to the estate. Rai Randhir Singh had power to devise it, and he did so by his will to Sonao Kunwar. He made her malik or absolute owner of the property. Thenceforward the estate ceased to be governed by the law of primogeniture. It was lost to the family and what Sheopal Singh got under the compromise was his self-acquired property. Even if it continued impartible it descended to his widow under the Mirakshara Law. Reference was made to Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (6), Surajmani v. Rabinath (7), Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibi (5) and Katama Natchier v. Raja of Sihva-gunga (8).

THAKURAIN LEKHRAJ KUNWAR v. THAKUR HARPAL SINGH.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Sheopal Singh impugned the will of Rai Randhir Singh. Its validity was left undetermined by the compromise.]

The will was finally admitted to probate.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Sheopal Singh's case was that he succeeded to the gaddi—that the estate was impartible and descended by the law of primogeniture. How can it be said that the estate in his hands became his self-acquired property ?]

Under the will of Rai Randhir Singh the estate went out of the family to his wife. Sheopal Singh spent his own money in prosecuting the suit, and what he recovered under the compromise became his self-acquired property under the Mitakshara Law. The compromise provided for the succession of Sheopal Singh's personal representatives. In any case his widow was entitled to the estate.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by Thakurain Lekhraj Kunwar (the Plaintiff) from the decree of the High Court of judicature for the North-Western Provinces of India, dated the 29th of May 1908, which set aside the decree in the Plaintiff's favour of the District Judge of Jaunpur, and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit and certain objections which had been filed by her.

In the suit in which the decree now under appeal was made, the Plaintiff, who was the widow of Sheopal Singh, claimed proprietary possession of the riyasat of Singra Mau in the District of Jaunpur, and mesne profits. The Defendants to the suit, who are Respondents to this appeal, are Thakur Harpal Singh, a distant cousin in the male line of Sheopal Singh, Shamsheer Bahadur Singh, a younger brother of the father of Thakur Harpal Singh, Raghuraj Bahadur Singh, and Rampal Singh, minors, sons of Shamsheer Bahadur Singh, and Thakurain Janki Kunwar, the widow of Rudarpal Singh, who was a brother of Sheopal Singh, and had died without male issue. The last common ancestor of Sheopal Singh and Thakur Harpal Singh was Dammar Singh.

The District Judge of Jaunpur gave the Plaintiff, Thakurain Lekhraj Kunwar, a decree for possession as a Hindu widow, and decreed mesne profits. From that decree the Defendants, Thakur Harpal Singh and Shamsheer Bahadur Singh, on his own behalf and as guardian of his sons, Raghuraj Bahadur Singh and Rampal Singh, appealed to the High Court, and in that appeal the Plaintiff filed objections to the decree of the District Judge, claiming that she was entitled to a decree for possession of the Singra Mau estate as an absolute owner, and not merely for the estate of a Hindu widow. The Defendant, Thakurain Janki Kunwar, did not defend the suit ; she claimed no interest.

The question upon which this appeal depends is a short one. The estate of Singra Mau descended in the male line from Dammar Singh as an impartible estate to one Randhir Singh, who died without issue male in January 1895. In the family to which Randhir Singh, Sheopal Singh, and Thakur Harpal Singh belonged the rule of primogeniture applied so far as this estate of Singra Mau was concerned. The pedigree of the family will be found in the judgment of the High Court ; it is sufficient now to say that Sheopal Singh, who was the Plaintiff's husband, was the son of Jagurnath Singh, a younger brother of Randhir Singh, and that on the death of Sheopal Singh without a son in July 1899, the Defendant Thakur Harpal Singh was, subject to the life-interest of Thakurain Sonao Kunwar under a compromise, the next member of the family who was entitled to the possession of Singra Mau, if the estate was then impartible. The question as to whether the estate had ceased to be impartible or had continued to be and was impartible on the death of Sheopal Singh depends upon the construction of an agreement of compromise of the 25th of April 1896, to which Sheopal Singh and Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, who was the junior widow of Randhir Singh, were the parties.

Randhir Singh, who was then 74 years of age, and in possession of the impartible estate of Singra Mau, made a will on the 15th December 1894, by which he left his entire estate and every kind of moveable and immoveable property of which he was then in possession to Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, his junior wife. It is admitted that if Randhir Singh was then of testamentary capacity he had power as the owner in possession of the impartible estate of Singra Mau to make that will, and by it to put an end to the impartibility of the estate, and to exclude his nephew Sheopal Singh from the succession, which was the effect of the will as it was executed. After the death of Randhir Singh his widow, Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, applied for a grant to her of probate of the will. Sheopal Singh and others filed objections to probate being granted; thereupon in March 1896 Sheopal Singh brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur against Thakurain Sonao Kunwar and Thakurain Shankar Kunwar, the senior widow of Randhir Singh, a pro forma Defendant, and Babu Soridat, also a pro forma Defendant, in which Sheopal Singh alleged that when Randhir Singh was seriously ill and on the point of death, and quite incapable of entering into any contract or of understanding any transaction, the well-wishers of Sonao Kunwar and Shankar Kunwar, having colluded together, caused the will to be executed. Sheopal Singh further alleged in that suit that according to the old custom and nature of the property, and also on the strength of right of survivorship the right to occupy the gaddi, and to enter into possession of the entire estate devolved upon him on the death of Randhir Singh, and he prayed for a declaration that the will of the 15th of December 1894 was null and void as against him and the estate, and for a decree dispossessing Thakurain Sonao Kunwar and Thakurain Shankar Kunwar, and awarding absolute possession to him, Sheopal Singh, over the entire estate of Singra Mau, together with imlaks, moveable and immoveable property appertaining to the said estate.

On the 25th of April 1896, Sheopal Singh and Thakurain Sonao Kunwar entered into an agreement of compromise which was executed by them and was in the form of a petition to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur in the suit which had been brought by Sheopal Singh against Sonao Kunwar, Shankar Kunwar, and Babu Soridat. That petition was presented to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and on the 27th of April 1896 the Subordinate Judge made a decree in the suit in accordance with the petition giving possession of the estate to Sonao Kunwar for her life subject to the terms of the compromise :—

THAKURAIN LEKHRAJ KUNWAR v. THAKUR HARPAL SINGH.

The petition of compromise was as follows :—

"1. The name of Musammat Thakurain Sonao Kunwar will continue to be recorded in the revenue papers in the same way in which it stands recorded; and she will remain in possession during her lifetime of all the moveable and immoveable properties, of which Rai Randhir Singh was in possession, exercising the powers of gaddinashin (occupant of gaddi) without the power to transfer or charge the estate in any way.

"2. I, Thakur Sheopal Singh, will take the sum of Rs. 12,000 a year at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per month from Musammat Thakurain Sonao Kunwar for all my expenses, and I, Musammat Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, will pay the same. I, Thakur Sheopal Singh, will not interfere with the estate in any way in the lifetime of Musammat Sonao Kunwar. After the death of Musammat Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, I, Thakur Sheopal Singh, or any representative of mine who may be living at that time, will be the absolute owner of all the moveable and immoveable properties possessed by Rai Randhir Singh, and will occupy the gaddi. In case of non-payment of the fixed annual allowance, I, Thakur Sheopal Singh, will have power to recover the same by instituting a suit and attaching the profits and moveable property belonging to Thakurain Sonao Kunwar.

"3. If I, Thakur Sheopal Singh, have to go to any member of the brotherhood, or any rais on the occasion of any ceremony or otherwise, I will have authority to take as much equipage belonging to the estate as I require, and when I go out for recreation, &c., I will take any conveyance I like for my use, Thakurain Sonao Kunwar will have no power to forbid me.

"4. If, on any particular occasion, any indispensable necessity arise in the estate, and it be necessary to take a loan, we, Thakur Sheopal Singh and Musammat Thakurain Sonao Kunwar will, in concurrence with each other, borrow five or ten thousand rupees, and repay the same gradually from the profits of the estate.

"5. I, Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, also accept all the aforesaid conditions. It is therefore prayed that the case may be struck off as a contested one on the basis of this compromise, and the costs incurred by the parties be charged against themselves. This compromise may be embodied in the decree, Musammat Thakurain Shankar Kunwar and Soridat, pro forma Defendants, have been exempted."

Sheopal Singh died on the 27th of July 1899 without issue male, and without having made any disposition by will or otherwise of his interest in the Singra Mau estate. Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, who had been in possession of the estate under the compromise of the 25th April 1896, died on the 20th of June 1904, and thereupon Thakurain Lekhraj Kunwar and Thakur Harpal Singh respectively claimed possession of the estate. On the 6th of July 1904 the Collector of Jaunpur ordered mutation of names in favour of Thakur Harpal Singh; from that order Thakurain Lekhraj Kunwar appealed to the Commissioner of Benares, who on the 2nd of September 1904 dismissed the appeal.

The District Judge of Jaunpur in his judgment in this suit held that the estate had descended to Thakurain Sonao Kunwar under the will of Randhir Singh by an entirely new title, and had thereby lost its character of impartibility, and was no longer subject to the special custom of descent. The District Judge further held that the estate which Sheopal Singh would have taken, had he survived Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, would be self-acquired by Sheopal Singh as arising out of the contract of compromise with Thakurain Sonao Kunwar. As the learned Judges in the High Court rightly observed, the District Judge went behind the compromise and held that the will was a valid will binding on Sheopal Singh, and determined what in his opinion were the rights of the parties before the compromise, the very thing the avoidance of which led to the compromise. The learned Judges in the appeal in the High Court held that the rights of the parties to this suit depended upon the construction of the compromise, but not upon the will of Randhir Singh. With that conclusion their Lordships in this appeal agree. They also held that :—

"Upon the language of the compromise it is not possible to hold that the character of the estate, as it had been handed down from father to son for generations, was changed. As an impartible estate Sheopal Singh laid claim to it, and the compromise provided that as an impartible estate it should devolve upon him."

And they accordingly dismissed the suit.

Their Lordships consider that the High Court put the only possible construction upon the agreement of compromise. Sheopal Singh never admitted the validity of the will as against him, and never admitted that Thakurain Sonao Kunwar had obtained any title under the will. It is obvious from the terms of the compromise that Sheopal Singh consistently maintained that the will was invalid, and consequently that Thakurain Sonao Kunwar had taken no title under it, and that the estate as an impartible estate had vested in him on the death of Randhir Singh. By the compromise Sheopal Singh, reserving to himself an income of Rs. 12,000 a year out of the estate, gave to Thakurain Sonao Kunwar a bare interest for her life in his impartible estate. Sheopal Singh in the agreement of compromise carefully provided that on the death of Thakurain Sonao Kunwar, he or his successor should be the absolute owner of the estate and should occupy the gaddi; that on the occasion of any ceremony, or when he should go out for recreation, he should have the right to take as much equipage and any conveyance belonging to the estate for his use as he should require, and that Thakurain Sonao Kunwar should have no power to forbid him ; and that should it be indispensably necessary to raise any money on the estate by way of loan, he and Thakurain Sonao Kunwar should in concurrence with each other borrow Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 10,000 and repay the same gradually from the profits of the estate. Under the compromise Thakurain Sonao Kunwar had no power to encumber the estate for any purpose, except in conjunction with Sheopal Singh. The terms to which their Lordships have referred are consistent only with the construction placed upon the compromise by the High Court, and there are no terms in the compromise which suggest any other construction. To these terms Thakurain Sonao Kunwar submitted. It may be mentioned that the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur before making his decree of the 27th of April 1896, took the precaution of ascertaining that Thakurain Sonao Kunwar understood the terms of the compromise. The High Court rightly dismissed the suit of Thakurain Lekhraj Kunwar.

The fact that after the compromise the will of Randhir Singh was admitted to probate did not affect the rights of Sheopal Singh.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment and decree appealed against should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

that they were the gomastha and mohurir of the Company, he was of opinion that their unresisted acts of possession raised no sort of presumption that they were not the acts of a trespasser." He was of opinion that in deciding the case it was necessary for the Court to keep itself firmly to a consideration of the question "what was the intention of the parties with regard to the area which the Plaintiffs were to cultivate?" Upon this question, the learned Judge held on the evidence that the story told by the Defendant Company "was a very probable story;" "that the settlement made in 1893 was that a bund was to be built due north from the mouth of the Simultala, that between 1893 and 1900, that bund was made and that in 1900 the Plaintiffs accepted the bund as their western boundary, and any acts of possession they exercised on the land to its west were acts of trespass, which again were not of a character to give rise to a title by adverse possession. In this view he reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit with costs.

The Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession. The Plaintiffs rest their claim to possession on a mourasi mokurari lease of the 2nd October 1901. By that lease the Defendant Company leased to Somaruddi Mollah "1601 one thousand six hundred and one standard bighas more or less of waste land in the Sunderbund Lot No. 130 belonging to the Company and known as Ram Chandra Khal. . . .," the said piece or parcel of land being designated Somaruddi's chak and bounded as follows:—"West by Simultala khal belonging to the Company." The other boundaries are given in the document, but we have no immediate concern with them.

By cl. 12 of the lease it is provided, "that after the Bengali year 1307 the Company as well as the lessee shall have power to cause a survey of the land contained within the boundaries aforesaid, and if the quantity of land is found to be more than 1601 bighas the lessee shall be bound to pay for the excess land at the rate of 12 annas per bigha for ever, and if, on the other hand, the quantity of land be found to be less than 1601 bighas, the lessee shall have remission of rent for ever for the quantity found less at the rate mentioned above, namely, 12 annas per bigha."

The map in the case depicts the land admittedly included in the lease, and thereon marked A, as well as the land in dispute, marked B, which lies to the west of it.

The western boundary mentioned in the lease, the Simultala khal, is also shown on the map, and it will be seen that it lies immediately to the west not of A but of B.

If, therefore, regard be had to the boundaries named in the document, B is included in the lease, and this is what the Subordinate Judge decided. His decision has been reversed by the District Judge.

It has been conceded before us by counsel for the Defendant Company that as a pure matter of construction B would be included in the lease, having regard to the terms of the lease and the character of the property, and no argument has accordingly been addressed us on this point. But it is urged that there are findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court which preclude us from giving effect to the document according to its natural construction.

Now this must mean that the document does not give expression to the common agreement of the parties or that it is otherwise vitiated. To the lower Appellate Court it seemed that the question was "whether the Defendants intended to lease both A and B or only A to the Plaintiffs."

But this cannot be accepted as correct.

Either it must be shown that the document should be rectified, or that it is inoperative as a title to the land in suit. But rectification requires common mistake, and a failure to give correct expression to the common intention of the parties: but no such case was made nor is there a finding of fact to that effect.

To render the lease otherwise inoperative as a basis of the Plaintiff's title in the circumstances of this case fraud would have to be established, but no case of fraud has been raised or found. We, in second appeal, are not entitled to come to findings of fact and the case must therefore be determined on the construction of the lease. But as I have already indicated, it is not disputed that as a pure matter of construction the Simultala khal as depicted on the map must be taken to be the western boundary and we hold this to be the true view. And if that be so, the Plaintiffs' title to the land in suit is made out.

We must therefore reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court with costs throughout.

Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), secs. 6, 33—Sale within 30 days of service of sale proclamation, if nullity or only irregular—Question if one of due service—Act VII, B. C. of 1868, sec. 8—Second appeal—Finding of irregularity and inadequacy of price—Sale if must be held bad as matter of law.

The fact that the proclamation of sale was affixed in the Collectorate less than 30 days before the date of sale, in contravention of the provisions of sec. 6 of Act XI of 1859, does not make the sale a nullity. The sale in such a case is a sale under the provisions of the Act and the restrictions imposed by it on the right of the defaulter to have the sale set aside apply.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th of May 1909, against the decree of Babu S. C. Ganguli, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 3rd of February 1909, confirming that of Babu Trailokhya Nath Shome, Munsif of Cuttack, dated the 5th of August 1907.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted by the Appellants for the setting aside of a revenue sale upon various grounds of which the principal was that the notices under sec. 6 of Act XI of 1859 were not duly served. With regard to this it was alleged that the proclamation of sale was affixed in the Collectorate on the 6th April 1906 and the sale took place on the 9th April 1906, clearly in contravention of sec. 6 of the Act, that the sale in consequence was wholly illegal and liable to be set aside, that owing to this irregularity as also to the fraud of a co-sharer of the Plaintiffs who colluded with the auction-purchaser, the property was sold at a very inadequate value. The Court of first instance held that the notice under sec. 6 "was really duly served at the proper time in a conspicuous part of the Collector's office as provided by law," though the date was erroneously recorded as the 6th April 1906, that the sale was not brought about by fraud, nor was the price fetched inadequate. He accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the sale notice appeared to have been posted in the Collectorate on the 6th April 1906, and the Defendant on whom the onus lay failed to establish that it was in fact posted more than 30 days before the sale ; that the price fetched at the sale was inadequate, but that there was no evidence to show that this was in consequence of the irregularity in connection with the service of the sale proclamation. He affirmed the Munsif's findings on the question of fraud and in the result dismissed the appeal.

Plaintiffs then preferred this second appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—This was a suit to set aside a revenue sale. The sale took place on the 9th April 1906, and the date on which the proclamation is said to have been affixed in the Collectorate was recorded as the 6th April. The Munsif considered that this was a clerical mistake ; but the lower Appellate Court took a different view, and found that the Defendant had failed to prove that the notice was affixed in the Collectorate one month before the date of the sale. He held that this was an irregularity, and he also held that the price realised at the sale was inadequate. But he was unable to find that there was any evidence to connect the inadequacy of the price with the irregularity, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appeals to this Court.

The first point taken on behalf of the Plaintiff is that the omission to post the proclamation of sale in the Collectorate one month before the date of sale (a point on which we are concluded by the decision of the lower Appellate Court) amounts to more than an irregularity, and makes the whole sale entirely null and void whether the Plaintiff was injured or not. This is an argument that has very frequently been used in dealing with these revenue sales, and finds expression in the Full Bench decision in the case of Lala Mobarak Lal v. The Secretary of State (1). In that case the learned Judges held that failure to comply with the provisions of sec. 6 of Act XI of 1859, amounted to more than an irregularity and to an entire illegality, and that consequently the provisions of the Act imposing restrictions upon the rights of persons whose property was sold to relief in the Civil Courts had no application, inasmuch as in such a case there was really no sale at all. The learned Chief Justice thought that in that case the sale in question could not properly be said to be a sale for arrears of revenue within the meaning of the Act; and Mitter, J., held that it was null and void as not being a sale under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. They held, therefore, that the sale in such a case was not a sale at all under the Act, and that the provisions of the Act which imposed restrictions on the right of the defaulter to have the sale set aside had no application.

It appears to me that the whole reasoning on which this decision was based is entirely swept away by the decisions in Tasadduk Rasul v. Ahmad Husain (2) and Gobind Lal v. Ramjanam (3). In the first case it was held that an irregularity under sec. 290, C. P. C., which greatly resembles the irregularity complained of in this case, did not make the sale a nullity: and in the second case their Lordships used these significant and emphatic words:—"In the opinion of their Lordships a sale is a sale made under the Act XI of 1859, within the meaning of that Act, when it is a sale for arrears of Government revenue held by the Collector or other officer authorized to hold a sale under the Act, although it may be contrary to the provisions of the Act either by reason of some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale or in consequence of some express provision for exemption having been directly contravened." It is clear, therefore, that in the opinion of the Privy Council a sale that was marred by an irregularity of this nature was none the less a sale under the Act, and that view appears to me to take away the whole foundation of the reasoning on which the decision in Lala Mobarak Lal v. The Secretary of State (1) was based. It is true that the decision in Lala Mobarak Lal v. The Secretary of State (1) has been followed in subsequent cases, namely, in Janhavi v. Secretary of

GANGADHAR DAS v. BHIKARI CHARAN DAS.

State (4), Sheikh Mohamed Aga v. Jadunandan (5) and Sheo Ratan v. Net Lal (6). But in those cases the learned Judges were dealing only with the question whether sec. 6 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 applied to a case in which notice under sec. 6 of Act XI of 1859 had been served, but had not been served 30 days before the date of the sale, and they held that although the certificate of title given to the purchaser was conclusive evidence that notice had been served it was not necessarily conclusive evidence that the notice had been served in time.

I am myself inclined to think that the question whether the notice is served in time is part of the larger question whether it has been duly served and that notice cannot be said to have been duly served if it has not been served in time. It is not, however, necessary in the present case to come to any decision on this point: for even if the Respondent is not entitled to the benefit of sec. 8, still the Appellant will not be entitled to succeed unless he can show that he has been injured. The learned Judges who decided the cases to which I have referred certainly cited the Full Bench decision as being still in effect. But the only point they were dealing with was whether sec. 8 applied; and their decisions cannot, in my opinion, be taken as authority for holding that in their opinion that decision justified a person whose property had been sold in asking to have the sale set aside simply and solely on the ground that the sale was illegal by reason of the fact that the notice had not been served in time, without proof of injury.

Secondly, it has been urged that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have concluded, as a matter of law, that the inadequacy of the auction price was the consequence of the irregularity to which we have referred. I cannot see, however, that any question of law really arises in this connection. The learned Munsif deals with this matter at greater length and explains more fully why the irregularity could not have caused the insufficiency in the selling price. The learned Subordinate Judge's judgment is one of affirmance. It is not for us to say whether the evidence is or is not sufficient to justify the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge, but I certainly cannot possibly say that he was bound, as a matter of law, to conclude that the inadequacy of price was due to the alleged irregularity. I hold therefore that it is not sufficient for the Appellant to show that the notice was published less than thirty days before the sale, and that he is not entitled to have the sale set aside on that ground alone. As regards the question whether he has suffered by this irregularity we are, in my opinion, concluded by the findings of fact.

The appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is directed against an order by which the Court below has granted a succession certificate to the Respondent in respect of a portion of a debt alleged to be due to her from the Appellant as the debtor of his deceased wife. The Appellant, Mohamed Abdul Hossain, was married to a Mahomedan lady by name
Barfan, the daughter of the Respondent, Sarifan. The amount of the dower is said to have been fixed at Rs. 41,000, and the whole of it was deferred. The lady died on the 24th January 1907, and thereupon the dower debt became recoverable by her heirs, i.e., her husband, her infant son, and her mother. The husband, it will be observed, was thus a creditor as well as a debtor. In 1909 the Respondent commenced an action against her son-in-law for recovery of Rs. 1,000.
She alleged that her son-in-law was possessed of property worth not more than Rs. 1,000, and that, although she was entitled to recover from him one-sixth of the dower debt, i.e., Rs. 6,833-5-4, it would be infructuous to sue him for this large amount. She, therefore, abandoned her claim in excess of Rs. 1,000, and limited the demand to the amount. On the 21st December 1909, she applied for a succession certificate to the extent of Rs. 1,000 only. The son-in-law who appeared to show cause objected to the grant of the certificate on two grounds,

MOHAMED ABDUL HOSSAIN v. SARIFAN.

namely, first, that no certificate could be granted in respect of the share of the debt due to one of the heirs only and, secondly, that no certificate could be granted to the Petitioner, because she had not asked for a certificate even in respect of the entire share of the dower debt recoverable by her. The District Judge has overruled both these objections, and granted a certificate to the Petitioner as prayed. In the present appeal by the objector, the order of the District Judge has been assailed on the two grounds just mentioned, and reliance has been placed upon the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ghafur Khan v. Kalandari Begam (1), in which it appears to have been ruled that no certificate could be granted to one of the heirs of a Mahomedan lady who had died leaving her dower debt unrealized for collection merely of a part of the dower debt of the deceased. The decision quoted appears at first sight to support the contention of the Appellant, but it is not stated whether the dower in that case was prompt or deferred; at any rate, there are observations as to the true construction of sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act which do tend to assist the Appellant. It has been argued, however, by the learned Vakil for the Respondent that the decision is open to criticism and ought not to be treated as a correct exposition of the law.

Sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889—we need quote only so much of it as is applicable to the case before us—provides that no Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or to any part thereof, except on the production by the person so claiming of a certificate granted under the Act and having the debt specified therein. It has been contended on behalf of the Appellant that the section implies that one certificate is to be taken out for the payment of the whole debt due by the debtor of the deceased person, that if the deceased person has left more than one heir, it is not competent for one of the them to apply for a certificate in respect of the share recoverable by him, and that much less can one heir apply for a certificate for a part of his share of the debt. In our opinion, this proposition is too broadly formulated, and if we were to give effect to it the scope of the section would be needlessly restricted. It is to be observed that this section does not define the constitution of the suit for the recovery of the debt due from the debtor of the deceased person; we are not now concerned with the question whether one of several heirs of the deceased creditor is competent to sue for his share of the debt alone or whether he is bound to sue for recovery of the entire debt payable to himself and his fellow heirs joining the latter as Defendants if they are not willing to join as co-Plaintiffs. Whatever the proper constitution of a suit of this description may be, a question which can hardly be answered independently of the nature of the debt, it is clear that the suit need not include a claim for the whole sum due to the deceased at the time of his death, for instance, a portion of the debt may have been amicably paid to the heirs jointly, or amounts paid to different heirs in proportion to their known shares in the inheritance; in such a case it would be unmeaning to hold that the claim must include the whole of the amount due to the deceased creditor. To take another illustration, there is no reason why the heirs should not relinquish, if they so choose, a portion of the claim. If, therefore, a suit for the recovery of the debt need not include the whole of the sum due to the deceased at the time of his death, the question may very well be asked, on what principle can the view be maintained that the application for a certificate must include the whole of the amount due. A certificate is needed to afford protection to the party who pays the debt to the representatives of the deceased person; but to facilitate the collection of debts on succession in this manner does not require that the certificate should cover the whole of the debt if the heirs do not seek to realise the whole. We are, therefore, not prepared to accept the construction placed upon sec. 4 of the Act by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Ghafur Khan v. Kalandari Begam (1). It cannot be disputed that the construction adopted may lead to complications and hardship which could never have been intended by the Legislature. To take one illustration, cases may arise where, as here, one of the creditors stands in such a relation to the debtor (son and father) that he may not be willing to sue at all to enforce his right. On what principle can the other creditor be compelled to take out a certificate for the entire debt? He has admittedly no right to the whole of the debt, and he cannot, under sec. 6 (1) (d), state the right in which he claims the portion in excess of his share. Again he may be quite prepared to furnish security for his own share under sec. 9, but he may not be able, certainly not willing, to furnish security for the sum in excess of his own share which he is by no means anxious to recover by suit. Then, again, one of the creditors as here may be an infant, and he may have a much longer period allowed to him by law for the enforcement of his rights, than to the adult creditor. Why should the latter be compelled to take out a succession certificate in respect of the share of the debt claimable by the infant? If he institutes a suit for this purpose, he may very well be met by the objection that the infant has a legal guardian who is competent to safeguard his rights. It would, therefore, be only reasonable to hold that, a person in this situation is entitled to apply for a certificate for the amount which he seeks to recover. In fact, the argument which underlies the contrary view overlooks the fact that in proceedings for grant of the certificate we are not concerned with the frame of the suit in which the claim is to be asserted. We are concerned only with the representative character of the claimant, and by a summary investigation the Court has to determine whether that character has been established. The grant of the certificate does not constitute proof of the debt, nor does it determine the frame of the suit in which the claim has to be enforced. The certificate only renders unnecessary the trial of the question in the regular suit, whether the claimant is entitled to maintain it as the representative of the deceased. In view of these principles, there can be no room for controversy as to the validity of the order of the District Judge.

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 327 (1910).

In the present case, upon the death of the lady, the dower debt due from the husband became payable to her heirs. The nature of the right of the heirs was explained by this Court in the case of Mahomed Ishaq v. Akramul Huq (2). It was there pointed out by Brett, J., that in the case of deferred dower, a right accruing to a single person from a covenant in her favour does not devolve on her death on two or more of her heirs in several shares; it is not a case in which the cause of action which resided in one person, is by operation of law transferred to a number of parceners who constitute one heir. As the right to the deferred dower becomes enforceable on the death of the wife, the agreement must be taken to be one, between the husband and the wife under which the former undertakes to pay over to the heirs of the latter the money which becomes due after her death. The inference is therefore irresistible that each of the heirs is entitled to sue in respect of his share of the dower debt; in reality, each has a distinct right enforceable by himself though all may jointly sue, because each obtains a share of the whole debt. This view is consistent with what has been recognised as the settled rule almost since the establishment of the British Courts in this country; see, for instance, Ali Buksh v. Kaiem Beebee (3) decided by the Bengal Sudder Court so far back as 1804, where, upon the death of a Mahomedan woman, one of her heirs was allowed to maintain an action for the recovery of her share only of the dower debt. In the case before us, the Petitioner has instituted such a suit; she has further relinquished a considerable portion of her claim because she asserts that as the objector has properties worth only Rs. 1,000 it would be fruitless to obtain a decree against him for a larger sum. It would, in our opinion, be as unreasonable to hold that she is bound to take out a succession certificate for the whole sum as to hold that she was bound to sue for recovery of the entire amount. It has been suggested, however, by the objector that if a decree is obtained in a suit so framed, the infant son who is entitled to a share of the dower debt may be prejudiced. But as already explained, we are not concerned at this stage with the suit for the recovery of the money. The guardian of the infant may, if he so chooses, apply for a succession certificate in respect of his share of the dower debt, and institute a suit on his behalf. But because he omits to do so for obvious reasons, the Petitioner cannot be deprived of her right to recover the money, neither can she be compelled to enforce not merely her own rights but also those of the infant. We may further point out that a certificate cannot in this case be granted for the whole of the dower debt. It is not disputed that the husband united in himself the character of debtor and creditor in respect of his share, therefore, the debt must be deemed to have been extinguished. To put the matter briefly, even if the dower debt was treated as a joint debt there has been a severance, and there is no good reason why in this contingency the interest of the different creditors may not be deemed to have been severed. The view we take is supported by the judgment of Chamier, J., in Akbar Khan v. Bilkisara Begum (4) and of Aikman, J., in In re Indarman (5), though that view is possibly inconsistent with the decision in Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (6). We may add that it has not been disputed before us that a succession certificate is necessary in a case of this description, as laid down in Abdul Karim Khan v. Muqbul-un-nissa (7), which dissented from the case of Nem-

(2) 6 C. L. J. 558 : s c 12 C. W. N. 84 (1907)

Landlord and tenant—Encroachment by tenant—Adverse possession for over twelve years—Tenant if bound to pay additional rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 52.

A tenant is entitled to hold khas land of his landlord upon which he has encroached as part of his original holding, if more than twelve years before the landlord's suit he denied the landlord's right to any separate rent from him in respect of the land and has forcibly in assertion of his claim appropriated the entire crop and continued in possession. The landlords, apart from sec. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, cannot recover additional rents in respect of such land.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CARNDUFF, J.—In the case out of which this appeal arises, the Plaintiffs are some of the co-sharer landlords of Mouzah Begun Kola and the 1st Defendant is one of the tenants. The Plaintiffs' case is that the khas lands of the mouzah were partitioned and that the land in dispute is an accretion to the portion allotted to them, on which this Defendant has encroached and is a mere trespasser. In these circumstances the Plaintiffs seek to eject the first Defendant, or failing in that, to recover from him a fair rent for the land encroached upon. The defence is that the disputed land is a reformation on the site of the first Defendant's original holding, for which he has all along been paying a total annual rental of Rs. 82 to the whole body of landlords, that he has occupied it as part of that holding ever since its reformation 18 or 20 years ago, and that he is therefore not liable to pay any additional rent in respect of it, much less to be evicted therefrom.

The Munsif found that the land in suit

appertained to the first Defendant's original holding as alleged, and that in any event the claim was barred by limitation, because the Plaintiffs had never been in possession of it since its reappearance, whereas the Defendant had for more than 12 years held and openly asserted the right to hold it as a part of the six jamias for which he was paying a fixed rent. The suit was therefore dismissed in the Court of first instance.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the Munsif's decision and gave the Plaintiffs a decree declaring their right to a fair and equitable rent and awarding them mesne profits in the shape of such rent, the rate of which he directed should be determined in execution proceedings. He has found that "there is no reliable evidence, or any evidence worth the name, to show that the disputed land was the alluvion of diluviated lands" of the Defendant's original jamias, and, as a consequence, apparently that it was an accretion to the Plaintiffs' lands. On the other hand, the Plaintiffs have, according to his judgment, failed to show that they were ever in khas possession of the lands to which the disputed land is said to have accreted, and they are, therefore, not entitled to eject the first Defendant; and he has declined to go into the question of limitation, holding that it does not arise, "as the Defendants No. 1 held the land as a tenant."

It appears to me that the lower Appellate Court was in error in thus holding that no question of limitation could arise between a landlord and a tenant in a suit of this kind. If, as was found by the Munsif, the first Defendant more than 12 years before suit denied the landlords' right to any separate rent from him in respect of the disputed land, over and above that already paid by him for his six jamias, and forcibly in assertion of his claim, appropriated the entire crop and thereafter continued in possession, he would, although a tenant, thereby clearly have a right to hold the alluviated plot as part of the original holding; and the Plaintiffs' suit became barred by limitation. In this connection reference may be made to the cases of Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Raja Ramranjan Chakraverty (1) and Raktoo Singh v. Sudhran Ahir (2). The first Defendant might, perhaps, be sued by all the landlords under sec. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 for enhanced rent on the ground of excess land actually held by him: but that is another matter, and the evidence in the present suit was not directed to it.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must therefore be set aside and the case remanded for a further finding on the question of limitation as stated above. The remand is also necessary for another reason, for I think that if the suit is not barred by limitation and a fair rent is to be allowed to the Plaintiffs, that rent must be determined by the Court in the suit and not in the execution proceedings. The costs of remand will be costs in the appeal.

As regards the cross-appeal, it is admitted that it rests on the facts, and the learned Vakil has not pressed it. It, therefore, stands dismissed with costs.

*Legal practitioner, dismissed for misconduct—
Reinstatement on proof of good conduct.*

Case in which a legal practitioner who when yet a comparatively young man had been dismissed from the rolls for misconduct was after five years re-instated on his furnishing certificates showing that during the interval his conduct has been so irreproachable that notwithstanding his previous delinquency he could be entrusted with the affairs of clients and admitted to an honourable profession without that profession suffering degradation.

In re ABIKUDIN (1) followed.

This was an application by a legal practitioner whose name had been removed from the rolls for misconduct, for re-instatement. Their Lordships allowed the application.

Mr. B. Chakraborty and Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Petitioner.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an application for re-instatement by a pleader who was suspended from the practice of his profession, on the 20th December 1905, and subsequently removed from the rolls, on the 8th March 1906, by an order of this Court. The circumstances under which the order in question was made may be briefly narrated. The Petitioner applied to this Court for enrolment as a candidate for appointment in the Provincial Judicial Service. He annexed to his application the certificate of his having passed the Entrance Examination of the Calcutta University, from which it appeared that his age at the time of admission to the examination was 10 years and 3 months. Upon enquiry it was ascertained that his age at that time was 18 years and 3 months, and that the entry in the certificate had been fraudulently altered. The result was that his name was removed from the rolls as stated. At the original hearing, he did not deny that he had been guilty of gross misconduct, and he placed himself entirely at the mercy of the Court. The gravity of the offence, however, was such that the Court declined to make any order short of absolute removal from the rolls, and no suggestion has been made to us on the present occasion that, under the circumstances disclosed, any other order could have been appropriately made. Since the date of that order, however, the Petitioner has been employed as superintendent and manager of the estates of different zemindars; and on the 29th August 1909 he applied to this Court for re-instatement. To the application was annexed a number of certificates by some of the leading pleaders of this Court as also by legal practitioners in the mofussil and zemindars under whom the Petitioner had served, to the effect that since his removal from the rolls he had conducted himself honourably. But the Court declined to entertain the application at that time, on the ground that it was premature; at the same time, it was stated that if the Petitioner so desired, he might renew his application with additional materials after the lapse of five years from the date of suspension. Hence, the present application, to which additional certificates have been annexed; one of these certi-ificates, given by a zemindar of considerable respectability under whom the Petitioner has served, states that his character and conduct have been entirely satisfactory. Under these circumstances, the learned Counsel who has appeared on his behalf has invited the Court to make an order for re-instatement. As pointed out by this Court in the case of In re Abiruddin (1), "the test to be applied to cases of this description is whether the sentence of exclusion, however right, has had the salutary effect of awakening in the delinquent a higher sense of honour and duty, and whether in the interval his conduct has been irreproachable so that notwithstanding the delinquency in early life, he may be safely entrusted with the affairs of clients and admitted to an honourable profession without that profession suffering degradation." In view of the certificates which have been produced and also in view of the fact that when the original offence, although of great gravity, was committed, the Petitioner was a comparatively young man, we think it right to make an order of re-instatement. The result, therefore, is that the application is granted, and the name of the Petitioner restored to the rolls.

PAIMULLAH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

There was an appeal presented on the 26th of May 1911 by the above-named accused against the conviction and sentence passed upon them by Mr. S. P. Sen, Sessions Judge of Dinajpur, under sec. 392, I. P. C., on the 22nd of April 1911.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows: The complainant, Nil Mahamed Pramanik, was a resident of village Khalilpur, within Thana Parbatipur. He was a cultivator but appears to be in tolerably good circumstances in life. He lost his wife in the month of Kartick last, leaving a little son about 3 or 4 years old. He had no other member of his family living with him at his house. On the night of 23rd January 1911 while he was lying down in his bed with his child, he noticed some one striking a light in the verandah of his hut. He enquired who the man was. At that very moment two men sprang upon him seized him and overpowered him. They covered his eyes by a blanket, so that he was unable to see anything.

After the robbers had decamped he noticed that they had left behind three lathies, had broken his padlock and taken away some articles belonging to him. A Sub-Inspector who investigated into the case caught hold of three men, the Appellants in the case, who made certain self-incriminating statements to him, and then pointed out to him certain places where some of the stolen articles had been kept concealed. These 3 men with three others were sent up to the Magistrate on a charge of dacoity who discharged the latter for want of evidence against them but committed the 3 Appellants to the Court of Sessions on a charge of dacoity. The Sessions Judge however altered the charge to one of robbery under sec. 392, I. P. C., and sentenced them to 5 years' rigorous imprisonment.

Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Moulvi Sultan Ahmed, Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal from the judgment and sentence of the learned Officiating Sessions Judge of Dinajpur, who agreeing with both the assessors convicted the accused persons under the sec. 392, I. P. C., and sentenced them to five years' rigorous imprisonment each.

It appears that certain persons entered the house of the complainant at night and having used great violence carried away his money, documents and jewelleryes. The complainant told the Police that he only saw three persons. The Police after making investigation held that there had been dacoity in which at least six persons were concerned and they sent those six persons, among whom were the three present Appellants, up to the Magistrate for trial preliminary to commitment under sec. 395, I. P. C. The learned Magistrate discharged three of these accused for want of evidence and committed the three Appellants to the Sessions under sec. 395 that is for being concerned in dacoity. The learned Sessions Judge without assigning any reason amended the charge to one of robbery, thereby, before hearing the evidence, changing the character of the charge altogether; and now that we know that the presumption that the Appellants were dacoits or robbers rests solely on the finding of stolen property in places pointed out by them, it is very apparent how the Appellants must have been prejudiced by this unauthorized amendment; for granted that there were six persons engaged in this affair and that only three of them entered the house the fact that these Appellants knew where the property stolen was hidden is obviously not sufficient to convict them of being concerned in robbery. Indeed it could not be sufficient to convict them under sec. 411, for as was held by the Allahabad Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Gobinda (1), where the sole evidence against the person charged with an offence under sec. 411 consisted of the fact that the accused had pointed out the place where some of the stolen properties were concealed in the field of another person, this was not in itself sufficient evidence to support a conviction under sec. 411, I. P. C. With that ruling we are in entire agreement and particularly in the circumstances revealed in this case; for it appears that the junior Sub-Inspector, a very energetic young man anxious to distinguish himself, had been told on the night of the 30th January by a man named Gopi, who was himself one of the persons sent up for dacoity that the property would be found at the places apparently where the three accused pointed it out on the 30th January, and it was he who named these three accused as persons who could point out the place where the property was. That is all these persons did on the next day. The Sub-Inspector of Police has been very improperly allowed to state in his evidence that one of these persons admitted his guilt, and he makes a further statement that "from the statement of this accused Paniulla I could understand the exact nature of the offence committed by the accused." This ought never to have been allowed to go before the assessors and must have prejudiced their minds considerably.

Be that as it may, there is no reason to doubt that these three Appellants did know where Gopi and his accomplices, persons probably who committed the robbery, had hidden these articles. But that is not in itself sufficient to convict them even under sec. 411, far less is it any evidence that they took any part in any robbery or dacoity. There being no other evidence to connect them with the crime unless it be the statement of Umardi who made some enquiry about the jewellery of the complainant's deceased wife shortly before the occurrence—and we do not think that this in itself would carry the case any further—it would be wholly unsafe to uphold the conviction in this case, and certainly it would not be our duty to order a retrial to be held under sec. 395, where the circumstances show that there is really no evidence that these persons committed dacoity at all.

As we have already pointed out they cannot be convicted under sec. 411 on the evidence on the record, and the conviction and sentence passed upon them under sec. 392 being set aside they must be acquitted and released.

Appeal allowed:

Accused acquitted.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE DELEGATION BILL WHICH WAS INTRODUCED into the Supreme Legislative Council last autumn at Simla and referred to a Select Committee on the 10th of January last is a measure of far-reaching consequences and involves questions of policy of the greatest magnitude. The Bill purports to be a general Delegation Act empowering the Government of India to delegate executive powers or duties to any other authority or class of authority by notifications. This is a method of departmental legislation which is of comparatively recent growth and which has been condemned in England by legal and public opinion alike.

IF THIS METHOD OF LEGISLATION IS UNSUITABLE in any other connection it is hardly defensible in connection with a measure involving such wide issues as the decentralisation of the executive powers of the Government of India or any of the local Governments. Decentralisation is a matter which cannot be profitably discussed in the abstract. Whether it would be for good or evil can only be discussed with reference to the details, as to what powers are sought to be given away and to whom, what safeguards are provided against abuse of those powers, what constitution is laid down for the authorities who are entrusted with those powers and such other matters. Yet it is exactly these questions which go to the essence of the subject that are left to be decided by the executive and to be promulgated by them by notification. Barring a few reservations which are claimed by the Hon'ble the Law Member to secure the safety of the rights and liberties of the subject, the whole subject is entrusted to the judgment of the executive. What the members of the Legislative Council are now called upon to decide is whether it is necessary that some unknown powers should be delegated to some unknown subordinate authorities with equally unknown reservations and safeguards. As the utmost importance attaches to the particular powers sought to be transferred and upon the details of the mode in which those powers ought to be exercised, such matters ought not to be decided except under the full blaze of public discussion.

THE SCHEME OF LEGISLATION NOW ADOPTED HAS no doubt one important element apparently differentiating it from other measures of such summary legislation in that the notification would, previous to its coming into operation, be circulated amongst members of the Council who will have the opportunity of bringing the whole matter before the Council by way of a resolution. This however does not mean much. The notification will represent the settled opinion of the executive and it is very little likely to be unsettled by a discussion in the Council which would naturally take the form of a criticism. And even if a resolution is passed by the Council it has no more force than a recommendation. There is a great deal of difference between deciding on a complicated measure and then throwing it open to criticism and introducing such a measure in Council tentatively where friendly criticism and well-founded arguments are more likely to carry conviction.

IN THIS VIEW OF THE MATTER WE CANNOT regard the safeguard provided in this matter as quite sufficient. And, reading through the entire speech of the Law Member, we cannot find any convincing reason for adopting this course in carrying through such an important administrative measure. To frame an elaborate Bill would no doubt be a difficult task, and its discussion wearisome to some Hon'ble members, but that is no reason why a responsible work of such magnitude should be so summarily disposed of. If patience and labour is wanted it should be ungrudgingly bestowed on the work by all concerned and no plausible excuses sought for shirking the responsibility to the public. The strain upon the secretariat, upon which the learned Law Member dwelt, is what the magnitude of the work certainly demands. And we should think that the best way of proceeding in this matter would have been to entrust the drafting of the Bill to a special Committee just as was done in the case of the Civil Procedure Code. We are not sure that that course may not even now be adopted with advantage.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO A VERY INTERESTING article on the Historical Boundaries of Bengal which we publish below. In this connection, it may be added that according to the Mahabharata, the Mahananda formed the boundary between the kingdom of Anga on the west and Pundra or Paundravardhana, the country of the Pods, whose capital was at Mahasthan in Bogra District. In the beginning of the thirteenth century the south of the district is said to have constituted part of the kingdom of Lakshman Sen whose capital was at Nadia (see Imperial Gazetteer, Ed. 1908, Vol. XX, p. 414). Purnea originally belonged to Bengal, the river Kosi was the eastern boundary of the sub-province of Behar. (See Ibid, p. 413).

LOOKING AT THE MAP OF THE DISTRICT, THE River Mahananda may afford a suitable eastern boundary of the district, instead of the river Nagar which forms its present eastern boundary to a considerable extent, that is, dividing the district of Purnea from the district of Dinajpur. This river upon leaving Purnea proceeds towards Maldah, and from that point to the southern limit of the eastern boundary of Purnea there is no river or any other natural line of demarcation separating the district from Maldah. If the linguistic test be applied, it will be found that the majority of the people inhabiting the part of the country east of the Mahananda is Bengali speaking. The major portion of the people within the jurisdiction of thana Manibasi, and a considerable portion of those living within the jurisdiction of thanas Gopalpur, Kasba and Ranigunj, are Bengali speaking, while the people of the eastern part of the country lying within the jurisdiction of thana Kishanganj speak a corrupt form of the Bengali language.

TO INCLUDE AREAS WHICH ARE PRACTICALLY Bengali speaking, the new eastern boundary line may follow the Mahananda from the point where it leaves the Darjeeling district down to a convenient point towards the west of Ranigunj: from there, a suitable line may be drawn running in a south-easterly direction and meeting the river Panar and thence following that river for some distance and thence, leaving it, following a line passing through the neighbourhood of Saifgunj to the river Sowrah and then following that river to its point of confluence with the Ganges. Roughly speaking, this line may be taken as the line of division. But there are Pergunnahs through which it is possible this line may pass, and it is expected that necessary modifications will be undertaken in order to avoid the splitting of a Pergunnah belonging to one zemindar, into two, one portion remaining in one Province and the other in another. If it is possible to mention a complete Pergunnah as practically wholly Bengali speaking, Pergunnah Kankjole may be mentioned as such. It lies on the north bank of the Ganges, commencing from Maldah.

HISTORICAL BOUNDARIES OF BENGAL.

I. PURNEA:—(a). Purnea a frontier Province in pre-Mahomedan times partly Anga and partly Pundra with the Mahanadi forming the boundary between the two. "The earliest inhabitants of the District of Purnea are believed to have been Angas to the west . . ." who "are generally grouped with the Bengal tribes in the epics."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Purnea, p. 32.

"The earliest inhabitants of the District of Purnea are believed to have been Pundras to the east . . . The Pundra land appears to have been bounded on the west by the modern Mahananda which separated it from Anga. On the east by the river Karatoya" which runs through the present District of Rungpur and Bogra.—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Purnea, p. 32.

(b). Purnea also a frontier province in Subah Bengal during the Mahomedan rule, the Kosi forming the boundary between the Subahs of Bengal and Bihar:

"During the Moghul rule Purnea formed a great military frontier province under the rule of a Faujdar . . . subordinate to the Subahdar" (of Bengal). "The old Kosi . . . was at this time the boundary between Bengal and Bihar and continued to be the boundary till the 18th century."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Purnea, p. 35.

The District "formed in fact the northernmost sarkar of that province (i.e., Bengal) under Moghul rule, the river Kosi . . . being the boundary between it and the sub-province of Bihar."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Purnea, p. 1.

(c). The "eastern portion" of the District "more properly belongs to Bengal."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Purnea, p. 1.

II. BHAGALPUR:—(a). In pre-Mahomedan period, the portion of the Bhagalpur District south of the Ganges formed part with the District west of the Mohananda (i.e., western Purnea) of the kingdom of Anga which formed a buffer state between Pundra and Banga on the one hand and Mithila and Magadh on the other, the western portion of the present Monghyr District formed the eastern-most boundary of the kingdom of Magadha, while the portion of the District of Bhagalpur north of the Ganges formed part of the ancient kingdom of Mithila.

"At the dawn of history the district west of the Mahananda apparently formed part, with Bhagalpur, of the kingdom of Anga."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Purnea, p. 33.

"Of the portion south of the river some parts were comprised within the limits of the old Hindu kingdom of Anga."

"North of the river Ganges the kingdom of Mithila lay, the old boundaries of which were on the east, the Kosi river."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Bhagalpur, p. 26.

"At the dawn of history, the present site of the town of Monghyr was apparently comprised within the old Hindu Kingdom of Anga, the capital of which was at Champa near the modern Bhagalpur, while a portion of the west of the present District Monghyr was included within the limits of the kingdom of Magadha."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1909), Monghyr, p. 28.

(b). In Mahomedan times Bhagalpur more or less corresponded with the area where Chhika-Chheki is spoken (viz., most of the present District of Monghyr, Sonthal Parganas and Bhagalpur south of the Ganges): essentially a frontier and military province between Subahs Bengal and Bihar, extending west to east from the western portion of District Monghyr to the Rajmehal Hills.

"In 1765 A. D. when the East India Co. was invested with the Dewani Bhagalpur District was a huge tract in the east of Sarkar Mungir, Subah Bihar, lying altogether to the south of the Ganges except the Parganah of Chari. The boundaries were rather indeterminate on the south and west."—Bengal Gazetteer (1911), Bhagalpur, p. 1.

"In 1580, the military revolt of Bengal against Akbar commenced" and the contending parties were encamped at Monghyr and Bhagalpur.—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Bhagalpur, p. 1.

"Akbar's troops are known to have marched through Bhagalpur when invading Bengal and in the 2nd war against the Afghans Man Singh made Bhagalpur the rendezvous of all the Bihar contingents. . . . The town was subsequently made the seat of an imperial Fouzdar or military Governor."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. II, p. 165.

(c). Even in early British times an unsettled frontier province south of the Ganges between Bengal and Bihar and subject to inroads of hill tribes: Formal transfer of the District from Subah Bihar to Bengal: Subsequent changes of jurisdiction, gradually dismembering the District towards west, south and east in order to form the separate District of Monghyr and Sonthal Parganas and enlarging it towards North; the present limits are purely artificial.

"In 1765, the country to the south and west was . . . unsettled owing to the inroads of hill tribes."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. II, p. 165.

"It was alleged that in 1765 the Parganas of Bhagalpur, Colgong and Chari had been transferred from Subah Bihar to Subah Bengal" but "in 1773 the District was formally severed from Subah Bihar and annexed to the Dewani lands of Bengal."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Bhagalpur, p. 137.

In the "adjustment of the zilla and city jurisdictions of the entire provinces under the Bengal presidency in 1806." Bhagalpur was included within the jurisdiction of the provincial and circuit court of Murshidabad and not of Azimabad or Patna.—See Fifth Report of the Select Committee on the affairs of East India Co., p. 41.

"The area of the district was 8225 square miles at the time of Buchanan Hamilton's survey (1812 A. D.) including as it did then, most of the modern district of Monghyr and the Sonthal Parganas south of the Ganges; since then the southern portion has been greatly restricted in area and the northern portion has been greatly extended." As to the details of these changes, vide Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Bhagalpur, pp. 1-2.

"The District as it at present exists is the outcome of many changes, its limits being purely artificial."—Bengal District Gazetteer (1911), Bhagalpur, pp. 1 and 26.

III. SONTAL PARGANAS:—Sonthal Parganas made up partly of the Chhika-Chheki area of ancient Bhagalpur and partly of purely Bengali areas of Birbhum and Murshidabad.

Large portions of the District of Murshidabad were severed from it in 1787 and included in Birbhum.—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. I, pp. 440-441.

"In 1765, the District of Birbhum was more than double its present size . . . some years later considerable tracts to the west were cut off and now form part of Sonthal Parganas."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. I, p. 279.

"Until the formation of the District of Sonthal Parganas in 1855, the northern half formed part of Bhagalpur, while the southern and western portions belonged to Birbhum."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. II, p. 219.

IV. MANBHUM AND DEALBHUM:—Early history uncertain; in Mahomedan time part of Jharkhand or forest tract; up to 1805 estates contained in the present district were attached some to Birbhum and some to Midnapore.

"Manbhum District forms the first step of a gradual descent from the table-land of Chota Nagpur to the Delta of Lower Bengal. The undulation so characteristic of Chota Nagpur becomes pronounced and level tract of considerable extent are of frequent occurrence."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. II, p. 375.

"We have no authentic records of this part of the country till Mahomedan times, when it was regarded as part of Jharkand or forest tract."

"The territory comprised in the present District Manbhum was acquired by the British with the grant of the Dewani of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa in 1765. Up to 1805 the estates contained in it were attached, some to Birbhum and some to Midnapore," when "they were formed with a few others into a separate District called the Jungle Mehals." In 1835 the District of Jungle Mehals was broken up "and portions were transferred to Burdwan while the remainder with the estate of Dhalbhum, detached at the same time from Midnapore, were formed into the District of Manbhum." In 1846, "Dhalbhum was transferred to Singhbhum."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. II, p. 378.

Dhalbhum was originally part of Midnapore."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. II, p. 397.

V. NORTH BALASORE:—Once a part of Midnapore, the two together forming the Mahomedan division known as Sarkar Jaleswar.

"Midnapore District nearly coincides with the Mahomedan division known as Sarkar Jaleswar which had for its capital the town of that name now situated in Balasore District."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. I, p. 301.

"The southern portion of the District of Midnapore, now the Tamluk and Contai Sub divisions, was at first administered by a Salt-Agent and Collector at Hizili. Tamluk was transferred to Midnapore in 1789. But Hizili remained a separate Collectorate up to 1836, when a quarter of it was amalgamated with Midnapore and the rest with Balasore."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), Bengal, Vol. I, p. 302.

VI GOALPARA:—"Little is known of the history of the earlier Hindu dynasties. After the English obtained the Dewani of Bengal in 1765, Goalpara continued to be a frontier outpost." "The permanently settled portions of Goalpara originally formed part of the District of Rungpur." The Eastern Duars portion of the District "was ceded to the British after the Bhutan war of 1865." "In 1867, the whole of what is now Goalpara District was included in the Commissionership of Cooch Behar." "The District was transferred to

(VII). SYLHET:—"The District was at one time divided into 3 petty kingdoms two of which were included in Bengal when the British obtained the Dewani of that Province in 1765. The District originally formed part of the Dacca Division of Bengal, but in 1874 it was placed under the charge of the newly appointed Chief Commissioner of Assam."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), E. B. and A., pp. 420-421.

VIII. THE PLAINS OF CACHAR:—"The two portions of Cachar, viz, the plains and the hills are as different from each other as possible. The plains portion where Bengali is spoken by 66 per cent. of the population came under the British Government in 1830 up to which it was owned by Hindu Kings."—Imperial Gazetteer of India (1909), E. B. and A., p. 442.

B. K. LAHIRI.

SCHOOLS OF LAW

IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF HINDU LAW.

To Sir Henry Maine amongst European scholars must be given the credit of having first drawn prominent attention to the importance of schools of law based on literary fosterage in the history of the development of all laws and notably of Hindu law. "No one treatise," he says, referring to the Hindu Smritis, "and still less the aggregate of treatises, is the production of an individual man or an individual mind. The literature is the gradual growth of schools of learned Brahmins which are still found in India." [Early Law and Custom, p. 13] A consideration of the leading Smriti works leaves little doubt that they were the works of different schools dealing with an originally identical set of authorities to which have been added from time to time changes in laws and customs as they took place.

The course of history anterior to the Smriti is veiled in a great deal of obscurity. Theoretically all law is deduced from Sruti. But the Vedas and Brahmanas afford but very scanty materials for law. And it is more likely that the reference to the Vedas was meant not to the extant Vedic texts but to a hypothetical Eternal Word which must embrace all knowledge actual and possible. In the early stages of society law was not only given as divine command but was very likely believed to be such. The Themistes of Homer were not deliberate frauds but may well have been believed to have been momentary inspirations. As society developed further, the existence of a body of divine law regulating human affairs must have been received as a ruling hypothesis, and when Smriti texts—books or the Mimamsa aphorisms refer to Sruti as the source of all law they very likely referred more to this hypothetical body of laws than to the extant revealed literature.

A privileged class which was the repository of this revealed law gradually grew up everywhere and the schools of Rishis in India were in this respect analogous to the College of Pontiffs in Rome and the Brehon Law Schools in Ireland referred to by Maine. [Early History of Institutions, p. 242]. But the fact of these schools being repositories of law was no fiction. They must have had traditional accounts of the law amongst themselves and they alone had access to a knowledge of the indicia by which the divine law had to be ascertained in a case of difficulty. These rules gradually got reduced into text books which were looked upon with as sacred veneration as the divine law itself and passed off as recollections (Smṛiti) of divine law communicated to the historic or traditional saints and recorded by, sometimes, a remote successor to whom it was handed down through a succession of teachers. Once so recorded these text-books became a new starting point for law.

But the function of jurisconsults was not yet at an end. On the other hand their position in the administration of divine law had become so well established that the Smṛitis gave them a definite function in the administration and development of law.

It is natural to expect that once the written law came into vogue each school should come forward with its own manual of "Remembered Law" (Smṛiti). We must in this connection recollect that by the time the Smṛitis were compiled the Aryan race had spread over a great part of the Gangetic valley and there was not one great empire, but a number of independent kingdoms at constant war with each other. Within each kingdom too, in those days of constant annexations and conquests, many different peoples may have lived governed by different laws and customs. While these divergences led to the promulgation of many codes of law from many schools, each having authority within its own sphere of influence these very facts must have ultimately led to a limitation of the Smṛitis. It would not be difficult to suppose that each of these codes had authority somewhere at some time. Schools of Pontiffs must have been largely scattered about. And people anxious to know the law would very likely repair to the nearest one. Thus definite localised spheres of influence of different schools would tend to grow up. We have instances of such influence within historic memory. In pre-British days and even for a great part of the British rule it was usual in cases of difficulty in Western Bengal to go to the Pundits of Nava-dwip, while Eastern Bengal people usually referred to Vikrampur. Similarly there was a Maithil school drawing its inspiration from the scholars of Mithila and a Benares school drawing its inspiration from Benares. Even to this day in matters of ritual and social regulation which have not been taken up by our law Courts these centres of learning are sometimes referred to, though the change in the times has greatly affected the authority of these scholars and the facilities of communication greatly interfered with their local authority. It is thus not at all unlikely that before the promulgation of the codes the schools of law had each a more or less definite sphere of influence. When the codes were issued, therefore their authority may easily have extended to the original sphere of influence of the schools which originated them.

But when different bodies of revealed law came to be followed in different parts of the same kingdom, there was naturally a tendency to a fusion of the rules by reason of each of the codes being a body of divine law preserved by tradition. There would be a natural tendency to refer to one code to supplement the deficiencies of another and gradually to the equal reception of all codes. This required interpretation to reconcile texts where possible and to lay down an order of precedence in the codes. The age of codes would thus be followed by the age of interpretation—and it is to the work of interpretation that we find the later schools of law addressing themselves. A necessary preliminary of such work would be a law of citations similar to the Valentinian Law in Rome and we already find in the later Smṛitis an attempt to enumerate the authoritative text-writers and also to settle their order of precedence.

Two other sources of new law which were in operation even before the Smṛitis were promulgated and which must have had important influence on the development of law must here be noticed. These are the decrees of the King and the regulations of village or caste communities. We can trace the legislative power of the King in its origin as well as its decay in the Smṛitis. Manu's code bears ample evidence that the King's legislative power was yet new [Manu VII, 3—13]. After this it evidently went on growing.

But the growth of this legislative power of the King was effectually checked at an early stage partly owing to the peculiar circumstances of ancient Indian society when the King had always to be on the look out for military occupations, and partly by the growth of the power of Brahmins who had the most complete control over the administration of justice. At first the King was no doubt the sole judge. But he soon took into his counsel the Brahmin assessors (सभासदाः) who knew the law. Later on the administration of justice was entirely relegated to Brahmin officials called Pradvivaks so much so that Narada could lay down that even when the King administered justice, he should follow the decision of the Pradvivak (प्राद्विवक्तामते स्थितः). When this stage was reached Smṛiti law as interpreted by persons versed in the law became absolutely supreme and King-made law held a very subordinate place, except where masterful monarchs like Chandragupta could enforce them against the Brahmins. The Pontiffs of ancient India thus regained their old influence in the administration of law in the cities.

It would be well to remember that the law of the Smṛitis was mainly the law of cities. Outside the cities law and justice was entirely in the hands of the people. The King's officers were there no doubt for the purpose of protecting property and generally exercising police functions, but for the rest all matters rested with the people themselves. Caste and trade guilds as well as village corporations made their own rules which the King and his officers respected and violation of those rules was punished by the King [Manu VIII, 219, 220; Yajn. II, 183]. In later times the regulation of these communities was entrusted to particular individuals versed in law, preferably Brahmins (Yajn. II, 191). So that outside the cities and in caste communities within the city itself all judicial and law making power ultimately vested in these jurisconsults.

Thus we find that at the end of the age of the Smṛitis, the practical legislative power had vested in a body of professional lawyers who interpreted the law and to whom people as well as the King referred questions of law. The Smṛitis attempted to incorporate in themselves all laws and customs actually in force in the country. For the rest it was left to be determined, when matters came to a law suit, by the lawyer Judge (प्राह्विवक्ता) and the Brahmin assessors, and in other cases by the Brahmins in whom had vested the regulation of affairs of a community. But these did not exhaust the authorised interpreters of law. In the Smṛitis themselves we find provision for private persons giving authoritative opinions on points of law. "A body of four persons versed in the Vedas and Dharma," says Yajñavalkya, "or a body of persons knowing the three Vedas is a Parshat. What a Parshat says is law; so even is what is said by one supremely learned in spiritual lore (अध्यात्मविद्वान्)." (Yajn. I, 9).

Here we find the entire foundation of the history of later Hindu law. Schools of law were in all cases of difficulty referred to for their solution. These schools were also those from which the assessors of the King's courts might be recruited. They gave authoritative opinions on all questions of law, customs or ritual. Gradually there happened in India exactly what happened in Rome. The jurisconsults began to write connected treatises on law instead of contenting themselves with giving opinions on particular matters. These works in their turn were used by the lawyers of respective localities and gradually came to be counted as authoritative text-books in the localities within the sphere of influence of that particular school. Some even obtained a wider celebrity. Soontimes came when these text-books came to be cited as authorities rather than the Smṛitis just as much as Roman jurists were cited in Rome in later days. The age of Nibandhas and Commentaries definitely displaced that of the Smṛitis.

The authority of schools of law which thus culminated in the promulgation of authoritative text-books of law received an accession from private law being all but divorced from Sovereign authority during the Mahomedan rule over the greater part of India. The rulers did not care and the subjects did not appeal to them to regulate the civil rights of the people. Police and Revenue were the two chief civil functions of the Pathan and Moghul Sovereigns of India. And if in the chief cities the power of the Kazi ever made itself felt on the private law of the Hindus, outside them there was not the faintest influence exercised by Mahomedan sovereignty over Hindu law. This remarkable fact is aptly illustrated by the fact that while Arabic terms permeate the land laws, the usages and tenures as well as the prædial relations of the people not one Arabic term is to be found in the rest of the Hindu private law. In the Hindu law as now administered in British India, which took its start from the law as the English found in vogue at the beginning of the administration, there is no trace of Mahomedan influence except in the doubtful case of Wills which may possibly have to some extent been prompted by Mahomedan Law.

During the whole of the Mahomedan rule the schools of jurists at the great centres of learning held unabated sway over the people. They were however the last Court of Appeal resorted to only when local resources failed. Besides them there were scattered all over the country Pundits, maintained by liberal grants of land or other income by the opulent people of the locality, who solved legal problems for the people for the asking and whose vyavasthas accepted by the great semi-feudal landlords settled most disputes. At times learned Pundits would travel all over the country, enter into disputations with all learned men in the locality and if possible come out with a country-wide renown as having defeated all scholars everywhere. On these occasions as well as on others there would be meetings in which questions of law, philosophy logic, &c., were settled and academic problems discussed.

All this kept alive the traditions, knowledge and influence of the Brahmin Pundits and they maintained their power as the sole expositors of Hindu law till the British Government took over the administration of Hindu law. They developed the law as well as interpreted and applied it. The Hindu law which is now applied in British Indian Courts is the law as moulded by these great schoolmasters and not the law as laid down in the Smritis.

Thus from its very inception Hindu law has been developed and moulded by a number of schools of law whose influence was unbounded and whose traditions were uniform. The influence of the schools of law in the development of Hindu law has been greater than has generally been supposed and it may be safely asserted that the history of Hindu law is the history of these schools.

THE INDIAN REPORTS. By the late T. V. Sanjiva Row, M. Subramaniam and M. V. Krishnaswamy. Vols. IV & V. The Law Printing House, Mount Road, Madras, South India. 1910 & 1911.

In these volumes the compilers have been trying to complete the series of reprints started by the late T.V. Sanjiva Row and interrupted before completion by his death. In the first of these volumes which is designated "Supplement to Moore's Indian Appeals" all the decisions of the Privy Council in cases from India up to the end of 1872 and not reported in Moore's Indian Appeals Series, and some decisions of 1873 have been collected from various reports including Acton, Knapp, Moore's P. C. Series, etc. A consolidated subject index for all four volumes of Privy Council decisions appears in this volume. The index virtually constitutes a digest of the legal propositions laid down in the cases reported, and should prove very useful. In the 5th volume appear decisions of the Allahabad High Court reported between 1866 and 1868 in the Agra High Court Reports, Vols. I to III.

Occupancy holding, non-transferable—Sale in execution of a money decree—Consent by co-sharer landlord.

The decree-holder applied for the sale of a non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a money decree on the allegation that the landlords had given their consent. The raiyat judgment-debtor objected and the Munsif found that the consent was not by all the landlords but by co-sharers to the extent of 15½ annas only; and made an order for the sale of that share of the holding. That order was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

Held—That the orders of the lower Courts were correct.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE and N. R. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 264 OF 1911. DIBAKAR CHATTERJEE AND OTHERS, Appellants v. HAZARI MUL BABU, Respondent. 13th December 1911.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 2—Adjustment—Estoppel against provision of law.

The Opposite Party was a decree-holder, who obtained an instalment decree against the Petitioners. Instalments were to be paid twice a year, from 1314 to 1325; and there was also a stipulation that if a certain estate, called Lat Chandrabati, was sold out of Court at an adequate price, the sale-proceeds should be paid to the decree-holder and credited against the decretal amount. The two instalments due in 1310 were not paid in full.

Held—That the meaning of the parties was, that if two instalments were not paid in full, that is to say, if any portion of those two instalments remained unpaid, the decree-holder should be entitled to execute his decree.

On default being made, the decree-holder took out execution against all the property covered by the decree and for the whole balance due to him. The judgment-debtor made no objection, but he asked that Lat Chandrabati only might be sold. This request was agreed to by the decree-holder. Lat Chandrabati was sold, and the sale-proceeds, amounting to Rs. 10,000, were credited against the decretal amount. The decree-holder then took out execution against the remaining property. The judgment-debtor objected to the execution and he said that he made those two defaults in 1310 in collusion with the decree-holder; that it was arranged between the parties that he should make those two defaults, in order to give the decree-holder an opportunity of executing his decree, so that Lat Chandrabati, instead of being sold out of Court, according to the stipulation in the compromise, should be sold in execution.

The Subordinate Judge held that the judgment-debtor was not entitled to put forward the agreement at all; and he rejected the objection and allowed execution to proceed. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Held—That an arrangement of this kind was an adjustment of the decree in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure; it was incumbent on the parties to certify it to the Court. As it was not certified it could not be recognized by Court.

Quare—Whether a mere agreement to grant time would be an adjustment within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There could be no question of estoppel against the precise terms of a provision of the Code.

Mitakshara—Debt—Decree for mesne profits against grandfather and father—Interest, liability for—Decree-holder's remedy.

The Respondent obtained a decree against Ajodhya and Damodar, the grandfather and father respectively of the Appellant, for recovery of possession of land, with mesne profits, costs and interest. The mesne profits were subsequently ascertained and decreed in 1902 against Damodar and Ajodhya. At that time all three members of the family were in existence. The Respondent took out execution of the decree; and the case ultimately came up to High Court in appeal. The Court below had excluded certain evidence and the case was remanded in order that an opportunity might be given to the Appellant to show that the debt with respect to which execution was sought was not one for which he was liable. On remand the Court below came to the decision that the Appellant was liable and his finding was returned to the High Court.

Held—That the decree-holder was entitled to interest, as the decree was both against the father and grandfather.

That the decree-holder need not proceed first against what was the share of father and grandfather in the ancestral property at the time of the decree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 104 (c)—Appeal from order—Modifying an award.

The Respondent brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya for recovery of money due on handnotes and bahikhatas from the Appellant. By consent of parties the dispute was referred to three pleaders of Gaya Court for arbitration. The arbitrators gave their award in favour of the Plaintiff and also allowed him costs against the Defendant, who preferred objection to the award on various grounds alleging amongst others fraudulent suppression of facts, and misconduct on the part of the arbitrators; but all his objections were overruled excepting that the Subordinate Judge held that the arbitrators had no authority to award cost to the Plaintiff and that the award should be modified to that extent. The Subordinate Judge however himself awarded costs to the Plaintiff by the same order by which he modified the award (under sec. 13, Sch. II, C. P. C.). Against the order of the Subordinate Judge the Defendant preferred the above appeal to the High Court challenging the award on the merits. On the application of the Respondent the appeal was set down for early hearing and a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay from the order except as to the costs.

Held—Under sec. 104 (c), appeal only lay against the order of the Court below so far as it modified the award only, and no appeal lay against the order so far as it confirmed the award. The appeal as regards granting costs was also dismissed.

Mineral rights—Permanent tenures, grant of, if conveys underground rights—Mogali Brahmottar grants—Proof of permanency—Original tenure split up—Character of tenancy if altered.

When certain tenures which were described as Mogali Brahmottar were shown to have existed since before the permanent settlement and it appeared that the same rents had always been paid for them and that they were freely transferable :

Held—That the tenures were at least permanent tenures.

That it was not correct to view such tenure-holders as owners of the land subject to a rent charge.

The holder of a permanent tenure in the absence of all evidence of the terms of the lease should not be presumed to own the underground rights.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The case for the Plaintiff was that the village in suit was a mal village of his zemindari which was held by Defendants Nos. 5 to 35 as ordinary tenants. They leased it to the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4, who again leased it to the Defendant No. 1, the Lachipur Coal Company. It was contended that the mineral rights did not belong to the tenants but remained in the Plaintiff and therefore this suit was brought in which the relief claimed was, generally that the Plaintiff's rights to the minerals, &c., should be declared and that the Defendants should be prevented from exercising any such rights. The defence is briefly that the village is a mogali brahmottar village given to the predecessors of the Defendants long before the permanent settlement and that the mineral rights belonged to the brahmottardar.

(1) I. L. R. 36 Cal. 287 : s. c. 13 C. W. N. 410 (1909).

RAJA JYOTI PROSHAD SINGH DEV v. GEORGE MATHEW DARBY.

The suit was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge and the Plaintiff appeals.

The two principal points for decision are whether the brahmottardars are at least permanent tenure-holders and, secondly, whether, if so, the mineral rights belong to them or to the Rajah of Pachete, the Plaintiff in the case.

The learned Vakil for the Appellant lays great stress on the evidence that the rent has varied. It cannot be disputed that the land was granted to the Brahmins before the permanent settlement. It seems to us to be of little importance whether there were originally three grants or one. If there was originally one grant, it was certainly divided into three before the memory of any of the witnesses. But this would not in any way affect the permanent character of the tenancies. The case of Udoy Chandra Karji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (1) to which reference has been made proceeded on the special wording of sec. 50 of the Tenancy Act and can have no application to a tenancy which had been divided long before that enactment. Nor is this a case to which sec. 50 can have any application. Nor do we think the fact that the Brahmins pleaded in certain rent suits that the rent had been split up of any importance. The vital point for decision is whether a permanent tenure was given to the Brahmins and it makes little or no difference whether the whole village was originally given by one grant or lease or by three.

The first piece of evidence on which the Respondent relies to prove variation of the rent is Ex. 1 filed by the defence. This was a statement filed by the then Rajah in 1197 (1790—91) showing the villages and their jamas in his chakla. This showed 27 mal, 12 talabi debutter, 45 talabi brahmottar and some other villages. Against Panchgechia, the village in suit, the jama is shown as Rs. 25-2-0. It is argued that this is the rental due to the Rajah from the villagers. This argument is grounded on the facts that the Rajah has only been able to recover Rs. 14-12 as rent from Nowdiha, a village appearing in Ex. 1 a little below Panchgechia with a jama of Rs. 14-12-0; and, secondly, on a statement by one of the Brahmins, Ramdhan Misra, to the effect that as the Rajah had filed the paper himself it must represent the actual rents of the village. It seems to us, however, that there can be no doubt that the jama mentioned is the revenue payable to Government. The Appellant has by consent filed three other papers, a goshwara of 1201 (1794—95) filed by the Rajah, revenue sale-proclamation of 1797 and a Civil Court sale-proclamation of 1807. The first two show the sadar jama, that is to say, the Government revenue of Panchgechia to be Rs. 26-3-15; and clearly this could not be so if the rent receivable from the tenants was only Rs. 25-2-0. The rent of Rs. 14-12-0 decreed with respect to Nowdiha must probably be due to some mistake, while as to the statement of Ramdhan Misra, it is clear that his opinion as to what these papers show is quite valueless.

The three papers above referred to show however that the rents received by the Rajah from the villages amounted in the case of Panchgechia to Rs. 39-3-10 and it is urged that this at any rate shows that the rent, which is now Rs. 60-14-0, has been altered. But we are unable to accept this argument. The statements relate to nearly 100 villages in Pargana Shergarh but, throughout, the sadar jama bears a steady proportion of two-thirds to the rental, with inconsiderable variations of a few annas. This shows beyond doubt that there is some definite relation between the figures of the two columns. And as the rental cannot possibly have been assessed according to the Government revenue it follows either that the revenue was assessed on the rental, or that the column of the rental was filled up so as to correspond with the revenue without any regard for the actual facts. The first supposition is obviously the most probable and it follows that as the Government revenue, for which the Rajah would be responsible, bore a direct proportion to the rental, the Rajah had the strongest inducements to estimate the latter as low as possible. In these circumstances it seems to us impossible to hold that these statements by the Rajah are conclusive evidence against the Brahmins, who had nothing to do with them, of the rent then payable by them. Another document on which reliance is placed is a thoka, said to be of 1218. This is a loose page of zemindari accounts showing the rent due from the 6 annas share which is said to be the share of Moniram Upadhyaya. This document does not appear to us convincing. It purports to be signed at the top righthand corner by Moniram. But the whole body of the document seems to be in the same handwriting, including an agreement by one Sobharam to pay a part of the rent due; though why the tenant should write his landlord's account is by no means apparent. There is no other evidence worthy of detailed consideration to show that the rent has varied.

It is however for the Defendants to show that the rent has not varied and their evidence on this point must be considered. Their case is that the tenure is divided into three parts, vis., the seven annas with a rental of Rs. 24-6-0, the six annas with one of Rs. 31-8-0 and the three annas with one of Rs. 5. As regards the rental of the 6 annas they rely on a receipt of 1817, and another of 1825 which show the rent to be Rs. 29-9-0, a sum which would in the present coinage amount to Rs. 31-8-6. The first receipt may not be of much value but the second seems to us a trustworthy document. It purports to be granted by a krok sasawall; that is to say, a revenue-officer in the position probably of a nazir or bailiff placed in charge of an estate when it was under attachment or sequestration for default in payment of revenue. There are three witnesses and the appearance of the document is in its favour. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted this document as trustworthy and we think rightly.

As regards the seven annas share the Defendants rely principally on an old judgment of 1808. This is a copy produced by the Defendants which bears undecipherable seals and is dropping to pieces. It is argued that it is not shown to be a certified copy and that no attempt has been made to produce the original. It appears from the judgment in Biojanath Bose v. Durga Prosad Singh (2) that no old records of the District of Manbhum are extant and we do not think that the absence of the original is fatal. The Subordinate Judge did not believe that this document was forged and we think he was right. The document shows that the rent of the 7 annas was 22-8-0 sicca or Rs. 24 in currency, that 26 had been paid and that the tenants of the 7 annas were entitled to a refund of 3-8-0. It is suggested that this document and Ex.

K, above referred to, even if genuine may be and probably were records of collusive transactions intended to create evidence. There is nothing however to show that the Defendants were under any necessity to create evidence until more than half a century later.

As regards the 3 annas share there is no old evidence on either side except the thoka of 1218 to which we have referred.

It cannot be disputed that in 1879 the above rents of 24-6-0 and 31-8-0 and 5 were definitely raised in a suit between the parties and accepted by the Munsif, and that since then the same rents have been paid. That gives a period of 23 years before the cause of action in this suit during which the Plaintiff has apparently been compelled to acquiesce in these rents. If he were now to bring a suit under the Tenancy Act for an enhancement of rent, sec. 50 of the Act would render it almost impossible for him to succeed. That section does not, of course, apply to a suit like the present, which is not under the Act, but the conduct of the Plaintiff in allowing his right of enhancement under the Tenancy Act to be extinguished for all the practical purposes of that Act, justifies the inference that he knew that that supposed right had no real existence or in other words that the rent was fixed in perpetuity.

Although much evidence has been given, that described above appears to us to be all that has much probative force on the question whether the rent has varied, and on it we feel no doubt that the rent has always been the same.

It is not disputed that the interest of the Brahmins has been transferable. They have dealt with it as their own and their transferees have been recognised by the landlord. This fact too is a strong indication that the tenures are permanent.

Taking these facts into consideration, namely, that the tenures are described as mogali brahmottar, that they have existed since before the permanent settlement, that the rents have always been the same, and that the tenures are freely transferable, we have no doubt that the Brahmins were at least permanent tenure-holders. This being so the next question that arises is whether they are entitled to the mineral rights. It appears to be well-settled in England that a tenant for life or for years has no right to work unopened mines, Clegg v. Rowland (3), Campbell v. Wardlaw (4); and this despite the case of Messrs. Gordon, Stuart & Co. v. Tikaituni Scoba Koware (5) has been accepted as good law in India in Prince Md. Buktyar Shah v. Rani Dhojamonni (6). See also Tituram Mukerjee v. Cohen (7). The question remains whether the position of a tenant in perpetuity is any better in this respect than that of a tenant for life or for years. It was held in Kallydas v. Monmohini (8) that the landlord continues to have a reversion in the property and this was cited with approval in Abhiram v. Shyama Charan (9). Nor does the fact that the tenure would escheat to the Crown in default of heirs [Sonet Kooer v. Himmat Bahadoor (10)] really negative the supposition that such a reversion subsists. If this is so it is difficult to see why there should be any difference in principle between the lessee for years and the lessee in perpetuity, when nothing is known or can be inferred about the intentions of the parties at the time of the inception of the lease. If the opening and working of new mines in the case of a lessee for years is waste, it would seem to be the same ultimately in the case of a lease in perpetuity, though the injury is more distant. In either case the tenant might destroy the whole subject of the tenancy so that when the landlord came to sell it for arrears of rent, he might find that there was nothing to sell. It has been argued that the effect of Abhiram v. Shyama Charan (9) has been weakened by the decision in Shyam Chand v. Ram Kanai (11), but the former case is still binding upon us. Reliance has been placed on the decisions in Shama Churn v. Abhiram (12), Megh Lal v. Raj Kumar (13) and Brajanath v. Durga Prosad (2). The first case does not help the Respondents much. It contains an observation, rather than a considered opinion, that a permanent lease, including "all rights of various kinds" would transfer minerals. There are no words of that kind here and the decision was reversed on appeal though on other grounds. In the next case it was held that a permanent lease of land mai huq haquq would transfer the minerals. This is much more in the Respondents' favour, as the vague and general words mai huq haquq add really but little to the effect of the lease. Still there is nothing here but a permanent tenure without those words or any words, and therefore the case is not really a decisive authority. In the third case it was held that certain Digwars were permanent tenants, and therefore were entitled to the mineral rights in the absence of express reservation. This case no doubt goes the whole length of the Respondents' contention but we are informed that it is under appeal. Moreover the learned Judges relied principally on the decision in Sriram v. Hari Narain (14), which has now been reversed on appeal to the Privy Council.

It has been argued that the Brahmins are more than tenure-holders, that they are absolute owners subject to a rent charge, that the transfer to them was not a lease but gift burdened with a condition such as the Hindu law recognises. The distinction seems to us too fine to be appreciated. We know nothing as to what the intentions of the parties were at the inception of the tenancy. But in times within our knowledge they have been treated as tenants and sued for rent and cesses, and here apparently made no objection.

A great deal of evidence has been given to show that other persons in the position of the Defendants have been dealing with the mineral rights as their own, without apparently any objection by the Rajah. This evidence is open to the obvious objection that we do not know exactly what the position of the executants of these sales and leases was. It may conceivably be the case that they had sanads, which showed that all the rights in the land had been transferred to them. Still no doubt this mass of evidence cannot be put aside so easily. It is not likely that many holders of brahmottar villages are in a better position than the Defendants in this suit with regard to the possession of title-deeds, while it does seem clear that many of them have been dealing freely with the underground rights, and some of the leases go back to 1860 and one to 1858. This undoubtedly gives the impression that the brahmottardars generally have been dealing with the underground rights but it is impossible to base a definite conclusion on an impression of this nature. Even in Panchgechia, where the evidence of such transactions goes back to 1880, the Sub-Judge finds that although the Defendants from time to time gave leases to speculators in coal the enforcement of the leases was too casual and intermittent to justify an inference of adverse possession with sufficient continuity and publicity. We do not know in how many other cases the state of affairs might be found to be the same and it may be that in most of the villages covered by the leases, etc., it may still be open to the Rajah to claim the underground rights. Accepting therefore the fact that the brahmottardars of the villages of the zemindari have been dealing with the mineral rights as their own for some time, we do not think that in reality that fact greatly affects the question of law that we have to decide, namely, whether the holder of a permanent tenure in the absence of all evidence of the terms of the lease should be presumed to own the underground rights.

It appears from the evidence of Haradhan Sarkar that in 1877 the then Rajah of Pachete bought the subsoil rights in the village of Kultara from certain mokuraidars under the holders of the village. The witness says that a quarter of the village was mal and three quarters bhatottar. It is urged that bhatottar land stands in exactly the same position as brahmottar land, a Bhat being a species of Brahmin. It is argued therefore that this purchase amounts to an admission that the mineral rights belong to the Brahmin tenants. But here too we do not know if the Bhats had any sanad, showing what had been leased to them. The village Kultara does not appear in the goshwara papers and the argument rests on the unfounded assumption that every tenancy of a Brahmin in the Pachete Raj is necessarily of the same nature and extent. Moreover the question whether permanent tenants without written leases are entitled to the minerals is a point of law quite doubtful enough to take all value out of the admission. Even if it be held that the minerals belonged to the Rajah, he might very prudently have fortified himself by a purchase of whatever rights the tenants might have.

On the other hand, it appears from Ex. I that in 1858 the Bengal Coal Co. executed an agreement in favour of the Assistant Commissioner at Purulia agreeing to pay rent for their coal land. Apparently the Pachete Estate had then come under the management of Government. This is evidence, so far as it goes, that the landlord was also recognised as having the right to dispose of the minerals: and probably the fact is that the Coal Co. thought it prudent to take settlement from both sides.

It has been faintly argued that the Pachete Raj is impartible and that at the time that these tenures were granted it was generally understood that an owner of an impartible estate could not alienate. But it is not proved that the estate is impartible [Anand Lal v. Gurood Narain (15)], and it is impossible to contest the alienation on that ground when it is clear that more than 50 villages in a single Pargana were alienated in this way in the 18th century, and the validity of the alienations has never been questioned.

It appears to us that the mineral rights must be regarded as the property of the Rajah. The appeal will accordingly be allowed. The Plaintiff will get a decree declaring his title to the mineral rights and for an injunction restraining the Defendants from working mines in Panchgechia. He will be entitled to his costs of both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Specific performance of contract—Contract executed in exercise of power given by will—Will found false—Enforcement against executant as heir—Delay in suing, not amounting to waiver or acquiescence, if bar to relief.

The widow of the deceased owner jointly with another who as executor had obtained probate of a will alleged to have been left by the deceased executed an agreement for sale of land, the widow purporting thereby to exercise a power given by the will to assent to conveyances executed by the executor. The probate subsequently having been revoked, enforceable against the widow to the extent of her interest.

HORROCKS v. RIGBY (1) relied on.

Delay which did not amount to waiver, abandonment or acquiescence and in no way altered the position of the Defendant did not disentitle the Plaintiff to sue for specific performance.

KISSEN GOPAL SADANEY v. KALI PROSONNO SETT (2) followed.

MOKUND LAL v. CHOTAY LAL (3) referred to.

In the special circumstances of the case specific performance of the contract was refused.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of May 1909, against the decree of Babu Sri Hari Lahiri, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 29th of April 1909.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Dwarka Nath Mitra and Bijoy Kumar Bhattacharyya for the Appellant.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Babus Joy Gopal Ghose and Provas Chandra Mitra for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

COXE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell certain land and buildings for Rs. 2,500. The contract was executed on the 19th February 1905 by the 1st and 2nd Defendants. The 1st Defendant is the widow of one Madhab Ghose and the 2nd Defendant was named as executor in a will said to have been made by Madhab

Ghose, of which at the time of the contract the 2nd Defendant had obtained probate. The probate however was subsequently revoked. It is said that on the 1st April the Plaintiff paid Rs. 12 to have the document registered and Rs. 20 to a pleader to identify the 1st Defendant. The sum of Rs. 20 however was returned and it was said that the document could not be registered on the 1st April for want of time; and before it could be registered the 1st Defendant on the 3rd April executed a registered conveyance of the property in favour of the 4th Defendant, who is the servant and is said to be the benamdar of the 3rd Defendant. The Subordinate Judge has accepted the Plaintiff's evidence of payment of Rs. 1,551 and has given a decree directing that the 1st Defendant shall execute a conveyance in his favour on his depositing Rs. 949 the balance of the purchase-money. The Defendant No. 4 appeals. It is perfectly clear however that the 3rd Defendant is really the contesting Defendant and Appellant in this case and that the 4th Defendant is a mere name. The learned Vakil for the Appellant also informs us that he does not urge that he had no notice of the Plaintiff's contract. The only point therefore that has to be decided is whether the nature of the contract is such that it ought to be specifically enforced.

The first point taken is that as this contract was executed by both Defendants, and was executed by the 1st Defendant as exercising the power given to her by the will to assent to a conveyance by the executor, it cannot be enforced against her as the widow of a Hindu intestate. But it seems to us perfectly clear that this contention cannot prevail and that if the contract ought to be specifically performed, it can be enforced against her to the extent of her interest. There is no case exactly in point, but that of Horrocks v. Rigby (1) quoted in Fry on Specific Performance certainly lends support to this view, and reference may also be made to sec. 15 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877.

Next it is argued that the Plaintiff is disentitled to specific performance by reason of his delay. But it is quite evident that there has been nothing in his conduct that could possibly be regarded as evidence of waiver, abandonment, or acquiescence and that the Defendant's position has been in no way altered by the delay. That being so, we think, that the delay is immaterial, following Kissen Gopal Sadaney v. Kali Prosonno Sett (2) cited by learned Counsel for the Respondent. The decision in Mokund Lal v. Chotay Lal (3) on which reliance is placed for the Appellant is not in our opinion inconsistent with this view.

Next it is urged that a certain alteration in the agreement was fraudulently interpolated and is fatal to the agreement. The alteration consists of the words 'or severally' in the covenant that the executors will jointly or severally execute a conveyance. The words have been added between the lines and do not appear in the draft of the agreement. The witness, Naresh chandra Mitra, a pleader of the Alipur District Court, however swears that these words were inserted before the execution of the document, and the learned Subordinate Judge evidently regards him as quite a trustworthy witness. This being so we are not prepared to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge's view of the matter.

But with regard to the payment of the sum of Rs. 1,500 out of the consideration, we are not prepared to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge. This payment is not supported by the evidence of Nares Mitra and it appears to us quite irreconcilable with the Plaintiff's deposition in the criminal case, which followed after the execution of the Defendant's kobala. It is not likely that the Plaintiff would be willing to advance so large a sum before the execution of the conveyance and on the whole evidence we feel no doubt that this money was never paid.

The only point that remains is whether the contract should be specifically enforced under the circumstances of the case. It was suggested at the close of the argument that the first Defendant, being a purdanashin woman, was entitled to special protection. In my opinion this point ought not to be allowed now. It was never suggested in the pleadings, the issues, or the grounds of appeal, nor was any argument upon it addressed to us in the course of the opening speech of the learned Vakil for the Appellant. The first Defendant has not appealed and the Appellant's defence in the former suit was that she had plenty of well-wishers and advisers. Moreover in the former suit the 1st Defendant was financed and supported by the Plaintiff. No doubt this assistance was not disinterested but when the 1st Defendant accepted his assistance in her suit knowing that that assistance was given on the ground of her contract with him, she is hardly entitled now to plead that that contract was not explained to her. Nor indeed is there any reason to suppose that she desires to raise any such plea. That being so, it seems to me unjust to allow the Appellant to raise it at the eleventh hour for his own benefit.

At the same time I am inclined, though with some hesitation, to agree with the view which is strongly held by my learned brother that the contract ought not to be specifically enforced. There can be no doubt that the 1st Defendant was in the greatest straits when she made it and although the evidence of the value of the land seems to me too indefinite to justify a decided conclusion that the consideration was inadequate, yet it is difficult to believe that the sum of Rs. 2,500 is a fair price for 35 bighas of land with two houses in Howrah. And the false plea of the Plaintiff that he had paid Rs. 1,500 disentitles him to any consideration. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should succeed and accordingly it will be decreed and the suit dismissed, the parties bearing their own costs throughout.

TRUNON, J.—In so far as the first four points taken in this appeal are concerned it is unnecessary for me to add anything to the judgment delivered by my learned brother.

On the remaining question whether in the circumstances of the case the contract should be specifically enforced it is to be observed that the Plaintiff admits and indeed comes into Court with the assertion that the Defendant No. 1 is a purdanishin lady. That being so, even in the absence of any specific issue, on the general issue now under consideration it was in my opinion incumbent upon the Plaintiff to give strict proof of good faith and to show that in the transaction he seeks to enforce, the widow had competent and independent advice, and that the terms of the bargain are fair and equitable. Now the husband of Defendant No. 1 had died in May 1904 and on the 19th of February 1905 when the agreement on which the Plaintiff relies was executed all the properties left by the husband were under attachment in two suits brought against the widow. The claims in these two suits amounted to some Rs. 8,000. One, it appears, having been originally disposed of ex parte has been revived and is still pending. The other was found to be false and vexatious and has been finally dismissed.

The agreement recites the difficulties in which the widow was placed, states that by reason of the suits no one can be found to purchase the properties or any portion thereof at a fair price, and that being thus helpless she in order to defray the expenses of the litigation and for the benefit of her husband's estate agrees to sell the whole of it to the Plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 2,500.

In such circumstances it was in my opinion essential that any one dealing with this widow should satisfy himself and show that she had taken competent advice both as to the manner in which she should meet the suits and also as to the provident character of the arrangement she proposed to enter into. But the evidence shows that while the Plaintiff had the advice and the assistance of a learned pleader of the Alipur Bar this illiterate or semi-illiterate purdanishin widow, then under the influence of Defendant No. 2, was left to rely upon the advice of this layman who it has been shown was not a faithful or loyal guardian of her interests.

When we next proceed to enquire into the prudence of the arrangement she was making we find that while professedly seeking to save the estate of her husband she sells the whole of it, and even the burden of defending the pending suits is not undertaken by the purchaser but is thrown upon the widow.

The estate proposed to be sold consists of some 35 bighas mainly garden or orchard land situate in Sulkea, a suburb of Howrah. On two of the plots stand pucca buildings and some 20 bighas constitute lakheraj or rent-free holdings. Defendant No. 4 swears that the land is worth Rs. 10,000 and that a portion has been sold for Rs. 3,000. There is no rebutting evidence and it is significant that Plaintiff whose own garden adjoins one of the plots finds himself compelled to say that he knows nothing of the value of land in Sulkea or of this land in particular. He made, he says, no inquiries about the price obtainable for these properties in the open market and has not even now ascertained their true value. This evidence coupled with the recitals in the agreement leaves no doubt that the consideration offered by the Plaintiff is grossly inadequate.

I am thus satisfied that in the transaction which he seeks to enforce the Plaintiff-Respondent was not acting in good faith and took improper and undue advantage of the difficulties of the 1st Defendant.

Moreover he has come into Court with the false allegation that he has paid the bulk of the purchase-money.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the contract set up by the Plaintiff is not one which should be specifically enforced in his favour and further that he is not entitled to the refund of the Rs. 51 actually paid and I therefore agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Appeal allowed.

Joint property, exclusive possession by a co-sharer—Where possession wrongful at its inception, co-sharers if may recover joint possession.

The Defendant was in wrongful occupation as a tenant of a plot of land belonging to the Plaintiffs and other co-sharers. Subsequently the Defendant purchased the share of one of these co-sharers and thus became interested in the land as a proprietor. In a suit by his co-sharers for joint possession of the land in suit, Held—That the Plaintiff's occupation being originally wrongful the subsequent acquisition of joint title did not entitle the Defendant to resist the Plaintiff's claim for joint possession.

WATSON & Co. v. RAM CHUND DUTT
(1) distinguished.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd of December 1909, against the decree of Babu Umesh Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 8th of September 1909, confirming the decree of Babu Bepin Behary Das Gupta, Munsif at Naraingunge, dated the 1st of March 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Sarkar for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit by the Plaintiffs to recover joint possession of a small plot of land which originally formed part of the bed of a tank. Some of the Defendants held a jote as tenants under the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers, and they encroached upon the land in dispute in 1306, B. S., and it is found that they did so notwithstanding the protests of the owners. The Plaintiffs are the owners of 15 as. 17½ gundas and 3½ krantis share. The Defendant No. 1 in 1312 acquired a very small share (2½ gs. and ¼ kt.) of the taluk to which the disputed land appertains. He did not deny the title of the Plaintiffs in the present suit but pleaded that he has been in occupation of the land only since his purchase of the share of the taluk and that as he is a co sharer the Plaintiffs cannot obtain ijmali possession. Both the Courts below have found that the Defendant No. 1 did not come into possession of the land for the first time since he became co-owner as pleaded by him but that he and the other Defendants had encroached upon the lands long before he became a co-owner, and decreed the suit. The Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

Upon the findings arrived at it must be held that the Defendants were holding the lands as trespassers until the Defendant No. 1 purchased the share of the taluk in 1312. They were in possession for only 6 years before 1312 and therefore could not have acquired the right of a tenant by prescription. Nor could they force themselves upon the landlord as tenants against the wishes of the landlords. The Defendants do not claim the land as tenants. Their possession at its inception was wrongful, and having regard to the finding that they took possession notwithstanding the protests on the part of the owners, their possession must be taken to have been in denial of the title of the owners. The question is whether under these circumstances the Defendant No. 1 can resist joint possession on the part of the Plaintiffs merely because he has now acquired a small share in the taluk. The learned pleader for the Appellant has contended on the authority of the case of Watson & Co. v. Ram Chund Dutt (1), that as he is a co-sharer in occupation of the land without denial of the Plaintiff's title, the Plaintiffs are not entitled to joint possession: We think, however, that, that case is distinguishable from the present case. In that case Watson & Co. were in rightful possession of the lands as tenants under leases from all the co-owners. After the expiry of the leases granted by some of the co-owners (the Plaintiffs in that case) they went on cultivating indigo on the khas lands as they had been doing during the continuance of all the leases. The Plaintiffs who were co-owners gave notice and attempted to enter upon the land to carry on operations inconsistent with the work already being carried on by Messrs. Watson & Co., and were resisted and prevented by them from such attempted entry. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for joint possession or for injunction because the "resistance was made by the co-sharer in occupation simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable enjoyment of the land in good husbandry and not in denial of the other's title." They also held that "where land was held in common between the parties and one of them was in the act of cultivating a part of the land, which was not actually used by the other, it would not be consistent with the rôle of justice, equity and good conscience to restrain the former from proceeding with his proper cultivation."

In the present case there was no peaceful taking of possession by a co-sharer. The Defendants took wrongful possession as trespassers notwithstanding the protests of the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers, and want to retain it because the Defendant No. 1 has subsequently become a co-sharer. The Plaintiffs could undoubtedly have turned out the Defendants from the land had the suit been brought before the Defendant No. 1 became a co-owner. Under the circumstances would it be consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience to allow the Defendants to keep the Plaintiffs out of joint possession? We think not. Had the Defendant No. 1 taken possession of the land peacefully after he had become a co-sharer as pleaded by him the case would have fallen within the principle of the case of Watson & Co. v. Ram Chund Dutt (1). As it is, we are unable to hold that the decrees of the Courts below awarding joint possession to the Plaintiffs are wrong and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal on behalf of the

(1) 13 C. W. N. 71 (1908).

(2) 1 L. R. 23 Bom. 63 (1897).

(5) 1 L. R. 31 Cal. 985 (1904).

Plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The case for the Plaintiff is that the Defendants are trespassers and are consequently liable to be ejected. The claim is resisted on the ground that the Defendants have an occupancy tenancy in respect of the disputed land and are not liable to be ejected so long as that tenancy continues in operation.

The Court of first instance negated the defence and decreed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision. He has found upon the evidence that the second Defendant is an occupancy tenant of the land in suit and is therefore not liable to be ejected.

The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and on his behalf the decision of the District Judge has been assailed as erroneous in law because founded upon evidence not legally admissible against the Appellant. This evidence consists of recitals in four documents, namely, first, a deed of sale executed on the 15th January 1856 by the proprietor of the land towards the east of the disputed land in which he described the western boundary of his parcel as the tenanted land of the predecessor of the present second Defendant, Gopal Tewari : secondly, a mortgage deed executed on the 21st November 1892 in which the proprietor of the land towards the east and south of the disputed land described the western and northern boundaries of his parcel as the tenanted land of Gopal Tewari : thirdly, a conveyance executed on the 4th July 1903 by the proprietor of the land towards the north of the disputed land in which he described the southern boundary of his parcel as the tenanted land of Gopal Tewari : and, fourthly, a conveyance dated the 1st September 1862 which contains a similar recital. The District Judge has found that these documents are genuine and he has relied upon these statements in support of the allegation of the Defendants that Gopal Tewari was in possession of the disputed land as tenant in respect thereof from 1856 to 1903. On behalf of the Plaintiff it has been argued that he is not a party to any of these deeds and that consequently the statements in question are not admissible in evidence as against him. On behalf of the Defendants-Respondents reliance has been placed upon secs. 11, 13, 32, cl. (2) and 32, cl. (3) in support of contention that the statements in question are admissible in evidence.

In so far as sec. 11 is concerned, we are clearly of opinion that it does not assist the Respondents. Stress is laid mainly upon the second clause of sec. 11 which provides that facts not otherwise relevant are relevant if by themselves or in connection with other facts they make the existence or non-existence of any fact in issue or relevant fact highly probable or improbable. Now the fact that the proprietor of a neighbouring piece of land in describing the boundary of his parcel stated that the land of Gopal Tewari was situated on that boundary is not relevant for the purposes of the present litigation. The Respondents cannot succeed unless they get the statement itself admitted in evidence, the mere circumstance that the statement was made would not be sufficient for their purpose. Consequently sec. 11 of the Indian Evidence Act is of no avail to the Respondents.

In so far as sec. 13 is concerned the Respondents are in a similar difficulty. That section provides as follows : "Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant :—

"(a) Any transaction by which the right or custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognised, asserted or denied, or which was inconsistent with its existence :

"(b) Particular circumstances in which the right or custom was claimed, recognised, or exercised, or in which its exercise was disputed, asserted or departed from."

Here the transactions evidenced by the four deeds mentioned were in respect of lands other than the land now in dispute. Consequently it cannot be suggested that there was any transaction or particular instance by or in which the right now in question was claimed, recognised, asserted or denied. Sec. 13, therefore, is of no avail to the Respondents.

The Respondents finally fall back upon the provisions of sec. 32. Here reference is made in the alternative to cls. (2) and (3). Now cl. (2) provides that when a statement has been made by a person of the character described in the opening sentence of that section in the ordinary course of business it is admissible in evidence. It has been contended that when a vendor executes a deed of sale or a mortgagor executes a deed of mortgage he is bound to describe the boundaries of the land transferred and that consequently when he describes the boundaries he may be taken to have made a statement in the ordinary course of business. This interpretation of the expression "in the ordinary course of business" is however opposed to the decision of this Court in Sheonandan Singh v. Jeonandan Dusadh (1), where the learned Judges followed the view accepted in the case of Ningawa v. Bharmappa (2). As at present advised, we see no reason to dissent from the view adopted in the cases just mentioned. We must

(1) 13 C. W. N. 71 (1908).

(2) I. L. R. 23 Bom. 68 (1897).

consequently hold that the statement in question does not fall within cl. (2) of sec. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. The question now arises whether cl. (3) is comprehensive enough to cover the present case. That clause provides that when a statement is against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it, it is admissible in evidence. It has been argued that this clause does not cover the statements in question, because they were made by persons who were in no way concerned with the land now in dispute and that consequently it was immaterial for those persons to know who was in occupation as tenant of the land stated to be lying on the boundary of the lands conveyed or mortgaged. In our opinion this contention is not well-founded. As pointed out by Sir Richard Couch in the case of Raja Leelanund Singh v. Lukhpattee Thakoorain (3) the statement must be taken as a whole. Now the statement in these deeds that the transferrer was owner of the land conveyed or mortgaged and that he was either extinguishing his interest in the land by an absolute sale or placing a restriction or it by way of a mortgage, was undoubtedly one against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it. Consequently the statement as a whole would be admissible in evidence. This view is supported by the case of Ningawa v. Bharmappa (2) which was accepted as good law in Haji Bibi v. Aga Khan (4). The case of Abdul Aziz v. Ebrahim (5) also points to the same conclusion, though the question there was simpler, because there the landlord of a property stated that there was a tenant in occupation of it, a statement clearly in derogation of his proprietary interest. We may add that the view we take may be supported from a somewhat different standpoint. When a person in the position of the vendor or the mortgagor in the deeds mentioned, transfers the property, and describes that the property conveyed or mortgaged is limited by certain boundaries he makes a statement as to the limited extent of that property. From this point of view it may fairly be contended that the statement is one against his proprietary interest because it is equivalent to an admission that his proprietary interest does not extend over any land outside the boundaries mentioned. In fact, to take a concrete illustration, in the event of a dispute between the transferee and the owner of the neighbouring land as to the boundaries between the two parcels, the statement made in the conveyance or the mortgage would be admissible in evidence as against the maker of it. From this point of view also, we think that the case is covered by cl. (c) of sec. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. We are of opinion therefore that the decree of the Court below cannot be assailed as erroneous in law.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 28, November.

Arbitration—Award going beyond terms of reference, if valid—Party benefited if may repudiate award—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1884), sec. 525—Acceptance of award in part, if permissible.

The Plaintiff's right of passage along a pathway across the Defendant's land being disputed by the latter, the question of its existence was referred to an arbitrator who found that the pathway did in fact exist as alleged, but he laid out a new pathway in lieu of it, holding that if the thoroughfare was allowed to continue great inconvenience would be caused to the Defendant.

Held—That although an arbitrator is allowed greater latitude than Courts of law in departing from rules of practice which Courts have adopted for general convenience, and an arbitrator's award is not open to review on the merits upon grounds of error of law as well as of facts, an arbitrator cannot go beyond the precise questions submitted.

But even though the arbitrator may have exceeded his authority, it is not open to the party benefited by the award to take exception to it on that ground, and the Defendant therefore was bound by the award in this case.

In a proceeding under sec. 525, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), it is not competent to the Court to direct the award to be filed in part. If the award is bad in part, the Court should refuse the application to file it altogether.

This was an appeal against the decree of S. S. Skinner, Esq., District Judge of Gaya, dated the 30th of July, 1909, confirming that of M. W. Ahmed, Esq., Munsif, Gaya, dated the 22nd of March 1909.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is directed against a decree by which the Courts below have concurrently ordered the partial enforcement of a private arbitration award. The parties to the proceeding are related to each other, and had a dispute as to a pathway for passage from the land of the Plaintiff and his brother to a village towards the north of the property of the first Defendant. There were also disputes between the parties in respect of other matters to which detailed reference is not necessary for our present purpose. On the 16th July 1908, the matter in controversy which were set out in full detail in a registered instrument of submission, were referred to the arbitration of a gentleman by name Dilkeswar Singh. He made his award on the 31st August 1908. On the 14th September following, the Plaintiff applied under sec. 525 of the Code of 1882 that the award be filed in Court. The Defendants resisted the application on every conceivable ground; they questioned the validity of the submission, imputed misconduct and partiality to the arbitrator, alleged a revocation of the submission before the award was made, and contended that the award had determined a question not included in the submission. The Courts below have overruled all the objections, except one as entirely unfounded and have directed the award to be filed in part. The result has been that a modified decree has been made in favour of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and on his behalf the decree has been assailed in so far as it modifies the award. The arbitrator found in substance that the pathway alleged by the Plaintiff and denied by the Defendants did as a matter of fact exist, but he held that if the thoroughfare was allowed to continue great inconvenience and injury would be caused to the first Defendant. In this view the arbitrator laid out a new pathway in lieu of the disputed thoroughfare. The Plaintiff was satisfied with the award in this respect but the Defendants objected that the award was in excess of the authority of the arbitrator, inasmuch as the matter covered by the submission was the existence or otherwise of the disputed pathway, and it was beyond the competence of the arbitrator to substitute in lieu thereof a new pathway. This view has found favour with the Courts below, and as we have already explained they have declined to direct the award to be filed in so far as the pathway is concerned. The propriety of this decision has been assailed before us on two grounds, namely, first, the award is not beyond the scope of the submission as upon a liberal construction thereof the whole question of a right of way must be taken to have been laid before the arbitrator, and, secondly, that in any view the Defendants were not competent to take exception to the award, as it was essentially in their favour.

In support of the first ground that the submission should be liberally construed so as to enable the arbitrator to do substantial justice, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Knox v. Symmonds (1), Prosser v. Goringe (2), Delver v. Barnes (3) and Fuller v. Fenwick (4). It may be conceded that the arbitrator is not bound by mere rules of practice which Courts have adopted for general convenience, and he has greater latitude than Courts of law to do complete justice between the parties according to equity and good conscience. In this view, Courts are never astute to entertain technical objections to awards. In other words as Lord Halsbury, L. C., said in Adams v. Great N. S. Ry. Co. (5), the Courts will not review awards upon the merits; they will not constitute themselves as Courts of appeal to examine whether or not the conclusion at which the arbitrator arrived was sound, both in point of law and in point of fact. This salutary doctrine, however, is subject to the fundamental rule that an arbitrator cannot go beyond the precise questions submitted: it will not do for him to determine any claims or demands though existing between the parties to the submission, save only those which they have agreed that he shall decide. This is sound on principle; the submission furnishes the source and prescribes the limits of the authority of the arbitrator. The arbitrator is inflexibly limited to a decision of the particular matters submitted; he cannot take upon himself an authority which the submissions does not confer, Price v. Popkin (6), Pas- coe v. Pascoe (7), Baillie v. Edinburgh Oil Gas Light Co. (8), Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of Works (9). In each case therefore where a question arises whether the arbitrator has exceeded his authority and it is urged that the submission should be liberally construed and interpreted the question really reduces to this, whether the circumstances of the case bring it within the scope of the one or the other of the two conflicting principles we have formulated. In the case before us the terms of the submission are, in our opinion, against the contention of the Appellant. The matter in controversy submitted to the arbitrator was not whether the Plaintiff should have access to the northern village across the land of the Defendants but whether he had a right of way over the specified strip of land. The arbitrator was bound to base his decision upon an investigation of the latter question and he had no authority to lay out a new path on a piece of land over which neither party alleged a right of way. Walker v. Simpson (10), Wyman v. Hammond (11), Ross v. Linder (12). We are therefore not prepared to accept the first contention of the Appellant.

In support of the second contention of the Appellant it has been argued that if the arbitrator has exceeded his authority, he has done so for the benefit of the Defendants and they at any rate are not entitled to assail the award which is really in their favour. In our opinion this contention is well-founded and must prevail. It is an elementary principle that only the party prejudiced by the exercise of excessive authority by the arbitrator is entitled to object to the award by reason of it; the party in whose favour the erroneous action of the arbitrator operates cannot be heard to impeach the validity of the award on this ground. In Bradshaw's Arbitration (13), where an award was assailed by one of the claimants. Lord Denman, C. J., observed that the error assigned was no matter of complaint for him, as it was in his favour and to his advantage. Similarly in Moore v. Butlin (14), the learned Chief Justice observed that the party in whose favour the mistake had been made could not avail himself of it to set aside the award [see also Taylor v. Shuttleworth (15)]. Again in Syman v. Arnus (16), a party objected to an award because it made certain deductions from demands presented against him by his adversary and assigned to himself certain goods and merchandise. In answer to the contentions that these acts were beyond the authority of the arbitrator, the Court said: "He has no right of complaint, it was in his favour." (Galvin v. Thompson (17)). In the case before us the arbitrator found in substance that the pathway existed as alleged by the Plaintiff; in this view he ought to have made a decree accordingly. But as in his opinion the existence of a pathway at that particular spot would inconvenience the Defendants, he laid out another path for the use of the Plaintiff. This course was adopted for the benefit and convenience of the Defendants. It is difficult to appreciate upon what principle the Defendants can be allowed to question the award on the ground that the arbitrator exceeded his authority: the position would have been intelligible if the Plaintiff had sought to assail the award in so far as it did not allow him a pathway in the precise place alleged by him. The second ground taken by the Appellant must therefore be allowed.

We may add that it was not competent to the Courts below in a proceeding under sec. 525 of the Code of 1882 to direct that the award be filed in part. The Court was bound to refuse the application if in its opinion the award was open to attack in part. Dandekar v. Dandekar (18), Mana v. Mallichery (19), Thiruvengada v. Vaidinatha (20), Mustafa v. Phulja (21). In the view we take, however, the question becomes immaterial.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed and the decrees of the Courts below discharged. We direct that the award be filed in its entirety and a decree drawn up in accordance therewith. The Plaintiff is entitled to his costs in all the Courts from the Defendants.

Appeal allowed.

A decree obtained in a suit for rent against a person in possession who is also the legal representative of the last registered tenant is a decree for rent within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Where a tenure was sold in execution of a decree for rent, but on the first day the bidding did not come up to the decretal amount, and the property was sold notwithstanding, without any fresh proclamation and sale under sec. 165,

Held, that as the sale could not in the circumstances be under sec. 164, it was not a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act and did not operate to transfer more than the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor.

The special and stringent provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to sales is part of a public policy intended for the benefit of all parties concerned. If the landlord wants special results to follow from it under the Act, he must proceed strictly in accordance with its provisions.

Where a mortgagee of a tenure gets a decree and purchases the mortgaged tenure at a sale in execution of his mortgage decree, and the tenure is subsequently sold again in execution of a rent-decree against the original tenant, it is open to the mortgagor to fall back on his mortgage as a shield against the purchaser under the rent-sale, when that sale is not free from incumbrances.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

One Ballav Lal Barman was the holder of a permanent tenure under Defendant No. 1 and his predecessor-in-interest. In 1857 Ballav Lal executed a kobala in respect of this tenure in favour of his wife Radhamoni. Ballav Lal, however, continued as the registered tenant until his death in 1891 or thereabout. He was succeeded by his grandson, Shyama Prosad, who was a minor at the time living under the guardianship of his grandmother Radhamoni and mother Kalimoti. The collections in the mofussil were made in the name of Radhamoni and she mortgaged the tenure to the Plaintiffs on the 7th December 1894 for Rs. 1,499. About three weeks after this, on the 28th December 1894, Defendant No. 1 took from Radhamoni a kistbandi bond for the arrears due on the tenure. In this document Radhamoni described her title under the purchase of 1857 and it can hardly be argued that the effect of the acceptance of that document was not to recognise Radhamoni as the tenant, of the mehal. On the 27th May 1896, Radhamoni executed another mortgage of the tenure in favour of the Plaintiffs who brought a suit upon the two mortgages against Shyama Prosad as heir and grandson of Radhamoni and in possession of her estate and obtained an ex parte decree on the 26th February 1902. Defendant No. 1 in April 1902 brought a suit for arrears of rent against Shyama Prosad stating that Ballav Lal was the recorded tenant and Shyama Prosad was in possession of the tenure, and obtained an ex parte decree on the 21st June 1902. The Plaintiffs executed their mortgage decree and purchased the mortgage property on the 15th September 1903 for Rs. 3,600. Defendant No. 1 executed his rent-decree and himself purchased the property in arrear on the 9th February 1904 for Rs. 809. The Plaintiffs applied for setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud and irregularities but were not successful. They bring the present suit on the ground that the decree itself was fraudulent as well as the sale, and pray for recovery of khas possession on the declaration that their rights were not affected by the sale.

The lower Court has given the Plaintiff a decree holding that the decree for rent was fraudulent and collusive. Defendant No. 1 has appealed and on his behalf it has been contended that the finding of fraud is not supported by the evidence in the case. It is quite clear that the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Judge do not make out any case of fraud against Defendant No. 1. It is not alleged or shown that there was no arrear due on the tenure and there is no evidence that Defendant No. 1 did anything in respect of the suit that he was not entitled to do under the law. It does not also appear that he had any duty to perform towards the Plaintiffs, the breach of which would throw any discredit upon him. We think the finding of fraud is wrong and must be set aside.

The decree of the lower Court, however, has been supported on the ground that the decree obtained by Defendant No. 1 was not a rent-decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act and in any case the sale brought about by him was not in respect of the tenure but only the right, title and interest of Shyama Prosad, so that their rights as purchasers under the mortgage decree were not affected. It has been further contended that the mortgage lien exists notwithstanding the sale and as no notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been served, the Raja, Defendant No. 1, was not entitled to khas possession.

With regard to the first point we have seen that Defendant No. 1 recognised Radhamoni as his tenant by accepting from her the instalment bond for rent. She was, therefore, his recognised tenant from 1301. Upon her death no one took any steps to register himself or herself as her representative. If her purchase was a bona fide one her daughter Lakhimoni who was alive at the time of the rent suit was her legal representative: if she was a benamdar for her husband then Shyama Prosad was the rightful heir. In any case Lakhimoni was not in possession and Shyama Prosad was sued as the party in possession and there is no dispute that he was really in possession. In fact no claim has been made on behalf of Lakhimoni and both the contending parties have treated Shyama Prosad as the tenant in possession and the question of benami has not been pressed by either party. The suit for rent was, therefore, rightly brought against Shyama Prosad who must be taken as the real tenant. It has been contended that as Shyama Prosad was not recognised as the tenant but was sued merely as he was in possession, the decree obtained is a money decree for compensation for use and occupation. That would have been a legitimate view to take if as a matter of fact Shyama Prosad had not been the real tenant. See Ranee Lalunmonnee v. Sonamonee (1), Surnomoyee v. Dinonath (2). As it is however the decree was a good decree for rent.

As regards the second point, it appears from the order-sheet in the execution case in which Defendant No. 1 made his purchase that process of attachment and sale were issued simultaneously evidently under sec. 163, cl. 1 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It may be presumed that cl. 2 (a) of that section was also complied with. As the sale took place on the first day of sale, the sale could be held under sec. 164 only subject to registered and notified incumbrances if the bidding were sufficient to liquidate the whole amount of the decree and the costs. The bidding, however, did not reach the level of the decretal amount and was in fact several hundred rupees less: so that the sale could not be held under sec. 164 and as there was no second proclamation and sale as contemplated by sec. 165, the sale cannot be taken as one held under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act regarding sales are very stringent and the results are generally destructive of various derivative rights belonging to third parties not before the Court. The State enforces its claims for revenue under the stringent provisions of the sunset law from the zeminders and has enacted the stringent provisions of the Tenancy laws for enabling the zemindars and other landlords to realise rents from their tenants, providing safeguards for the protection of the tenants and those that deal with them. The special provisions for the sale of tenures are a part of a public policy intended for the benefit of all parties concerned. If the landlord wants the special results provided for by the Act, he must proceed strictly in accordance with its provisions. We think he has not done this in this case and he cannot, therefore, claim rights superior to those of an ordinary purchaser at a Civil Court sale. His sale certificate also supports this view as he is certified to have purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has referred us to two cases in this connexion; Nazir Mohamed v. Girish Chandra (3) and Akhoy Kumar Soor v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (4).

These cases are clearly distinguishable; in the first case the property sold was described as the tenure and the proclamation was for the sale of the tenure under sec. 59 of Act VIII of 1869, B. C. The learned Judges say "the property advertised was the tenure and the property sold was the tenure according to the sale certificate, and the mere insertion of a statement that the sale was of the rights and interests of the judgment-debtors would not, we think, have the effect under the circumstances stated of limiting the sale to such rights and interests and not extending it to the tenure itself." In the second case the description of the property ended with the words "the said lot in arrears" so that the facts are not similar. It was argued in that case that the property should have put up first subject to registered and notified incumbrances and afterwards with power to avoid all incumbrances but this argument was met by the remark that the mortgage in question in that case was not a registered and notified incumbrance. The report does not shew under what section the sale took place or whether the amount of the bidding was sufficient to meet the decree with costs. Under the circumstances we do not feel in any way hampered by that decision.

As regards the third point the argument of the learned Vakil for the Respondent is that notwithstanding the decree and sale he is still entitled to fall back upon his mortgage lien to defend himself from the attack of Defendant No. 1 who claims to oust him. In the case of Akhoy Kumar Soor v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (4) hereinabove quoted, the mortgagee obtained his decree absolute in May 1892. The Maharaja brought his suit for arrears in 1893 and purchased the "lot in arrear" in 1893. The mortgagee then applied for executing his mortgage decree against the Maharaja as purchaser in 1901. The Maharaja then applied for the service of notice under sec. 167 and the learned Judges held that as this application was not made within the time limited by sec. 167 it was barred and the mortgagee was entitled to execute his decree against the mortgaged portion of the tenure. The result of this ruling is, that the encumbrance of the mortgagee was in existence notwithstanding the decree absolute on the mortgage. There is however an obiter dictum in the case that after the mortgage had culminated in a decree there would be no encumbrance to annul under sec. 167. In the first place the learned Judges say it is not necessary to decide that question and in the second place that opinion is quite inconsistent with the decision on the point of limitation under sec. 167: for if there was no incumbrance there was nothing to annul and no application for annulment could be barred. In the case of Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prosad (5), a revenue sale of an estate under sec. 54 of Act XI of 1859 took place after a mortgagee had purchased in execution of a mortgage decree of his own and after the sale had been confirmed. The revenue sale was subject to all incumbrances. The Court held that the mortgagee purchaser was entitled to fall back on his mortgage as a shield against the purchaser at the revenue sale. In the present case if the Plaintiff had not proceeded to sale before the purchase of Defendant No. 1, the latter would have been at best entitled to annul the Plaintiff's encumbrance under sec. 167: there is no reason why he should be in a worse position by reason of his diligence in proceeding to sale first. It is true he could have paid up the decree of the Defendant and saved himself from this tortuous litigation: but he was not bound to do that: he was not liable for the rent before his purchase and his remedy over if any against his mortgagor by way of contribution might be an illusory remedy after all. In any case he is entitled to rely on all defences legitimate to his juridical position and we think that the Raja Defendant was, even if he had taken all proceedings according to law, not entitled to oust him without annulling his encumbrance under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and this has not been done in this case.

Under these circumstances although we set aside the judgment of the Court below, we confirm the decree of the said Court, but without cost in either Court.

Appeal dismissed.

No. 2 OF 1908.

THE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT & REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS,
Appellants,
v.

STEPHEN, J.
HOLMWOOD, J.
1908,
6, May.

CHULHAN AHIR and others, Respondents.

Mischief—Intention—Motive—Cutting a channel through railway to let out water from fields.

Where tenants finding their fields flooded cut a channel through a railway in order to let the water run off their fields:

Held—That the act having been intentionally done amounted to mischief, and it was no defence to say that their motive in doing it, viz., to free their fields from water, was an innocent one.

This appeal was preferred on behalf of the Crown against the judgment of Mr. F. Mac Blane, Sessions Judge at Chapra, dated the 15th of November 1907, setting aside the conviction and sentences passed on the accused by Mr. Hashmat Hossain, Deputy Magistrate of Saran, on the 9th of October 1907.

The material facts appear from the judgment.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

Babus Joy Gopal Ghose and Raghu Nath Singh for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case the accused were convicted

THE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT & REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS v. CHULHAN AHIR.

by the Deputy Magistrate of Saran of offences under secs. 144 and 427 read with sec. 149, I. P. C. Their convictions were set aside by the Sessions Judge on appeal, and the case now comes before us in appeal from his judgment.

The facts of the case are exceedingly simple and they are that the Appellants finding their fields flooded cut a channel through the railway to let the water run off their fields. The learned Sessions Judge has set aside their conviction on the ground that neither their intention nor the means employed by them to effect their intention were criminal. He holds that their intention was not to cause mischief but to cause the water to run off their fields. In this, however, he makes not altogether an uncommon error in confusing motive with intention. Their intention was to make a ditch through the railway. Their motive was to free their fields from water. There can be no doubt that what they did to the railway amounted to mischief and that they must have been fully aware of this fact. The learned Sessions Judge is also wrong in finding that the means employed by them were not criminal. It appears that about 50 men were present, some of whom carried spears. Of these some 10 or 15 only were engaged in digging. It, therefore, seems certain that the whole constituted an unlawful assembly, with the common object, as alleged, of damaging the railway.

On looking at the evidence it appears that the act of mischief and the unlawful assembly are very plainly proved. There is, however, no proof of an offence under sec. 144. There is clear evidence that some of the persons present were armed with spears, but there is no evidence that any of the accused were so armed. The conviction under sec. 144 is therefore improper.

Under these circumstances we set aside the judgment of the Sessions Judge and we also set aside the conviction under sec. 144, I. P. C., by the District Magistrate. We convict the accused of the offences under secs. 143 and 427 read with sec. 149, I. P. C.

In considering the question of sentence we have to bear in mind that the result of what offences the men did might have been most serious, as the accused must have known, and it is necessary that people should remember, that they are not to do anything on railways which may damage the life of people using them. As however we have set aside the conviction under sec. 144, I. P. C., we think it right that the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 144 passed by the Deputy Magistrate should be reduced to four months' rigorous imprisonment. We do not regard a fine as a suitable punishment in this case. We, therefore, inflict no sentence of fine. We do not think it necessary to pass any sentence under secs. 427 and 149, the conviction now standing under sec. 143 instead of sec. 144, I. P. C. We have no power to order the accused persons to enter into bonds! We therefore make no order in respect of that.

Let a copy of this order be sent to the Sessions Judge and let the District Magistrate take steps to have the accused arrested and dealt with.

Appeal allowed.

BE THAT AS IT MAY, AS FOR OURSELVES, WE ARE not at all keen on a Circuit Court. Nor are we opposed to the setting up of a separate High Court provided there is a general demand for it from all parts of the new Province. Since there is no such general demand we would prefer to postpone all discussions on the subject till the new administration is properly organised and the opinion of the component members of the new Province has been definitely ascertained. When this has been done it would be the duty of the Imperial Government not merely to ascertain public opinion but also to consult the balance of convenience of all the component parts of the new Province before coming to any decision on the question.

WE PUBLISH A LETTER FROM MOZUFFERPUR IN which the writer considers that the Beharis cannot and do not object to the whole of the Bengali-speaking people being brought under one administration. But the writer thinks that the Beharis are entitled to compensation by way of transfer of some of the adjoining districts from the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, since the latter is larger than either Bengal and Behar or the two Provinces taken together. But this is a question on which we cannot hazard any opinion; and besides we do not think that there is any occasion at present to enter into a discussion of any question not strictly within the scope of the Delhi Despatch.

THERE SEEMS TO BE SOME MISAPPREHENSION with regard to the articles regarding the linguistic, historical and geographical boundaries of Bengal and Behar which are being published in our columns. Our articles purport only to collect and present to the authorities and the public materials from the most reliable and authoritative sources for delimitation of boundaries between Bengal and Behar on the one hand and Bengal and Assam on the other. As between Behar and Bengal the case for Dhalbhum, Manbhum and the greater portion of Sonthal Pergunnahs, which are all Bengalee-speaking and which for the most part not very long ago formed part of the Burdwan Division of Bengal, being included within the Bengal Presidency is indeed very strong. Similar considerations are also strong in favour of Purneah to the east of Mahananda and the Bengali-speaking portion of Goalpara being included in the Rajshahye Division and Sylhet, in the Chittagong Division. We do not think that simply because a section of less advanced population differs ethnologically from the Bengali population of Manbhum and the Sonthal Pergunnahs, these portions should be severed from Bengal. These parts have long been under the civilizing influence of the Bengalis and should therefore remain with Bengal. As for the extension of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to Manbhum it was done recently and against the wishes of the people. The Rent Act (X of 1859) was in force in Manbhum until recently and public opinion there has all along been in favour of the extension of the Bengal Tenancy Act to Manbhum.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

DEAR SIR,—Since you have taken upon yourself the noble task of pleading the cause of Bengal proper in order to get all the Bengalee-speaking tracts and people placed under one and the same administration, i.e., the Governor of Bengal and in order to further that object you have published the letter of Mr. B. K. Lahiri suggesting that some portions of Purnea, Maldah, Bhagulpore, Sonthal Pergunnahs, Manbhum and Pergunnah Dhalbhum in Singhbhum be taken away from the newly created Province of Behar and added to Bengal proper, it is just and fair for you to take up the cause of Behar also because so long as there is one High Court for both the Provinces, your journal is deemed to be the mouth-piece and organ of both the Provinces and expresses weighty opinions and is valued for its opinions by the Government people and the judicial officers alike, as your journal is not a political paper but a legal journal. Considering these things in my mind I want to lay a few suggestions before you for publication so far as concerns the interest of the New Province. Also your journal and other leading papers of Bengal have been urging that (1) a portion of Purnea east of the Mahananda River, (2) a major portion of Maldah, (3) a small portion of Bhagulpore, (4) a part of Sonthal Pergunnahs, (5) the Pergunnah Dhalbhum in Singhbhum district and (6) the Manbhum district in its entirety be taken away from the New Province and added to Bengal proper on the ground that people living therein are all Bengalee-speaking. These tracts taken together will be equal to three big districts and almost as big as a division. But what do you or Bengalee leading papers suggest that we, Beharis, should get in exchange of these tracts. We are not unmindful of the fact that in a partition or as we may call it separation on linguistic ground, an eye should be kept on compactness and convenience of the parties concerned. We do not in any way intend to injure the new Bengalee nation or be in the way of their getting all the Bengalee-speaking people placed under a Governor in Council and for this reason we, the Beharis, wholeheartedly support the proposal of the Bengalee to include the districts of Sylhet, Goalpara and Cachar in Bengal proper and place them under the administration of the Governor of Bengal because the people of these three districts are almost all Bengalee-speaking. You also want the northern portion of Balasore to be included within Bengal proper on the same linguistic ground. It will be a very good thing indeed for the Bengalees if these tracts and districts were to be taken away from Behar, Orissa and Assam and added to Bengal so as to constitute a compact Province consisting of people speaking one language and being of the same manners and customs. But the simple question which the Beharis ask you and the leading papers of Bengal is as to what you suggest the Government of India should give us in exchange for (1) Manbhum,

(2) Pergunnah Dhalbhoom in Singbhoom and portions of Purnea, Bhagulpore and Sonthal Pergunnahs and the entire Maldah district and also the northern portion of Balasore. If the Government of India be pleased to compensate us by giving us some bordering districts of the United Provinces homogeneous with the sister districts of Behar, the Beharis will very gladly support the scheme of the Bengalees that the aforesaid tracts be taken away from Behar proper and added to Bengal proper. But the Beharis can on no account agree to the proposal that the towns of Bhagulpore and Purnea and other Hindee-speaking tracts be taken away from Behar proper and added to Bengal. The Province of the United Provinces of Oudh and Agra is as big as Bengal and Behar taken together and consists of nearly 48 districts whereas in Bengal there will be only 25 or 26 districts and in the New Province of Behar some 19 or 20 districts. The charge of the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces is so big as to be incapable of efficient administration by one Lieutenant-Governor. The bordering districts of Gorakhpur, Azamgarh, Ballia, Ghazipore and Benares are permanently settled districts like the districts of Bengal and Behar and the people of these five districts speak the Hindee language like the Beharis and their people are kith and kin with the Beharis of Patna and Tirhoot Divisions. The same castes of people live in these five districts and the districts of Patna and Tirhoot Divisions and their mode of living and manners is the same. So if Gorakhpur, Azamgarh, Ballia, Ghazipore and Benares be taken away from the United Provinces and added to the New Province of Behar, the Beharis will very gladly consent to part with the tracts intended by the Bengalees to be added to Bengal proper under the Governor of Bengal. In such a case the Beharis can even afford to part with the whole of the Maldah and Purnea districts and not with portions alone. This is the unanimous opinion of the people of Behar.

Yours truly,

(The important ones to be fully reported hereafter).

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1583 OF 1910. JOTINDRA MOHAN AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. KEDAR NATH, Defendant, Respondent. Heard, 5th December 1911. Judgment, 13th December 1911.

Homestead land—Ejectment—Bengal Tenancy Act, applicability.

* The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Appellants for the ejectment of the Defendant-Respondent from two parcels of land in Mouzah Sonapakari in the District of Hughly. The Respondent was himself a raiyat of the village, in which he had both a homestead and an agricultural holding. The two parcels in suit were situated near his old homestead, and he acquired them separately by his purchase from the respective raiyats to whose homesteads they originally belonged. He had been cultivating them and paying rent to the Appellants, who were the landlords. The Appellants contended that as the disputed lands were homestead lands, their cultivation by the Respondent could not change their character.

Held—That the law applicable was the Bengal Tenancy Act and not the Transfer of Property Act. Abdul v. Kuthan (1 C. W. N. clxxi) explained.

Munshi Golam Mowla v. Abdul Lowar Mondol (S. A. 1078 of 1892, decided on 16th May 1893, unreported) followed.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Bordolai for Babu Jadunath Kanjilal for the Respondent.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 102 OF 1910. MUSST NAZIRUNNISSA BIBI, Appellant v. MAHAMMAD ZAFFER NASKAR, Respondent. 13th December 1911.

Usufructuary mortgagee—Possession not given—Remedy.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by a usufructuary mortgagee for recovery of his mortgage debt by sale of the property mortgaged. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance, but on appeal it was dismissed on two grounds, the first being that a usufructuary mortgagee could not sue for sale, and the second that the holding mortgaged was not transferable.

Held—That the remedy of the mortgagee to whom possession had not been given, was to sue for possession under his contract or to bring, under sec. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, a suit for money. He could not turn his usufructuary mortgage into a simple mortgage.

Kangaya Gurukul v. Kalimuthu (I. L. R. 27 Mad. 526) not followed.

Babu Havendra Narayan Mitter for the Respondent.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

No. 33 OF 1910.

JENKINS, C. J. WOODROFFE, J. 1911, 18, July.	}	In the goods of GOPESSUR DUTT, deceased,
		SM. JARAT KUMARI DASSI, Plaintiff, Appellant,
		v.
		BISSESSUR DUTT,
		Defendant, Respondent.

Will, challenged as forgery—Proof—Suspicion alone when ground for refusing probate—Presumption against misconduct, operation of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 3, 45, 101, 135—Order in which witnesses to be tendered, discretion of counsel and Court's power—Expert, medical, examination of, to test value of evidence of attending physician—Expert in Bengali language and legal terms, examination of—Document put to witness, right of opposing counsel to inspect.

If a party writes or prepares a will under which he takes a benefit, that circumstance in itself ought generally to excite suspicion of the Court and calls upon it to be vigilant in examining the evidence in support of the instrument in favour of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased.

BARRY v. BUTLIN (2) referred to and the rule in TYRRELL v. PAINTON (1) explained.

Per JENKINS, C. J.—The suspicion which by itself would be ground for the Court not pronouncing in favour of an alleged will must be one inherent in the nature of the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction.

(2) 2 Moore P. C. 480 (1838).

Per WOODROFFE, J.—The rule in TYRRELL v. PAINTON (1) applies to cases where the circumstances of suspicion arise from the nature of the case as put forward by the propounder, in which case the propounder must remove the suspicion. Where, however, the alleged suspicion against a will arises from facts which form part of the impugnant's case, then the Court must see whether the facts which are said to give rise to suspicion are proved or whether the propounder's case is proved. The rule therefore does not apply where the question is simply which set of witnesses should be believed.

In this case the trial judge having decided against the genuineness of the will on the ground that the evidence of the witnesses whom the propounder had called to support her case was not so unimpeachable, so absolutely trustworthy in itself as by its own merit to dispose of all objections and to allay all doubt and suspicion, Held (per JENKINS, C. J.)—That the standard of proof required by the Judge was higher than the law (as contained in sec. 3 of the Indian Evidence Act) prescribes.

Per WOODROFFE, J.—A probate case is not singular as regards the application of the general principles of proof as contained in secs. 3 and 101 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Per JENKINS, C. J.—The Evidence Act, by which in matters of proof the Courts in this country must be guided, has in conformity with the general tendency of the day, adopted the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof.

The Evidence Act is at the same time expressed in terms which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability, so that where, as in this case, forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against misconduct is not without its due weight as a circumstance of improbability, though the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not be applicable.

(1) L. R. [1894] P. D. 151 (1893).

COOPER v. SLADE (3) and DOE D DEVINE v. WILSON (4) referred to.

This probability gains in strength where the character and position of the individual impugned is, apart from the particular case, above reproach.

Per CURIAM.—While counsel has discretion, the Court has also power under sec. 135 of the Evidence Act to direct the order in which witnesses cited by a party shall be examined.

Per WOODROFFE, J.—A Court cannot assume that a document was proved from the refusal of opposing counsel to cross-examine it. The latter is entitled to wait until the Court ruled whether the document was proved or not.

If a cross-examining counsel after putting a paper in the hands of witness merely asks him some questions as to its general nature or identity his adversary will have no right to see the document but if the paper is used for refreshing the memory of the witness or questions are put respecting its contents or regarding the handwriting, his opponent may claim to see the paper.

TAYLOR ON EVIDENCE, 1452, referred to and approved.

The limits within which the opinion of experts is admissible considered and the difference between mere advice on evidence and opinion indicated by WOODROFFE, J.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Chitty, J., passed on the 21st of March 1910, dismissing the Appellant's application for probate of an alleged will of Gopessur Dutt, deceased.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Jackson, Zorah and B. L. Mitter for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. P. Sinha, S. R. Dass, B. C. Mitter and R. C. Bonnerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of an application for probate of an instrument bearing date the 13th Ashar 1316, or the 27th of June 1909, and purporting to be the will of Gopessur Dutt and to bear his signature.

Two questions arise : First, whether the signature to the instrument is that of Gopessur Dutt, and, secondly, in case it is his signature, whether, when he placed it there, he was of sound mind.

Chitty, J., has decided against the will on grounds which I will later discuss, and from his judgment the present appeal has been preferred.

Gopessur Dutt died in the early hours of the 28th of June 1909 at the age of 36 or thereabouts. He left a widow, the Appellant Sreematy Jarat Kumari Dassi, who seeks to propound the instrument in dispute. There was one daughter who died in infancy, but apart from this, there was no child of the marriage. Gopessur was one of three brothers, the other two both younger than he, being Bissessur, the caveator and Respondent, and Parmessur.

It is admitted by counsel for the Respondent, and is clear from the evidence, that Gopessur and Bissessur were not on terms of friendship. The relations between Gopessur and Parmessur, however, were good; for some time after they parted from Bissessur they lived together in the garden house that had been allotted to them on partition; and though, shortly before his death, Parmessur had parted in mess and was building himself a separate house, this did not indicate any serious estrangement between these two brothers. Parmessur died in the autumn of 1908, and a month after his death his widow gave birth to a little boy, to whom Gopessur seems not unnaturally to have been attached. Gopessur fell ill in March 1909, and, while there may have been temporary periods of improvement, he was never restored to health, though he passed through the hands of many and variously qualified medical attendants. At first his trouble seems to have been appendicitis, later dysentery supervened, and he ultimately died of bowel trouble. His earliest attendant was Dr. Chatterjee, the family physician, who also brought in for consultation three doctors of repute, but they do not seem to have satisfied the patient, for in May he placed himself under the homœopathic treatment of Dr. P. C. Mazumdar, a practitioner of good repute and standing. Shortly after this, Dr. P. C. Mazumdar, on leaving Calcutta, placed Gopessur under the treatment of his son, Dr. J. N. Mazumdar, and so things went on for some time.

Then Gopessur consulted a Kabiraj, but as dysentery appeared on or about the 18th of June, Dr. J. N. Mazumdar was again summoned, and he attended him up to his death.

On the 20th and 21st of June, Dr. D. N. Roy was called in for consultation, and here seems to have been a slight improvement in the patient's condition till the 25th when he was not so well. On the 26th he was seen both by Dr. P. C. Mazumdar, who had returned to Calcutta, and by Dr. J. N. Mazumdar. On the Sunday morning they both saw him. On the evening of Sunday the 27th Dr. P. C. Mazumdar visited him about 5 or 5-30. Shortly after this, about 8 or 8-30 o'clock, Gopessur is alleged to have executed the will now propounded. Then he is said to have slept, but the pain becoming intense, Dr. J. N. Mazumdar was sent for. He was, however, unable to come, and in his place Dr. Gosswami visited the patient, and remained with him until his death, about 1 or 2 o'clock on the morning of the 28th. The same day the cremation took place, and on return from it, the widow, according to her evidence, handed over to her brother, Shambhu Nath Sen, the will and certain drafts, which had been entrusted to her by her husband, and on the 29th in the morning they were delivered by him to Mr. Rutter, the family attorney, whose assistant he was.

On the 11th August 1909, the widow filed her petition for probate through Mr. Rutter. Bissessur, however, entered a caveat and on the 20th of August he affirmed an affidavit in its support.

In the 5th paragraph of the affidavit he said :—"That I have no personal knowledge as to whether the said alleged will is the last will of the said deceased or as to whether it was duly and properly or at all executed by the said deceased or duly and properly attested as required by law, and if it was executed by the said deceased under what circumstances it was done, and whether the said deceased was in a disposable frame of mind and body, but, as far as I have been able to ascertain from enquiries made, so far I verily believe that the said alleged will of the said deceased, dated 27th June 1909, is not and cannot be the will of the said deceased."

The proceedings then took the form of a regular suit; witnesses were examined on commission and in Court, and after a prolonged hearing of 24 days the case terminated adversely to the applicant.

I must here digress for a moment to express my disapproval of the way in which this litigation was needlessly prolonged, notwithstanding the endeavours of the learned Judge to keep those who appeared before him within proper limits.

The caveator's grounds of objection I have read, but, notwithstanding the restrained and even languid terms in which they were formulated, the contest has been conducted with unusual bitterness.

Thus the cross-examination of the Petitioner on commission covers upwards of 80 printed pages, the cross-examination of other witnesses occupies in one case upwards of 40 printed pages, in another 17, in another upwards of 20, in another upwards of 50, and in another 19.

I have read through the whole of this cross-examination and I can find no justification for its length. Then there is another matter to which I would allude, as it is not without its bearing on the case.

The hearing began, but was not completed, before the 'Xmas vacation of 1909. Before the vacation the Petitioner had called all her witnesses and she was described by the Judge as having closed her case. The cross-examination of the last of her witnesses was almost at a close, and indeed so nearly at an end did it seem to the Judge that when the cross-examination had to be postponed on account of the witness's illness, the learned Judge proposed to counsel for the caveator that he should in the interest of expedition open his case. The suggestion was scouted, and was even met with a threat on the part of counsel which might as well have been left unuttered. And so the cross-examination of this witness was taken up on the reopening of the Courts. But in the interval much had happened; fresh counsel had been retained for the caveator, and two of the Petitioner's servants had been won over to the caveator's side under circumstances to which I will later allude. And when the cross-examination was taken up, in place of the few questions that the learned Judge had anticipated, the cross-examination was pursued through 3 more days. Not only that, but an application was made on behalf of the caveator with a hardihood little short of astounding to have the Petitioner's witnesses recalled, including even the Petitioner herself whose previous cross-examination had been dragged out to the length I have described. The learned Judge rightly refused this application, but the judgment states, as the record shows, that, on the day when fresh counsel appeared for the caveator, his case assumed an entirely fresh complexion. Now the case made was left in no doubt; the will was denounced as a forgery, Babu Shambhu Nath Sen, an attorney of this Court of some years' standing, was said to have forged Gopessur's signature, and the Petitioner herself to have been a party to and have had a hand in the forgery. And yet when the case first came before Chitty, J., he could get no definite reply when he made the very reasonable enquiry what the caveator's case really was, and when the learned Judge specifically enquired whether a charge of forgery was made, the boldest reply he could elicit was: "It amounts to that." When counsel for the caveator rose to present his client's case before this Court I thought it right to ascertain what his case really was, but the diffidence of December had to some extent reasserted itself. Ultimately the following statements were made by counsel and were duly recorded: "I give up the allegation that the signature was forged by Shambhu Nath." "I say the date placed below Gopessur is in Jarat's handwriting; but I don't know when, or whether she knew Gopessur had not written his name." "I say Shambhu Nath was a party to forging this will. I make a charge of forgery against Shambhu Nath and the Petitioner."

I propose here to examine the judgment under appeal. The key to the decision is, I think, this: there are a number of circumstances which in the opinion of the learned Judge create suspicion: the occasion for suspicion has not been removed: therefore the will has not been proved.

In so handling the case the learned Judge professed to be guided by Tyrrell v. Painton (1). As I understand that decision it laid down no new principle, but it merely applied a well-established principle to an exceptional set of circumstances. That principle was enunciated in Barry v. Butlin (2), where it was said, "the rules of law according to which cases of this nature are to be decided do not admit of any dispute so far as they are necessary to the determination of the present appeal, and they have been acquiesced in on both sides. These rules are two: The first, that the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a will, and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator. The second is, that if a party writes or prepares a will under which he takes a benefit, that is a circumstance that ought generally to excite the suspicion of the Court, and calls upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in support of the instrument, in favour of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed, and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased."

The effect of this decision is tersely stated by Lord Davey, as he afterwards became, in Tyrrell v. Painton (1), where he said, "The principle is that wherever a will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed."

The suspicion to which allusion is made must, I think, be one inherent in the transaction itself, and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction.

Now, while I willingly concede the value to us of these decisions, it must not be forgotten that the law is laid down for us in clear and imperative terms by Acts of the Indian Legislature, and it is by the provisions of those Acts that we must be guided. Gopessur was a Hindu, and the law applicable to any will alleged to have been executed by him is to be found in the Hindu Wills Act which incorporates the sections of the Succession Act to which I will refer.

By sec. 46 of the Succession Act it is provided that every person of sound mind and not a minor may dispose of his property by will. In explanation 4 to this section it is said that no person can make a will while he is in such a state of mind, whether arising from drunkenness, or from illness, or from any other cause that he does not know what he is doing. A light is thrown on the meaning of the section by the illustrations appended to it.

By sec. 48 it is provided that a will or any part of a will the making of which has been caused by fraud or coercion or by such importunity as takes away the free agency of the testator is void.

Sec. 50 prescribes the rules for the execution of unprivileged wills and enjoins (among other things) that the testator shall sign the will; that his signature shall be so placed that it shall appear that it was intended thereby to give effect to the writing as a will; and that it shall be attested by 2 or more witnesses.

So much then for the conditions necessary for a valid will. Next we have to see how the existence of those conditions is to be established. For this I turn to the Evidence Act which declares by sec. 3 that a fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of the particular case to act upon the supposition that it exists. The disproof of a fact is similarly treated. It appears to me that the learned Judge has required a higher standard of proof than the law prescribes. Thus at one place, he says, "but even so it cannot be said that there is no doubt regarding Gopesur's possession of the requisite mental activity at the point of time in question:" again, in discussing the signature on the will he says "it is therefore impossible to express a decided opinion on this point:" and he ultimately formulates his attitude towards the problem before him in these words: "The question is,—Is the evidence of the witnesses whom she has called to support her case so unimpeachable, so absolutely trustworthy in itself, as by its own merit to dispose of all objections and allay all doubt and suspicion?" But the materials on which Courts have to pronounce are necessarily imperfect: for apart from the inherent uncertainty of human affairs the presentment of them to a tribunal is ordinarily the outcome of faulty observation, defective memory, inaccurate description and natural bias, and even that is blurred here by the intervention of interpretation.

Demonstration, or a conclusion at all points logical cannot be expected nor can a degree of certainty be demanded of which the matter under investigation is not reasonably capable. Accepting the external test which experience commends, the Evidence Act in conformity with the general tendency of the day adopted the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof.

The Evidence Act is at the same time expressed in terms which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability, so that where, as in this case, forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against misconduct is not without its due weight as a circumstance of improbability, though the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case, may not be applicable [Cf. per Willes, J., in Cooper v. Slade (3) and Doe d Devine v. Wilson (4)].

I have dealt with this topic in some detail as, at the first blush, it would almost appear as though we were asked to dissent from the learned Judge's appreciation of the evidence, and that I should hesitate to do in the absence of very strong circumstances justifying such a course. What we have to see in this case is whether, after considering the matters before us the Court ought to believe the two main facts alleged by the Petitioner, or to consider them so probable that a prudent man ought, in the circumstances of this particular case, to act upon the supposition that they are true. These two facts alleged are, first, that Gopessur was of sound mind at the time of the alleged execution of his will, and, secondly, that he in fact duly executed his will.

First, I will deal with the problem whether he was mentally capable of making the will propounded, bearing in mind that for this purpose it is on the Petitioner to establish affirmatively that he was at or about 8 or 8-30 on the evening of the 27th of June 1909 of sound mind and not in such a state of mind from illness or any other cause that he did not know what he was doing (sec. 46 of the Indian Succession Act). If the story of the preparation of the will be accepted a lower standard of capacity would be requisite, Perera v. Perera (5); still I propose to discuss the evidence in the first place without reference to the view that Gopessur had a prior knowledge of the contents of the alleged will.

Now the evidence on the part of the Petitioner consists of the testimony of the three doctors who were in actual attendance on Gopessur, the two attesting witnesses, Gopessur's Sircar and the Petitioner. To this is opposed the evidence of the caveator, his nephew Gora Chand Mullick, two servants who were in Gopessur's service, but left in the course of this suit in circumstances which invite comment, and a doctor who never saw the deceased.

Now I take first the three medical men who attended the deceased, Dr. P. C. Mazumdar, Dr. J. N. Mazumdar and Dr. S. N. Goswami. Not a word has been said against the probity of these three gentlemen, nor has it been suggested that they have any bias in favour of the Petitioner.

Indeed it ultimately came out in the course of the evidence that prior to their giving evidence, all three had been approached from the caveator's side, and it was contended that it must have become known to him or his legal advisers what they were prepared to say, and this has been made a matter of comment by counsel for the Petitioner, in view of the serious charge of forgery involved.

Dr. P. C. Mazumdar is a well-known doctor in Calcutta, and he attended Gopessur in the early part of his illness; he then went to Darjeeling, and he renewed his attendance on Saturday the 26th of June 1909. On that day he saw him once at 3 P.M. and on the following day, Sunday, he saw him twice, at 9 A.M. and 6 P.M. These times are no doubt approximate, but they are sufficiently accurate for the purpose in hand.

On both days he found Gopessur very weak, but he declares that "Gopessur's brain was in no way affected by the disease." On the Sunday evening, he says, the patient was a little better as regards his stools.

Then he says (pp. 197 and 198 of the paper-book)—"I was with him 5 or 6 minutes on Sunday evening. I spoke to him, questioned him about his condition. He gave answers. The answers were intelligent answers." "After seeing him I left the room and went downstairs. Some one accompanied me, Shambhu and one of the servants. That is Shambhu there; Prannath was the servant. I had a conversation with these two. They asked me about the state of the patient. Then I said the condition of the patient was very serious and they asked me also whether they can make a will. They wanted to make a will, Shambhu was asking me whether they could make a will. Whether the patient is to make a will. I said yes he can. You can make a will. English is not my tongue."

"They enquired if the patient could then make a will. I said he could. Nothing further was said."

"In my opinion his mental condition was such that he could make a will then. I say so from what I had observed immediately before."

"I think I told them that the patient might survive 2 or 3 days. That is my opinion."

In cross-examination not a question was put to this witness as to Gopessur's mental condition. This, however, was elicited, first, that he did not tell the patient or his friends there was any immediate danger of his dying that night, and, secondly, that the patient was sitting up some time and lying down also.

Dr. J. N. Mazumdar saw even more of Gopessur, for he was in daily attendance from June the 19th to the 27th. He describes him as very much more prostrate than on the previous occasions when he had attended him. He says (p. 201 of the paper-book):

"For a few days from the 19th he seemed to improve. Then he began to get worse and worse."

"On the 25th he was not so well. Up to 25th he appeared to be getting better. On the 26th he was worse and on the 27th he was very bad. On the 27th I think I saw him in the morning. I went with my father and had a talk with Gopessur. His mind was quite clear. During this week I did not notice his mind getting cloudy, not that I know of. I was sent for about midnight of the 27th. I could not go. I told him to take Doctor Goswami."

In the cross-examination of this witness too there is a similar reticence on the question of his mental capacity.

The third of the medical men, Dr. S. N. Goswami, only saw Gopessur once; that was about midnight of the 27th, and he remained with him to his death.

His description is as follows (p. 199 of the paper-book):—"He was lying in his bed suffering very much. I found it is from old dysentery he is suffering. I spoke to him. He answered. He was conscious. He gave me intelligent answers. He told me what he was suffering from. I asked him what was troubling him. He said he was suffering from an intense pain in the abdominal region. He said all he wanted me to do was to relieve that pain. I told him I would try my best to do so. I gave him medicine. It did not relieve him. He wanted to smoke once. He said he wanted hooka. I said, no, you can't have hooka now. I gave him medicine 2 or 3 times. I was there some time. He was complaining of his troubles generally. I can't remember particularly what he said."

"I was there when he died."

"I remained with him till he died. It was about an hour after I went there or more."

"At first his mind was clear, but was falling off very fast. He became unconscious before he died. I can't exactly say how long, about half an hour or so."

IN THE GOODS OF GOPESSUR DUTT.

Here too there was no cross-examination as to Gopessur's mental estate.

This abstention on the part of cross-examining counsel, which certainly cannot be ascribed to any reluctance to use this method of eliciting information, valuable or valueless, becomes the more remarkable, if, as the Petitioner maintains, it must have been ascertained what the views of the three doctors were.

I pause here to say that though these three witnesses may be experts their evidence in this case has not been that of experts but of men who had observed relevant facts, and whose evidence derives an enhanced value from the circumstance that they had favourable opportunities, peculiar facility and obvious incentive for accurate observation, and that their training would fit them to appreciate and describe what they observed.

At this point, it will be convenient to consider the evidence of the medical man who was called by the caveator by way of counterblast.

He is Col. Pilgrim, also a medical man of repute in Calcutta, but without the advantage of having seen Gopessur. He comes before the Court as an expert pure and simple, and without discussing the argument as to the characteristics of this type of remunerated witness, or determining how far he is merely to be regarded as a man who is paid a retainer to make a sworn argument, it is impossible to get away from the fact that he labours under a disadvantage to which his medical brethren, if the difference of schools permits this description, were not subject. They saw the patient, he did not. The learned Judge seems to have read the expert's evidence as supporting his own view that the evidence of the three doctors was meagre and unsatisfactory in the extreme.

But it is important to see what was the question that elicited from the expert the reply to which the learned Judge apparently alludes.

This is the question that had such momentous consequences :

"How would you describe the clinical picture such as it is that is presented by the evidence of the three doctors ?

A. Meagre and incomprehensible."

But as I read the evidence of the three doctors they did not profess to paint a "clinical picture," whatever that may mean, but as plain honest men to give a true and plain account of Gopessur's mental condition on or about the 27th of June 1909, as it appeared to them. Had they been required to paint clinical picture for the expert's purposes, I see no reason to suppose they would have been incapable of responding to the demand.

To clinch the matter, counsel put this question to his expert :

Q. "Upon the meagre and incomprehensible clinical picture presented by the evidence of the doctors, are you able to form a clear, satisfactory and convinced opinion as to the mental condition of the patient during, say, the last 8 hours of his life ?

A. No I am not.

Q. Or during the last 8 or 10 days of his life ?

A. No. I am not."

So much the worse for the expert ; but I fail to see how this discredits the evidence of facts given by the three doctors.

Before leaving the medical evidence, it is necessary that I should deal with a comment of the learned Judge who says, "It may also be noticed in this connection that Dr. D. N. Roy who saw Gopessur after the relapse in consultation with Dr. J. N. Mazumdar, and who is said to have given advice as to the capacity of Gopessur to make a will on 20th June has not been called. His evidence would, in my opinion, have been most valuable, and I cannot understand why it was omitted." Now, nothing can be clearer than that, if there is sufficient evidence of a fact, it is no objection to proof of it that more evidence might have been adduced.

But, apart from this, I do not fully appreciate the learned Judge's comment. To begin with, Dr. D. N. Roy only saw Gopessur on the 20th and 21st, and so he was not in a position to give direct evidence as to his mental condition on the 27th; in other words, like Col. Pilgrim he could only have expressed an opinion. The "clinical picture" of which the caveator's counsel and expert were in quest could not have been filled in by him, and he, as they, would have found that which there was "meagre and incomprehensible" when he essayed to speak as an expert.

I therefore fail to see how his evidence could have been "most valuable." But more than this, for what it may be worth, the cross-examination of Dr. J. N. Mazumdar by the caveator's counsel elicited information that it was Dr. D. N. Roy's view on the 21st that as Gopessur seemed to be better that day, there was no particular hurry about making a will, but as the case was bad he should make one.

The evidence of the three doctors is supported by that of the Petitioner and the other witnesses called on her behalf, but in the view I take, it is not necessary that I should examine their evidence in any detail at this stage. I, however, find it difficult to follow the learned Judge's comment on Biswanath Sen's absence from the witness-box, or the expectation that he would have given valuable evidence as to Gopessur's condition on the 26th. Biswanath is a brother of the Petitioner and Shambhunath and claims to be a creditor of the estate to the extent of Rs. 5,500 and, a few pages earlier in the judgment, a comment is made on him which makes me doubt whether, if he had been called, the learned Judge would in fact have regarded his evidence as valuable in the view he has taken of the case.

I now turn to the evidence of the caveator's witnesses as to Gopessur's mental condition. The first witness was Gora Chand Mullick, the caveator's nephew.

There can be no doubt that he has warmly espoused and keenly supported his uncle's cause, and that he has a strong bias in his uncle's favour. Consciously or unconsciously he has heightened the colour; if his evidence be credited, then Gopessur was practically in a state of coma that the doctors failed to observe, and on a careful consideration of his evidence, I cannot avoid the conclusion that he has gravely exaggerated Gopessur's debility. Bissessur the caveator presents an equally gloomily picture. His interest is obvious, but, beyond that, he unfavourably impressed the Judge, who further commented on the way he had been kept back and had not entered the witness-box until a late stage of the case. Why he should have been kept back does not appear, but the adverse comment it invites is so obvious, that it is difficult to understand how counsel came to overlook it. I may point out that though counsel has a discretion in such matters the Court is not powerless (Evidence Act, 135).

The two other witnesses Nityananda Thakur and Jogessur Kahar were justly treated by Chitty, J., as undeserving of credit. Not only is their evidence inherently improbable, but the circumstances under which they were procured is calculated to create neither confidence nor approval.

The conclusion then to which I come, on the best consideration I have been able to give to the case, is that on the 27th of June, at the time when Gopessur was alleged to have executed the will, he was of sound mind, and that, though very feeble and debilitated, he was capable of knowing what he was doing and of exercising a judgment as to the proper mode of disposing of his property.

Then was the instrument now propounded in fact executed by Gopessur?

The evidence is this: in support of the affirmative there is, first, the direct evidence of Shambhunath and Hem Chander Neogi, the attesting witnesses, and of the Petitioner and Prannath Sur, who all claim to have been actual eye-witnesses of the execution. Next, there is the testimony of Mr. Rutter, who deposes to his belief that the signature to the will is in the handwriting of Gopessur.

In opposition to its execution, there is the evidence of Gora Chand Mullick and the caveator Bissessur Dutt that in their belief the signature is not that of Gopessur, and the evidence given by them and Nityananda Thakur and Jogessur Kahar that it was impossible for him to have executed the document.

Then, over and above this evidence which has a direct bearing on the question at issue, there are the rival contentions as to the probabilities and improbabilities of the case, and in particular as to the truth or falsehood of the story as to the preparation of the drafts on the 20th of June.

This summary of the evidence invites one broad comment. On the Petitioner's side there is the evidence of eye-witnesses, which if contrary to the fact admits of no explanation but that it is a tissue of deliberate and concocted falsehoods. Indeed it was the case presented to us on behalf of the caveator that the story of the drafts was so obviously and palpably false that it was incumbent on us to go beyond the learned Judge and to hold affirmatively that "Shambhunath and Prannath conspired to give false evidence," and the learned counsel went on to say "as I present my case, I have to ask the Court to accept this view."

The line of reasoning really came to this, that the story of the drafts so clearly pointed to concerted perjury that it would be wrong to believe the evidence of the Petitioner's witnesses as to the execution of the will.

Though the case made before Chitty, J., that Shambhunath actually forged Gopessur's signature has been abandoned here still, as I have already pointed out, it is contended that he and the Petitioner had a hand in the forgery. The gravity of this charge cannot well be exaggerated, and this becomes the more apparent when the position of the persons thus charged is realized.

Babu Shambhu Nath Sen is an attorney of this Court, enrolled as such in 1904, and his general good character and the respectability of his family is not questioned.

Shambhunath is, and ever since his enrolment has been in the employment of Messrs. Rutter & Co., a firm of repute. Mr. Rutter, the head of that firm, is a gentleman held in high esteem, and indeed, in the course of this case, it has been distinctly said by counsel for the caveator that "no question is raised as to Mr. Rutter's veracity." Mr. Rutter describes Shambhu as a trusted servant of his.

The Petitioner is a lady of position, the deceased's widow. The other witnesses are of humble social position ; still they have characters which no doubt they value. Though perhaps it may be going too far to say that the presumption of innocence is so strong even in a civil case as to cast on him who alleges forgery the whole burden of proof, still the presumption against misconduct is among the probabilities to be taken into account in estimating the value of evidence, and this probability gains in strength where the character and position of the individual impugned is, apart from the particular case, above reproach.

Now the evidence of Shambhunath, Hem Neogi, the Petitioner and Pranath is distinct, that Gopessur signed the propounded instrument on the evening of the 27th of June. Their testimony is supported by Mr. Rutter, who states it as his belief that the signature on the instrument is Gopessur's. His acquaintance with the deceased's signature is not questioned. Had matters rested there it is difficult to see how the grant of probate could have been withheld. In saying this I do not overlook, and for this purpose I do not seek to controvert, though I refrain from affirming, the unfavourable comment passed by Chitty, J., on Pranath. Even if he be left out of consideration, there still remains ample evidence of execution.

I do not understand the learned Judge to have been unfavourably impressed by Shambhunath's demeanour, or by that of Jogendra Nath Sur or Hem Chander Neogi. Certainly he has not recorded any remark respecting the demeanour of any of these witnesses while under examination in manner provided by Or. XVIII, r. 12 of the Code.

As to the Petitioner's demeanour or the manner in which she sustained the ordeal to which she was subjected, the learned Judge is in no better position to form an opinion than this Court. The learned Judge's criticism on these witnesses is as follows: Hem Chander Neogi, he says, is "merely a servant on Rs. 15 a month" but for all that he may be a truthful witness and it is to be noted that he is a servant not of the Petitioner, but of Paramessur's family, so that the will is to the detriment of those he serves.

Jogendra Nath Sur, the learned Judge says, is interested to a large extent and is a man of no position or means. His interest, however, is not under the will, but as a creditor, while the estimate of his position and means is unduly depreciatory. This at any rate seems clear, that he was a friend of the deceased, and the friendship was of long-standing.

The evidence given by Shambhu Nath and the Petitioner is depreciated by the learned Judge not from its inherent demerits, or the unworthiness of these witnesses, but it is said that, as Pranath and Jogendra Nath Sur are not witnesses of truth, "this must reflect back on the Petitioner and Shambhu Nath." This is a doctrine to which I am unable to subscribe in the circumstances of this case.

What then is the evidence led in opposition?

First, we have Gora Chand Mullick's declaration that he does not believe the words "Gopessur Dutt" in the alleged will to be in Gopessur's handwriting.

Prior to this he had said he was acquainted with Gopessur's handwriting, but when he was shown Ex. D, he said, "I have got to compare it with other handwriting.' But notwithstanding this statement, and in spite of the other signatures not being shewn to him, he asserted his belief in the terms I have indicated. In cross-examination he was able to go further for he then asserts "I also say this will is not his will. I am prepared to swear it is not his signature." Later he says, "It was not his intention to make a will like this will. The signature is not like the signature of his hand. From all these circumstances I say it is not his signature."

Perhaps too literal an interpretation should not be placed on his declaration that before he came into the box, neither Mr. Kar nor any one else asked him about the signature of the will. This is a common form among witnesses of a certain type, and possibly Gora Chand should be given the benefit of this somewhat equivocal concession. But Gora Chand is not a man for half measures : not only does he gain sufficient confidence to make his unqualified statement regarding the will and the signature, but he is able to ascribe the Bengali date under the signature to the Petitioner. He betrays too much zeal.

Then comes Bissessur who in the witness-box is prepared to pledge his oath that the signature at the foot of Ex. D, the propounded instrument, is not his brother's signature. This confident assertion has to be contrasted with his behaviour when he was shewn the instrument by Mr. Rutter on the 19th of July, and with the attitude taken up in the affidavit supporting his caveat.

Surely if the signature is the manifest forgery that Bissessur now declares, he would have denounced it as such on the 19th of July, and he would have formulated his opposition in more emphatic terms. He was a witness who did not impress the learned Judge, and his statement that the signature is not his brother's is not in my opinion of any value.

Then there is the evidence which aims at showing Gopessur was incapable of executing a will on the 27th. This proceeds from Gora Chand Mullick, Bissessur Dutt, Nityananda Thakur and Jogessur Kahar. I have already dealt with the evidence of these witnesses so far as they purport to describe his mental condition ; their version of his physical incapacity is equally unconvincing. Nityananda and Jogessur seek to negative any opportunity or possibility of executing a will on the evening of the 27th, but I do not regard these witnesses as deserving of any credit. This view accords with the learned Judge's appreciation of their evidence ; it is supported by the general character of their testimony, and is justified by the mode in which they came to be ranged on the caveator's side.

In my opinion of the evidence directly bearing on the question whether Gopessur executed his will on the 27th June as alleged by the Petitioner, there is a distinct preponderance in favour of its execution. Is there then anything in the probabilities of the case that disturbs this preponderance ? To answer this it must be seen what are the facts and considerations that have to be taken into consideration in estimating these probabilities. We start with the fact that there was an estrangement between Gopessur and Bissessur, who alone opposes the will, and that Gopessur was at least anxious that Bissessur should have no interest in his property.

On the other hand he was on terms of affection with his wife, who had moreover, as far as one can judge, nursed and attended him with devotion in his distressing illness. There was, therefore, nothing in the state of the family or his feeling that would suggest it was improbable he should make an absolute disposition of his property in his wife's favour, and, in so saying, I do not forget the little boy, Paramessur's posthumous son, to whom he doubtless was attached, though not as extravagantly devoted as the caveator would have us believe. Then we have the undoubted fact that on Tuesday, the 29th of June, the alleged will passed into the custody of Mr. Rutter bearing the signature that is now denounced as a forgery. Our attention has been called to that signature, though not to the photographic enlargements and it has been suggested the D, the "u," and the crossing of the "t t" should arouse suspicion. It is a matter of common knowledge that forgeries commonly, I do not say always, present certain appearances which are indicative of their origin. Counsel, when questioned as to this, was unable to suggest that this signature exhibited any of these marks. I do not say that this is in any sense conclusive, but, at any rate, it justifies the view that when the document came into Mr. Rutter's possession, and that was comparatively speaking within a short time after Gopessur's death, it did not present those appearances which are commonly associated with a forged signature.

Then there is Bissessur's behaviour on the 19th of July, and the ordinary presumption against misconduct which I think the Petitioner is entitled to ask should be ranged among the probabilities in favour of her story.

And now I come to the probabilities which the caveator asserts weigh with overwhelming force against the validity of the will. First, I will take up the story of the preparation of the drafts and the propounded instrument, Exs. B, C and D. What is said by the caveator is this :— this story is so bound up with the actual issue in the case that if it be disbelieved, it creates an insurmountable improbability in the caveator's way and more than that, it would be impossible to act on the evidence of those involved in it, that is to say, of the Petitioner, Shambhunath, and Prannath when they speak to the execution of the will.

The story presented by the Petitioner is this. On the night of the 18th of June Gopessur suffered a relapse and on the 19th Shambhunath was sent for. In the evening Gopessur told him he wanted to consult him about his will. Nothing further, however, was said that night. On the next day, a Sunday, the topic was renewed and Shambhunath's version is as follows :—

"(To the Court—He said stop here to-night, we will have a talk to-morrow). The next day was Sunday the 20th June. After our meals myself and Prannath remained with Gopessur, Gopessur told me to make a will for him. To that I questioned why you are eager to make a will. To that the answer was 'As there was a relapse he had better make a will,' and the second reason he said that he had on several occasions heard from me that, in case of his dying intestate, his properties would go to his brother, and he said that you know our respective feelings towards each other, meaning himself and Bissessur. So by the will he wanted to exclude his brother. Then I enquired what kind of will do you want to make. He said first thing he wants to give everything to his wife, and also give her power to adopt and give certain legacies. Having heard that I told him to send a carriage to Mr. Rutter and he will do everything. To that he said 'Let me prepare the will and afterwards I shall go to Mr. Rutter to his office any other day, and get it attested by him and Mr. Rutter junior, and leave my will with them.' Then again he pressed me for the will.

(To the Court—To make the will for him).

To that I said one thing you ought to consider now. You are going to give your properties to your wife and give her power to adopt. In case she does not adopt and dies intestate, whom do you want your estate should go to, as in that case the properties which you are giving to your wife would go to her parent's line. To that he answered I have no children. She is my wife. I want to give her everything. I am not coming after my death to see how my wife deals with the properties. Hearing that I said you can write down your intentions on paper and that will be your will, only you are to see that an executor or executrix is appointed and that you sign it in the presence of two persons who must also witness it. Then he ordered his Sircar Prannath to bring paper and writing materials and he dictated his intentions and Prannath wrote. That was in my presence. This was about 12 noon. As there were certain interlineations, Gopessur asked Prannath to fair copy it and said in fair copying you make the last para. the third one and the third one the last para.

This, was the first copy that Prannath wrote. The third para. contains the legacies, he wanted that at the end so as to fill in the names and amounts of legacies at the time of execution. This contains what I heard Gopessur dictated correctly.

After it was written out, the testator read it. He said it was all right. Just then Gopessur's friend Jogendra Nath Sur came in. Jogendra was a neighbour of Gopessur. They had known each other from boyhood I think. I saw Jogendra with Gopessur since Gopessur's marriage. Jogen went into the room (myself and Prannath both were there), and Gopessur told him the same reasons as to relapse and said that he was going to make a will and handed over the paper to him, the first draft written out by Prannath, to read, saying that this contains the same provisions as he used to tell Jogen. Jogen Babu read it out.

(To the Court—He read it aloud. We all heard.) And then Gopessur told him to fair copy it, asking him to alter the paras as I have already said. As there was no paper in the room Prannath was going to bring paper from the Daftarkhana in the adjoining house which was the Thakurbaree, but Gopessur said you both better, meaning Jogen and Prannath, go there, and write out. They went away. About half an hour after they came back. I was all along with Gopessur and Jogen handed over both the papers to Gopessur. The original draft and the fair copy written out by Jogen He read both, Gopessur read both.

(Shewn document).

This is the fair copy I refer to. It was handed to Gopessur in my presence. It's in Jogen's handwriting.

During the time Prannath and Jogen were away, I don't recollect anything.

After reading both the papers Gopessur gave me the fair copy (Ex. C) to look at. On seeing I said this would not do as there was much space between the several paragraphs, and he enquired how it was to be written. I said there ought not to be any space so let it be written out again without any space. To that Gopessur directed Prannath to re-write it at night and give him the next morning, and gave both the papers to Prannath. He said there was no use of hurrying now, you can write at night, and give me the next morning, so that Gopessur would execute it in the presence of the doctors when they came. I stayed with Gopessur in this garden house that night. He asked me to stop that night also. I had also my father's permission when he turned up that night. Dr. J. N. Mazumdar came that night. He said the patient is much better now, and hoped to give him rice next morning—Monday morning. On Sunday my father was there in the morning, but came away when the doctors left in the morning, then again my father and mother both went up there a little before dusk I think, and I came away after the doctor left. I remained there that night.

Next morning (Monday, 21st June), at about 8 o'clock, Prannath brought all the three papers, the original draft, the fair copy and the copy he had written out the previous night, and gave them to Gopessur in my presence. Gopessur saw them. He read them and said that he was feeling much better so let the execution of the will be postponed now, and said, as soon as he was well and allowed out for drives, he would come to Mr. Rutter at his office and execute the will there, and told Prannath to keep the three papers in the almirah, and Prannath kept them there. The almirah was closed, Gopessur handed over the key which was attached to his Har (golden chain) he wore. He handed both key and chain, and Prannath opened the almirah and kept the papers there and handed the key and chain back. It was about 8 A.M."

For the caveator it was asserted before us that this is a false case, and that those of the Petitioner's witnesses who have deposed to it have conspired to tell a false story, and this assertion is based not on any definite sworn testimony to the contrary, but on the inherent incredibility of the story, and the inference invited by an examination of the documents.

It is said, it is incredible that Shambhunath should have preserved the attitude of aloofness he professes, seeing that the purpose for which he was invited was to assist in the preparation of the will, that the will itself points to the handiwork of a lawyer and not of a layman, and that the story as to the preparation of the three documents (Exs. B, C and D.), more particularly when regard is had to their appearance, is not worthy of acceptance.

I am disposed to think the assistance rendered by Shambhunath in the preparation of the will has been minimized and it is this that has furnished the caveator with his most potent and controversial weapon of attack, and if, at first sight, this would seem to imply a lack of candour on his part, a closer examination shows that he has dissociated himself from that which is formal, not that which is of real and essential importance in the will. Thus he, in effect, admits, without any attempt at concealment, that the mention of an executrix in the will may be fairly attributable to him, and that he had a hand in placing the absolute interest of Jarat beyond question. And after all, these are the two matters in which he might be said to have an interest, these are the matters of substance. The power to adopt was, if anything, to his detriment while the pecuniary legacies are of no serious moment. Much has been made of the phraseology and form of the will, and it is in this connection that Mr. Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, an attorney of this Court, has come forward to lend his support to the caveator's case. He is described, and has been treated by Mr. Justice Chitty, as an expert, and his evidence had a manifest influence on the learned Judge. In the view I take of this gentleman's evidence I do not consider it necessary to discuss in detail the relevancy or irrelevancy of its different parts, or his title to give the evidence he did as an expert : it suffices for me to say that I do not attribute to his testimony the importance that the caveator claims for it. Our attention has been drawn to words and phrases which it is said, in the light of Mr. Chatterjee's evidence, could only have owed their appearance to Shambhunath but it is not unreasonably answered that, if this was the caveator's case, then it is to be regretted that these points were not put to Shambhunath, and it is appropriately pointed out that he was cross-examined by a learned and experienced counsel in every way equipped, possibly as well equipped as Mr. Chatterjee, for the purpose of estimating whether the words and phrases were as pregnant of suspicion as Mr. Chatterjee would have the Court believe. Thus the caveator's counsel would see something sinister in the fact that the widow is merely authorized and not directed to adopt, and yet he is constrained to admit that, in law, the result is the same. Next he would see something even more sinister in the fact that the widow takes an absolute interest whilst no effective legal provision is made for the adopted son. It is difficult to appreciate with exactness what the train of reasoning here is ; whether the omission points to the presence, the absence, or the abuse of legal assistance, and the learned counsel did not succeed in elucidating this point. But be that as it may, it was conceded that the mere fact that an absolute interest was given to the widow was not in itself suspicious, and it could not well be otherwise contended in the light of common knowledge, and indeed, for what it may be worth, it may be remarked that the Privy Council in Dowlat Koer v. Ramphul Dass (6) upheld a will propounded by a widow in whose favour a similar disposition had been made. So it must be on the absence of an adequate provision for the adopted son that comment is made. Now it is outside my present purpose to construe the will so far as it relates to the adopted son's rights, but I am by no means sure that the author of the document may not have thought that the adoption, apart from special provisions, might detract from the widow's right in favour of the adopted son, for he expressly declares that the adopted son shall not be competent to put forward any manner of claim in respect of the testator's properties during the life-time of the wife. I do not propose to discuss the legal effect of the provision, but the words appear to me to suggest an impression in the person responsible for them, that the adoption in itself might create a right in the adopted son. This may have been a misimpression, and, if so, it is one into which a layman rather than a lawyer would have been misled and in any case I fail to trace Shambhunath's hand in it. So much for the caveator's contentions based on the internal evidence furnished by the words, phrases and provisions of the alleged will.

This brings me to a topic on which, before us, the caveator's counsel has principally directed and concentrated his attack, that is to say, the actual preparation of the documents B, C, D as disclosed by the evidence. The whole story it is urged is incredible. Thus it is said that it is ridiculous to suppose C was rejected because of the wide spaces between the paragraphs, and that this is merely a device for bringing Jogendra Nath Sur into the plot. I cannot agree with this. I think the explanation of the rejection is eminently reasonable, when it is borne in mind that the proposal was that C should be executed as a will. Then it is said that in view of the fact that both C and D are alleged to have been drafted in the daftarkhana no satisfactory explanation of the difference in the ink is given, for that vouchsafed by Shambhunath is improbable. But if an explanation was desired, it should have been sought of the only man who could give it. Prannath alone knows the conditions under which he wrote out Ex. D, but he was not questioned on this point. Then it is asked why was Mr. Rutter not instructed to approve the drafts, why was he not invited to attest the will, why was the will not executed in the presence of the doctors? No doubt had any of the precautions indicated in these questions been observed, much trouble would have been saved, but I cannot regard the failure to observe them as creating any serious improbability. The truth is superstition and caprice are not foreign to the execution of a will, and the reluctance that results from seeing in a will a "remembrancer of death" is not without its influence on the behaviour of intending testators. Then it is said Gopessur was in extremis. If by this is meant that he was in articulo mortis, and that he was testamentarily incapable, the answer is that this contention is against the weight of evidence: if it is meant that the will is alleged to have been executed in circumstances which call for a vigilant scrutiny of the evidence, my reply is that to the best of my ability I have endeavoured to perform that duty. Then how do matters stand if the preparation of Exs. B, C and D be looked at from the Petitioner's point of view? We start with this that I am convinced these documents were in existence on Tuesday, the 29th of June, and were handed to Mr. Rutter on the morning of that day. This is the conclusion at which Mr. Justice Chitty also arrived. The Petitioner's version, if true, affords a reasonable explanation of how the three documents came into existence, and yet, at the same time, the circumstances which explain their peculiarities, depending as they do on the curious and trivial chances of actual events, are not such as a forger would be likely to forecast or invent. More especially is this so if, as the caveator would have us suppose, the documents were prepared while Gopessur was in a moribund state or afterwards. I do not propose to examine the possibilities of this theory in detail, but it is not without its difficulties. The time at the disposal of the schemers was not long, while their undertaking was complex. Gopessur died in the early hours of Monday, the documents were in Mr. Rutter's possession on the following Tuesday morning. From this period must at least be deducted the time occupied in the funeral ceremony, that is to say from 6 or 7 in the morning, when the party started for the ghat till their return at 12 or 1. In the available time much had to be done; the story requiring the preparation of the three drafts had to be composed or sketched at any rate in outline by some one, the three documents had to be prepared with the interlineations, erasures and variations that they exhibit, the two writers and Hem

IN THE GOODS OF GOPESSUR DUTT.

Chander Neogi had to be procured and convinced, there was the attestation clause to be added by Shambhunath, and the attestation by him and Hem Chander, there was the admirable imitation of Gopessur's signature to be effected, and the widow's addition of the Bengali date. Leaving out all such hindrance to despatch as the feelings evoked by Gopessur's death might be expected to create, this would be no mean performance on the part of this confederation of forgers.

Though the caveator is not bound by the theory advanced in his interests, I have not thought it necessary to discuss other possible but unpropounded theories. On the other hand, as favouring the view that the drafts were prepared on the 20th, we have the fact that the advisability of a will was discussed when the doctors came on the 20th, while Mr. Rutter declares that he heard of the two general provisions of the will two or three times before the documents were brought to him. To escape from this important statement, the learned Judge says "Mr. Rutter's memory may be deceiving him on this point," while before us it has been suggested, not that Mr. Rutter was not told about the two general provisions, but that he must have been so told after the documents had been handed over to him.

But if this is the caveator's case, it is a pity it was not put to Mr. Rutter while he was in the witness-box, he could have dealt with it. For my part I can see no sufficient reason for not accepting Mr. Rutter's statements in the sense in which he made it, and if so, it unquestionably lends considerable support to the Petitioner's case that the documents were prepared before Gopessur's death.

I have discussed these three documents Exs. B, C and D in considerable detail as the caveator so largely rested his case on what he contended was the obvious falsehood of the story.

The conclusion to which I come is that the story of the three documents is in the main true, and though Shambhunath may not have been so detached as the evidence would make out, I hold that Exs. B, C and D were written out as the witnesses describe, and that Gopessur was responsible for them, and knew and understood their contents. His mental capacity at that time has not been questioned, so that had it been necessary it would have been open to the Petitioner to rely on the doctrine recognised in Perera v. Perera (5).

It now only remains for me to express the view I take of the whole case. The weight of evidence in my opinion is strongly in the Petitioner's favour, both as to Gopessur's mental condition and the fact of execution. Though there are matters on which there is room for doubt, I am unable to regard the probabilities as opposed to the case made by the Petitioner; rather otherwise. Moreover the mere improbability of this or that in so complex a transaction as that under consideration cannot go for much against the clear and distinct evidence of witnesses of good general character, and, after all, probability and improbability of the type with which we are here concerned is apt to become a matter of speculation and predilection, for different persons act differently in similar circumstances and much of that which has been classed as improbable in this case comes to little more than a failure to observe a higher standard of precaution and to do the wisest and safest thing under the circumstances.

The conclusion then to which I come is that Gopessur did sign Ex. D on the evening of June the 27th, as alleged by the Petitioner, that he intended by so signing to give effect to the writing as his last will, and that at the time he was of sound mind and capable of exercising a judgment as to the proper mode of disposing of his property, and that he knew what he was doing. No dispute was raised before us as to the legality of the attestation.

The judgment of Chitty, J., should, therefore, be reversed, and a grant of probate made to the Petitioner, Sreematy Jarat Kumari Dassi. The costs of the suit and appeal throughout must be borne by the Respondent, Bissessur Dutt.

WOODROFFE, J.—A considerable number of decisions have been cited upon the question of the nature of the proof required in the case of wills. In my opinion a reference to them is unnecessary for I am not aware that a probate case is in any respect singular as regards the application of the general principles of proof. Those general principles have been stated in the Evidence Act to be as follows:—

“Whoever desires any Court to give any judgment as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts must prove that those facts exist.” (Evidence Act, sec. 101). In this case we are asked to give judgment as to the existence of the will propounded and as to the legal rights which follow such a conclusion. Sec. 3 shows the meaning of proof to be that the fact (in this case the will) is proved when the Court, after considering the matters before it, either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of the particular case to act upon the supposition that it exists. Each case must therefore be determined on its own facts.

Upon however the decisions cited I would observe that the rule in Tyrrell v. Painton (1) applies in my opinion to cases where the circumstances of suspicion arise from the nature of the case as put forward by the propounder. In such cases the propounder must remove the suspicion which his own case creates. Where however the alleged suspicion against a will arises from facts which form parts of the impugnant's case then the Court must see whether the facts which are said to give rise to the suspicion are proved or whether the Plaintiff's case is proved. The rule therefore does not apply where the question is simply which set of witnesses should be believed [Shama Charan Kundu v. Khetromoni Dasi (7)]. In the present case the Defendants put forward (though in an uncertain way and at a late period of the case) a charge of forgery. This the learned Judge has found to be not established.

Of the Defendants' eight witnesses the first and last are formal. The learned Judge does not accept the caveator's evidence, nor that of the two former servants. He does not, at one passage at least, consider Colonel Pilgrim's evidence necessary for his decision though on other points he does refer to it. The bulk of Colonel Pilgrim's evidence was irrelevant. He stated that he was unable to pronounce an opinion either as to the cause of death or as to the physical and mental condition of the alleged executant. This admission substantially disposes of his evidence. Other portions of his testimony are inadmissible as being mere advice to the Court on the evidence and outside the opinion rule, or if admissible in form, are not in the present circumstances of value or relevant. This testimony appears to have been given not after hearing the evidence but on a copy of the deposition. It has been objected that this in itself makes the evidence inadmissible. I do not agree though I think the better course to follow where expert testimony is given is that the expert should hear the evidence as to which he is asked his opinion. There remain the two witnesses Mohini Mohan Chatterjee and Gora Chand Mullick. As regards the first it was contended that he was not expert. It is however quite clear in my opinion that he is expert on questions relating to the Bengali language which is his own (including Bengali legal terms) and Sanskrit which he has studied. It is essential however to distinguish the rule of qualification founded on the experience of the witness and that which permits him to advise the Court with an opinion. Every witness must be fitted or expert in the matter upon which he gives his supposed knowledge. In some cases, viz., where the witness is "expert" in the narrower sense his competency must be specially shown. The question however whether besides deposing to facts he is to be permitted to express his opinion is another matter. In each case therefore it must be asked, is the matter one upon which the witness is sufficiently qualified by experience; and if he is, is it a matter upon which the witness is permitted to assist the Court with his opinion. This must be (sec. 45, Evidence Act) a matter of foreign law, science and art, handwriting or finger impressions. It would be relevant in this case to prove by the evidence of persons who knew him that the testator was of limited education and without literary and legal attainment and then that the alleged will was written in literary Bengali and contained terms of a peculiar literary or technical legal character, and on these facts to invite the Court to say that the will was not written by the deceased. His evidence however in parts goes beyond this and where it does is inadmissible as where he was asked to express an opinion as to the literary skill and culture and legal knowledge of the deceased. The learned Judge states that this evidence raises a grave doubt whether the will was the exclusive composition of the alleged testator as the Petitioner's witnesses assert. As regards Gora Chand Mullick, the learned Judge, after stating that he is a partisan of Bissessur and that portions of his evidence are hard to believe, says that he is inclined to think that his story as to the deceased's physical conditions is substantially correct. These two are practically the only conclusions (though it may be doubted whether they amounted even to that) which are held to be established by the Defendant's evidence.

The question then became simply this: Had the Plaintiff under these circumstances made out his case? The learned Judge has held that he has not, because he thinks that there are elements of doubt and suspicion which have not been removed.

Before dealing with this there are two points of evidence which arise upon the Defendant's case as to which I desire to express my opinion. As regards Bissessur the learned Judge points out that he abstained from going into the witness-box until all his witnesses other than the experts and formal witnesses had given evidence. The Court might and I, venture to say under the circumstances of this case, should have directed that the caveator be examined earlier, if not (as would have been proper) in the first place. The Court has always power to do this under sec. 135 of the Evidence Act.

Next in re-examination of the witness, Gora Chand, an unproved copy of a statement briefed to counsel of his evidence was put into his hands and he was asked whether it correctly represented the substance of what he had told the caveator's attorney. The question though objected to was allowed and answered affirmatively. It is not necessary to consider whether it was admissible as the document itself was subsequently rejected. I would observe however that the Court could not assume that the document was proved from the refusal of opposing counsel to cross-examine to it. The latter was entitled to wait until the Court ruled whether the document had been proved or not. A question has arisen in connection with this as to the right of counsel to inspect a document which opposing counsel has put in the hands of a witness. The rule on this point appears to be correctly stated in Taylor on Evidence, 1452, as follows:—"On the whole the practice seems to be that if the cross-examining counsel, after putting a paper into the hands of a witness, merely asks him some questions as to its general nature or identity his adversary will have no right to see the document but that if the paper he used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness or if any questions be put respecting its contents or as to the handwriting in which it is written (as in the case, Peck v. Peck (8), cited to us in argument) a sight of it may then be demanded by the opposing counsel."

Proceeding then to the propounder's case we have the following facts: The will is not an unofficial one. The deceased had no children living. The evidence clearly establishes that he was on very bad terms with his brother Bissessur and desired to exclude his taking any portion of his estate. He was on good and probably affectionate terms with his brother Parmeswar who is dead and was possibly fond of his child. The latter however is provided for, having succeeded to his father's estate. If the alleged conversation between Shambhu Nath Sen and J. N. Mazumdar is admissible, a matter which is open to doubt, it is of too vague a character to establish any intention to benefit Parmeswar's son. There is no suggestion that the deceased was not on good terms with his wife to whom he left his property. It has been found that there is nothing improbable in such a disposition. Mr. Rutter says that about a week before deceased's death he had heard that the testator was going to make a will and that he had heard from Shambhu Nath Sen of the two general provisions of the will. The medical evidence (the veracity of which is not impeached) also proves preparations for a testamentary disposition. Mr. Rutter who was the solicitor of the family and whose credit it is admitted is beyond attack swears that the signature on the will is that of the deceased and that the will and the two drafts were in his possession on the Tuesday following the death of the testator. There is other evidence as to the signature which is strongly supported by the attitude which the caveator assumed on this point. Though he now alleges the will is a forgery he did not set that up in his affidavit of 20th August 1909 though in the previous month he had seen the will at Mr. Rutter's office when he says he at once detected that it was not his brother's signature. He says that Mr. Rutter asked him if he had any doubts with regard to the signature upon which the witness said "I told him how could I tell him." The affidavit is silent on the point.

The propounder's medical evidence establishes the mental capacity of the deceased. In my opinion the cross-examination of these witnesses which was very brief does not challenge their evidence as to the physical or mental condition of the deceased. It was not open then for the caveator to contend that their evidence was meagre or unsatisfactory on points which their cross-examination in no way challenged. It was argued that it was not good policy to cross-examine the doctors even though they had prior to suit been approached by or on behalf of the caveator who admits them to be persons of respectability anxious to speak the truth. One might have understood this argument where the credit of the witness was doubtful but this is not impeached. An omission to cross-examine is not intelligible on the assumption that there was a desire to elicit the truth. We have it then that there is a will containing provisions of a probable character, the intention to make and the general provisions of which were disclosed to a witness whose credit is not impeached; which bears a signature which by the same witness as by others is shown to be that of the deceased who by the testimony of medical witnesses (whose respectability is not impugned) was of sound and disposing mind. All this is most powerful evidence to support the evidence of preparation and actual execution of the will. The main attack here has been against the evidence as to the preparation of the draft on the 20th. It is contended that the evidence that the deceased dictated it without assistance except such as Shambhu Nath Sen admits is untrue and that in fact the draft was the composition of the latter witness who denies this from fear that it might be suggested that he had exercised undue influence over the deceased for the benefit of his sister. It is possible that the witness, Shambhu Nath Sen, may have understated the assistance which he gave to the deceased but that fact alone, even if it were established and he had been (as he was not) directly cross-examined on the point, would not in my opinion under the circumstances of the case be sufficient to displace the strong inferences in favour of the will which arise from the rest of evidence in the cause. If, as I find, the signature is that of the deceased and the latter was when he affixed it of sound mind and knew what he was doing the details as to the mode in which the will was actually prepared are in this case of secondary importance.

It is noteworthy that objection was taken to Mr. Rutter stating what Shambhu Nath had said to him prior to the death of the deceased relative to the preparation of the will, and that on the 7th January 1910 a suggestion was made to him in cross-examination that there was then in his office a deed of gift by the deceased's widow in favour of Parmeswar which was to be executed if probate was granted; a suggestion which is only consistent with there having been a will which gave the property absolutely to her. There is no caveat entered from Parmeswar's branch of the family though it is charged that the alleged forged will defeats the alleged intention of the deceased to benefit it. Hem Chander Neogi one of the attesting witnesses is employed by that branch of the family.

IN THE GOODS OF GOPESSUR DUTT.

It is further suggested that the attorney, Shāmbhu Nath Sen, who it is charged took the principal part in the alleged forgery of the will, told Dr. J. N. Majumdar that the deceased's nephew was to be benefited under the will which he was about to forge and which when produced in fact excluded the nephew. These and other suggestions, the nature and (on points) absence of cross-examination, and the time and mode in which the defence has been presented indicate very clearly to me that the caveator has no definite case, and the charges he now makes fail. On the other hand for the reasons I have stated I am of opinion that the propounder has established the will.

I agree therefore in decreeing this appeal and in the order passed thereon.

Provincial Small Cause Court, if may decide title—Procedure—Mesne profits if recoverable when Plaintiff out of possession—What must be proved—Petty case, pecuniary value not an unsatisfying test.

In a Small Cause Court suit the Judge is no doubt competent to decide the question of title upon which the claim depends, but if he does so it is incumbent on him to decide the question correctly and according to law.

Although a Plaintiff may perhaps recover mesne profits though out of possession still in order to recover damages in a case where he was out of possession, the Plaintiff must show that he has a right to immediate possession.

The maxim de minimis non curat lex should not be applied to Small Cause Court suits for damages in respect of immovable property for the importance of the case to the parties is not to be measured by the pecuniary limit of their claim.

ORIGINAL SIDE.—The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Fletcher and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chaudhuri sitting singly.

WE NOTE WITH PLEASURE THAT THREE ADDITIONAL Judges have been appointed to the Calcutta High Court Bench. Of these Mr. Teunon, I. C. S., Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs in Eastern Bengal and Assam, has already officiated as a Judge of the Calcutta High Court and is well-known to the profession. The other two appointments have been given to Indian barristers. In making these two appointments

Government may be said to have recognised the principle for which we have contended in these columns that at least a third of the appointments on the High Court Benches should be given to Indian members of the legal profession. Of the two barrister Judges, Mr. Hassan Imam, who only lately joined the Calcutta High Court, had a good practice at the Patna Bar. Although he is little known on this side of Bengal, yet we who have known him for many years feel confident that he will turn out a successful Judge. He is intelligent, cultured, free from any racial bias and we fully expect that he will prove worthy of the position to which he has been raised.

OF MR. A. CHAUDHURI, IT WILL SUFFICE TO say that he has been in the first rank of the legal profession for some years past. We are told that it has caused some surprise in professional circles that his services should have been requisitioned on the Bench and that he should have thrown up such a lucrative practice and so readily responded to this call to duty. We on the other hand would have been most painfully surprised and no less disappointed if any man of his position at the Bar had refused to go on the Bench when required, for no better reason than that he was getting much more at the Bar. According to the best traditions of the English Bar, a member of the Bar ought never to refuse a judgeship when it is offered to him. The Bar is and should always be the recruiting ground for judges and the prestige of the Bench and of the profession would be a thing of the past if it ever ceased to be so. The most eminent Judges on the English Bench have almost all been eminent men at the Bar and their income at the Bar has not unoften been far in excess of the professional income of the leaders of the Bar in India. Yet they have never hesitated to abandon their practice when they were required to serve on the Bench.

SUCCESSFUL MEN IN INDIA OWE EVEN A HIGHER duty to the Indian community in respect of high judicial and other responsible appointments. We have always been hammering at the gate of Government for equal treatment with other British subjects in the Empire and we assert that all positions of responsibility and trust should as a matter of principle be given to the men best fitted for the position. What would become of all this talk if we do not cultivate sufficient public spirit to be able to make sacrifices when called upon to serve the State. It would, therefore, have been a calamity from the Indian point of view if Mr. Chaudhuri had not accepted the judgeship that was offered to him by Government. The result of it might have been that the appointment would have gone out of the country and the claims of Indians to such appointments would have suffered a set back which would have greatly prejudiced our claims to any such responsible position for some time to come. We are glad to find that the view we have expressed above is the general sense of the community and that the offer of the appointment to him and the acceptance of it by Mr. Chaudhuri has given universal satisfaction.

RE-PARTITION OF BENGAL.

We have shown by unimpeachable authority what has been the boundary of Bengal historically, what it is linguistically and what it should be geographically. Now that Bengal is being reunited after six years of schism and strife and is being raised to the status of a Presidency Government, it is natural that every class and community of people who have the Bengalee language as their mother tongue should feel most strongly about being brought together under the same Province and under the same form of Government. We have shown that the existing districts and divisions have been formed and not unfrequently transformed only for the sake of administrative convenience and without any regard for their historical, geographical or linguistic boundaries. So long as Bengal, Behar, Orissa and Chota Nagpur formed one province it was a matter of comparative indifference whether a Bengalee-speaking district or sub-division was included in one or other of the above Divisions. But now that they are being divided into several Provinces, it would cause the Bengalees all the pangs of partition if the outlying Bengalee-speaking districts were to be severed from Bengal and included in Behar, Chota Nagpur, Orissa or Assam. No doubt the partition of Sylhet and Goalpara is not of recent origin but still the people of these parts desire as strongly to come back to their kins as any other section of the Bengalee community.

It is but right and proper that the whole and every component part of the Bengalee community should participate equally in the great Royal boon and should not be made to feel any grievance in respect of it. It would therefore be singularly unkind and impolitic to sever the Bengalees of the outlying districts from their brethren and to transform the boon into a dire grievance so far as they are concerned. Their grief will be all the greater because under this partition they would be left as small detached communities and as such would form a hopeless minority in the new province. Leaving the boundaries as they were before would also be of considerable administrative inconvenience to the new Province. The two languages of Behar and Orissa have little in common and on the top of that to add Bengalee as a third language for the new Province would surely add to its administrative complications.

A Province with three Court languages would make the life of judicial and executive officers a burden to them. They are expected to acquire a working familiarity with the vernaculars of the Province. If every member of the executive or judicial service has to learn Uriya, Bengalee and Behari, they would hardly acquire any familiarity with any of them. The result of tacking a number of Bengalee-speaking districts with Orissa, Chota Nagpur and Behar will require even the police and other officers to acquire a fair knowledge of more than one language as otherwise difficulties would arise on the occasion of their transfer from one district to another. Records will also have to be kept in different districts and divisions in different languages. That such inconveniences existed in the past is no justification for their continuance under the present momentous changes. It needs hardly any argument to convince any practical man of the inconveniences and the desirability of obviating them when the Provinces are being reformed. If the Bengalee language was altogether eliminated from Behar it would be ever so much more convenient for all classes of officers—judicial, executive, police and ministerial. So from every point of view the Bengalee-speaking districts and sub-divisions should be excluded from Behar and included in the Presidency of Bengal. In any event Manbhum, Dhalbhum and the Sonthal Pergunnahs from Rajmehal to Deoghur should not be repartitioned from Bengal.

THE LEGAL SOURCES OF HINDU LAW.

The sources of law recognised by Hindu Law are enumerated as follows:—

"Srutī, Smṛitī, good custom, what is agreeable to one's soul and deliberate will are laid down as the sources of law (1).

"Four persons versed in the Vedas and Dharma

(1) श्रुतिः स्मृतिः ब्रह्मचरः स्वस्व च प्रियमात्मनः ।

अन्यक् ब्रह्मचरः कामः धर्मेन्द्रविमर्शं कर्तुं ॥

or a body of persons versed in the three Vedas is a Parshat, whatever it says is law, and so what ever one supremely learned in spiritual lore says" (2).

So too Manu.

"The Veda, Smriti, good custom, what is agreeable to one's soul, these are laid down as the four direct proofs of Dharma" (3).

In a previous article [16 C. W. N., p. lvi], I have dealt with the nature of Sruti as well as the legal foundation of the authority of professional opinion.

In considering these sources of law it is necessary to bear in mind that by Dharma the Hindu law-writers understand not law in the narrow sense of the word but a far more comprehensive idea. Dharma strictly understood is the eternal order of things, it is that which holds the world together, regulates every movement in the universe and is in short the principle of order, regularity and justice which is the supreme principle of universe. With reference to human conduct, it embraces all human conduct from the minutest movements of the limbs to the most momentous acts. In the whole literature of Hindu religious law, this comprehensive conception was never completely displaced by a more specialised notion indicating Law as we now understand it in its narrowest sense, though Vyavahara as a distinct and important branch of Dharmashastra was no doubt developed in the later Smritis.

This conception of Dharma or some analogous idea of a universal principle of right and order more or less vaguely apprehended was the earliest notion analogous to law known to humanity. While in Europe each branch of law started off from this common stock and formed a new department of human knowledge clearly and distinctly marked off from other branches, in India to very late stages in the growth of knowledge these special conceptions yet formed departments of one comprehensive conception of a law of order in general,—i.e., of Dharma.

I have pointed out in a previous article that Sruti furnishes very scanty material for civil law and the references to Sruti in later law must be taken as referring to a hypothetical Revealed Law than to the extant Vedas. But viewed as a source of Dharma in the wider sense even the extant texts of the Sruti are living and potent as regulatives.

In the age of the Smritis the Sruti is very largely replaced in most matters of ritual and surely in matters of law by the Smritis. The Smritis, with the single exception of Narada, are themselves very comprehensive treatises which undertake to regulate from the minutest to the most important items of human conduct. Narada's Smriti was obviously an abridgement of a then extant text of Manu with alterations and additions, so far as necessary, clearly directed towards furnishing a manual for the purposes of administration of justice. How the Smritis were developed by schools of law by incorporating traditional learning and existing customs I have attempted to show in my previous article.

But with all their attempt at comprehensiveness the Smritis clearly recognised the necessarily incomplete character of their work. Hence the recognition of other legal sources of law.

Of these custom (सदाचारः) is the most important. It is likely that custom first found recognition as one of the indicia by which divine law had to be ascertained, which is the view distinctly laid down in the Mimansa. According to a well-known principle of exegesis (called the Holakadhikarana Nyaya) where there is a well-established custom it must be regarded as founded on a text of Sruti known to the founders of the custom but which has been lost. Assuming that the old school of Hindu Pontiffs referred to existing custom for solving questions of law referred to them, and assuming further that in ancient times no rule could have a binding force without a belief in its divine origin the conclusion seems irresistible that the recognition of custom owed its origin to a belief in its supernatural ordinance which was the source of authority of all primitive law. But later on this principle was clearly departed from. For when Manu [II, 12] and Yajñavalkya refers to (सदाचारः) [Yajn. I, 7] good custom as a source of law, it is to custom as such without reference to any hypothesis of divine origin. So too Manu [VIII, 3] requires the king to do justice "देशदृष्टेः शास्त्रदृष्टेः हेतुभिः"

"according to principles found in (the custom of) the country as well as those found in the Shastras (religious works). Here the Shastric and customary rules are set up as independent principles of decisions and Medhatithi whose comments follow the spirit of the text more closely than that of any other commentator of Manu, regards the reference to be to customs opposed to the written law (विवक्षित) as well as to such as are not inconsistent with it (अविवक्षित).

It is possible that the recognition of custom as binding by its own force apart from its being the embodiment of a lost Sruti may have been due to the necessity of maintaining unimpaired the laws and customs of a country newly conquered. An indication of this is furnished by the emphatic

(2) चत्वारः वेदधर्मेणाः पर्यन्ते विद्यमाने वा ।

वा ब्रूते च धर्मः स्यादेकोवाध्यात्मवित्तमः ।

(3) वेदः स्मृतिः सदाचारः सख्य च प्रियमात्मनः ।

terms in which the King is required to regard the customs of the country conquered by him. [Cf. Yajnavalkya, I, 343]. This recognition of foreign custom must have reacted upon the theory of the validity of local customs.

As to the two other sources referred to by Yajnavalkya they may be shortly dismissed. Where a rule of law is optional or where the law lays down no rule of conduct a person may act according to his own considered judgment. This is what Yajnavalkya means by laying down "सत्यं च प्रियमात्मनः," and "सत्यं क संकल्पजः कामः," as sources of law, understanding by that term all regulation of conduct.

Two other sources of new law which were in operation even before the Smritis were promulgated, and which must have had important influence on the development of law were the decrees of the King and the regulations of village or caste communities. These are recognised as legal sources of law though not enumerated in the text's cited above.

In the dense darkness that surrounds the history of Hindu law it is yet possible to mark a few important stages in the development of the power of Kings to make laws. The Vedic kings were nothing more than military captains and in India as elsewhere the King came in not as a maker of laws but as an arbitrator of disputes. The law was eternal and divine of which the Brahmans were repositories and the King but an administrator. But with the growth of Kingly power the King's power to make laws came gradually to be recognised. Consistently with the theory of a divine law, the royal legislative power was based on the divine character of the King. It is doubtful when the divinity of the King came first to be recognised, but it seems clear that at the time when the extant Code of Manu was prepared the King's legislative power was yet in the making and was deemed an innovation. For the Manu Sanhita in establishing the obligatoriness of the King-made laws precludes the proposition with an elaborate argument based on the divine character of the King and concludes that hence his commands to his officers as well as others should be implicitly followed (a).

The authority of the King to make laws at any rate within the limits of divine law was fully established during the age of the Smritis; for Yajnavalkya in laying down the principles for the guidance of corporations mentions राजकृत धर्म or 'King-made law' along with the law framed by the community itself and the common law of the Shastras as the regulatives of the conduct of members of the community (b).

But the legislative authority of Kings was checked even in the age of the Smritis. As I have shown in my previous article the authority of the King passed gradually into the hands of professional regulators of Dharma and from that date down to the British rule the further development of Hindu law was left entirely in the hands of learned Brahmans.

If this be a true account of the sources of Hindu law a study of these tends to modify to some extent our ideas as to the sources and the course of development of law in general. In Europe too the course of development can be traced to have run on somewhat parallel lines to some extent. The history of Roman law up to the age of the Pontiffs and that of Indian law to the age of interpretation seem to have been very nearly parallel. But while Rome law passed out of the hands of spiritual legislators and became secularised, in India it continued in the hands of the spiritual leaders of society. The short spell of secular law into which we gain an insight in the Artha Shastras of Chanakya must soon have been broken.

The period when Buddhism reigned supreme in the greater part of India does not seem to have had much influence in secularising the law, for with Buddhists as well as with Hindus law was more a matter of religion than of secular relations. The Mahomedan rule over the greater part of India still further strengthened the power of the expounders of religious law and the law as it came down to British rulers was if possibly more rigidly spiritual than it was ever before.

While the religious character of law led to a decline of what little power the sovereign had over it in the East, the secularisation of law in the West led to the exactly opposite consequence. Legislation as an innovation of the existing law was scarcely known in ancient Rome. It was the product of a later age when law had completely shaken off its religious associations. The authority of the sovereign over legislation by way of innovation being thus once established, the road was clear to a centralisation of all legislative power in the sovereign. Although in the later Empire and the feudal times there are indications of a practical realisation of this idea, the theoretical exposition of law as essentially the command of the sovereign was not possible till the days of Hobbes. The lingering remnant of the old religious conception in a law of Nature still greatly hampered the growth of this new conception and it must be said that despite the strong advocacy of Austin and his numerous followers the idea of law as nothing but an embodiment of Sovereign Power has not yet obtained complete ascendancy in Europe.

sentation to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the title, but he declined to do so and proceeded to investigate the question of title himself. This he was no doubt competent to do for the purpose of determining the question of the Defendants' liability for damages, but if he did so, it was incumbent on him to decide the question correctly and according to law. He has rejected the survey map produced by the Defendant on the ground that the tank in dispute has not been clearly located upon it while he accepts the thak map produced by the Plaintiff which was open to a precisely similar objection. Moreover he finds that the Defendant was in possession at the time in respect of which the suit was brought. Now a Plaintiff may perhaps recover mesne profits even though he be out of possession, see Dyamoyee v. Modhoo Soodun (1) and Dwarkaram v. Jogessur Lall (2); but to recover damages in a case like the present he must at least show that he has an immediate right to possession, if he were claiming it. This the Plaintiff has failed to do in this case. It was argued that de minimis non curat lex, and that the amount at stake being so small this Court would not interfere in revision. The importance of the case to the parties, however, is not to be measured by the pecuniary limit of the claim. It is notorious that before embarking on litigation as to title, litigants in this country frequently endeavour to obtain an advantage, or what they think will be an advantage, by securing in their favour a decree of a Small Cause Court or a decree under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, or an order of a Criminal Court. That has no doubt been the object of the present Plaintiff, and it is not one which should be encouraged. That this Court has ample jurisdiction to interfere is not denied. The true principle to be followed is, we think, that enunciated by the Bombay High Court in Poona City v. Ramji (3). The powers conferred by sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act are no doubt discretionary, but at the same time that section is somewhat wider in its scope than sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

We think that the judgment of the Small Cause Court is clearly not in accordance with law, and that it is a case in which we should interfere. We accordingly make the Rule absolute and set aside the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court and in lieu thereof order that the Plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs. The Plaintiff must also pay the costs of this Rule. We fix the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Nor can the shareholders be restrained by injunction from considering the question of such removal at an Extraordinary General Meeting.

The remedy of the Managing Agents for dismissal, if wrongful, lies in a suit for damages.

ISLE OF WIGHT RAILWAY CO. v. TAHOURDIN (1) relied upon.

This suit was instituted by the Plaintiff firm against the Defendant Co. for (a) a declaration that the services of the Plaintiff firm as Managing Agents of the Defendant Co., cannot be dispensed with otherwise than by a special resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting of the company specially convened for the purpose, of which meeting not less than twelve calendar months' notice should be given, and at which persons holding five-sixths of the issued capital for the time being shall be present personally or by proxy or by attorney; (b) for a declaration that it is not competent for the Defendant Co. to dispense with the services of the Plaintiff firm as Managing Agents by any resolution held under and referred to in a letter purporting to be a notice to that effect; (c) that the Defendant Co. be restrained by an injunction of this Hon'ble Court from passing any resolution at any meeting to be held under or in pursuance of the said notice. The notice was in these terms:

Notice is hereby given that an extraordinary general meeting of the Baraboni Coal Concern Ltd. will be held at No. 7, Swallow Lane, Calcutta, the registered office of the Company on Tuesday, the 28th day of November 1911, at 10 o'clock in the afternoon for the purpose of considering the past and present management of the company's business so far as it concerns its Managing Agents, Messrs. N. C. Sircar & sons, and for deciding what steps, if any, should be taken with regard thereto and for the passing of such resolution or resolutions in relation to the premises as may be thought fit particularly including a resolution or resolutions dispensing with the services of the said firm of Messrs. N. C. Sircar & Sons as such Managing Agents as aforesaid and appointing other Managing Agents. Dated Calcutta, the 17th day of November 1911.

By order of the Board.

Calcutta.

On the 22nd of November 1911, the Plaintiff firm obtained a Rule for a temporary injunction in terms by the last prayer quoted above.

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh, for the Defendant Co., showed cause.—If it should turn out that the Plaintiffs are wrongly dismissed the Defendant Co. are liable to an action for damages. The employment of Managing Agents is purely a matter of personal service and an injunction which would run counter to the wishes of the general body of shareholders ought not to be granted. If the company has not had any dividend for a very long time surely the shareholders have a right to consider the position and get rid of their Managing Agents, if it is found that it is owing to them that the present unfortunate situation has been brought about. The passing of a resolution in breach of the agreement cannot be restrained, for it is not distinctly specified as to what the meeting proposes to do. As regards an agreement of personal service of this kind your Lordship cannot interfere by way of an injunction. The only point from which your Lordship can consider this point is from a service point of view. There was admittedly a breach of duty on the part of the Agents. A director or a person in the position of a director could not get an injunction to force a company to employ him or to restrain a company from dismissing him. A Managing Agent could not be in a higher position than a director. The rule in the light of the position with regard to the Articles is easily disposed of. (Palmer's Company Law, p. 194). Their only course is to bring an action for damages for wrongful dismissal if it is wrongful. He relied on Bainbridge v. Smith (2), (Palmer's Company Precedents, p. 1243), Mair v. Himalaya Tea Company (3), and submitted that the Court could not by injunction enforce a contract for personal service. Secs. 21 and 56, cl. (f) of the Specific Relief Act (Act I of 1877) are quite clear on the point. Counsel submitted that persons bringing suits against companies for enforcement of personal contract have never been successful. Eley v. Positive Government Security Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (4), Browne v. La Trinidad (5). The company have a perfect right to hold the proposed meeting, Harben v. Phillips (6), Isle of Wight Railway Co. v. Tahourdin (1), Burland v. Earle (7). On the authorities cited your Lordship cannot restrain the holding of the proposed meeting.

Mr. J. E. Bagram (with him Mr. H. Knight) in support of the Rule.—This case would never have been arisen but for some friction between Messrs. Wilson and Bertram on the one hand and Mr. N. C. Sircar on the other—all being directors. Most coal companies had come to grief for there was a boom and then a slump. The management had always acted with the authority and sanction of Messrs. Wilson and Bertram and now that things have gone a little wrong they raise all these questions. His Lordship should not be prejudiced by ex parte statements. Could the company dismiss the Agents—that was the real point. It has been treated as though it was an individual case but there was distinction between an individual and a corporation and a company. If the company passed a resolution adverse to the Managing Agents the first point for consideration would be whether that should be treated as a dismissal. Under Art. 99 the company could not act as they purported to do. Harben v. Phillips (6). The object of the injunction was to prevent the company wielding a power which they had not the power to wield. A person may not have power to do a thing but may claim it and cause damage. The shareholders had the power in a general meeting to appoint but not to dismiss. On the authority of Browne v. La Trinidad (5), if the company dismissed the Managing Agents in accordance with the terms of the contract then the agents could not complain. In the case of a corporation, it must be shown that the act was one which was binding on the corporation and the authority cited showed what acts were binding on the corporation. Acts binding on the corporation were the acts contained in the Articles of Association. The proposed action of the company must be sanctioned by the Articles of Association. Unless the provisions of the Articles authorised the dismissal of the agents by the company they could not be dismissed. Automatic Filter Syndicate Co., Ltd. v. Cunningham (8). Articles were for the protection of the minority. The proposed resolution would be invalid but might cause damage. Unless the Articles contained a prior assent of the shareholders on the part of the company binding them there is no authority to say that that act is applicable to the Co., so as to bind them. The Directors &c. of the Ashbury Railway Carriage & Iron Co., Ltd. v. Hector Riche (9). The proposed meeting could be approved by all the shareholders and therefore ineffectual, and might cause damage, In re North of England Steamship Company (10). The company was endeavouring to do that which it had no power to do. Quin v. Salmon (11), Baily v. British Equitable Assurance Company (12).

CHITTY, J.—This suit was filed on the 22nd November by the firm of N. C. Sircar & Sons against the Baraboni Coal Concern Ltd. for (1) a declaration that the service of the Plaintiff firm as Managing Agents of the Defendant Company cannot be dispensed with otherwise than by a special resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting of the Company specially convened for that purpose of which meeting not less than 12 calendar months' notice shall be given and at which persons holding not less than five-sixths of the issued capital for the time being of the Company shall be present personally or by proxy or attorney ; (2) for a declaration that it is not competent to the Defendant Company to dispense with the services of the Plaintiff firm as Managing Agents by any Resolution passed at any meeting held under or in pursuance of the notice above referred to and dated the 17th day of November 1911 ; and (3) for an injunction, that the Defendant Company be restrained by injunction from passing at any meeting to be held under or in pursuance of the said notice of the 17th day of November 1911, any resolution purporting to dispense with the services of the Plaintiff firm as Managing Agents of the Defendant Company, and from interfering with the conduct of the business of the Company by the Plaintiff firm as its Managing Agents, otherwise than in accordance with the provisions contained in the Articles of Association of the Company and the said agreement of the 29th day of May 1911. On the same day Counsel for the Plaintiffs applied for and obtained a rule for a temporary injunction in much the same terms. I suggested, when the matter came on for argument, that the rule might by arrangement stand over till the hearing, and the proposed meeting of the Company be adjourned, the hearing being expedited. This suggestion, however, was not accepted, and I must give my decision on the rule. The matter has been argued at great length on either side, but I propose to deal with it as briefly as possible. I do not wish to enter into the merits of the case itself, but it is impossible to altogether avoid doing so from the close connection of the rule with the suit and the similarity of the reliefs claimed. The only question now before me is whether the Company should be restrained pending the disposal of the suit from passing a resolution purporting to dispense with the services of the Plaintiffs' firm or from interfering with the conduct of the business of the Company by the Plaintiffs' firm otherwise than in accordance with the Articles of Association and the agreement of the 29th May 1907. A large number of authorities were referred to, which deal with the removal of a Director by a Company, where the Articles of Association do not contain any provision for such removal. It was pointed out by the Petitioner's Counsel that although in the case of the Defendant Company Art. 99 provides for the appointment of Managing Agents, neither it nor any other article provides for their removal. This is no doubt the case, but I must not be taken to accept as correct the proposition put forward at the Bar that the Company could not therefore dismiss any Managing Agents whom they had appointed. I am of opinion that the cases cited have little or no bearing on the present case. The position of a Director is very different from that of Managing Agents, who are merely servants of the Company. Further in this case the Plaintiffs' claim is based on the agreement of 29th May 1907, and by that they must stand and fall. It is true that the Company entered into that agreement purporting to act under the authority of Art. 99, but so far as the Plaintiffs are concerned their contract is contained in the agreement alone. If the learned Counsel's argument as to the Articles of Association was sound, it would follow that the Company had no power to make the stipulation as to the removal contained in the agreement, or to act upon it. The Plaintiffs, however, cannot of course plead that. It was conceded that if it were a simple case of wrongful dismissal, the Plaintiffs would have no case on their present plaint as framed. Their only remedy would be by an action for damages for wrongful dismissal. It was argued, however, that the threatened resolution would not amount to a dismissal. I am unable to fully appreciate the learned Counsel's argument on this point. At one time he said it would not be a dismissal because it would not be the act of the Company. If that were so, the Company would not be the appropriate Defendants in this suit. The Plaintiffs ought to sue the individual or individuals by whose act they would suffer or had suffered damage. The Company clearly can only be sued in respect of an act done or purporting to be done by itself. If the act threatened, the passing of the resolution did not operate as a dismissal, the Plaintiffs would have no cause of action against the Company for wrongful dismissal. If it caused damage to the Plaintiffs in some other way, the correct course would be for them to sue the Company on that cause of action, if any were so created. It was perhaps necessary for Counsel to frame his argument in some such way as this, because if the case be one of a contract for service, the Plaintiffs are met by the combined effect of secs. 21 and 56 of the Specific Relief Act. They could not enforce the contract of service against the Company, nor could they by injunction directly obtain the relief prescribed by sec. 21. I cannot accede to the argument of their Counsel that sec. 57 would help them. If they could not enforce the positive contract of service, they clearly could not obtain an injunction to restrain the Company from dispensing with their services, except in a given manner, or until after a stated period ; for the result of this would be to continue their services, and so in effect to specifically enforce the contract. It would be a very strong measure to restrain the body of shareholders from expressing their opinion at a meeting duly convened. It is the only way they have of interfering in the matters of the Company. On this point the remarks of the Lords Justices in Isle of Wight Railway Co. v. Tahourdin (1) are very pertinent, though the question in that case was as the removal of directors, not the dismissal of servants. It is by no means certain that the resolution, of which the Plaintiffs are so apprehensive, will be passed. It is not certain what will be its effect. I do not desire to go into the merits of the case. It is conceded on both sides that there is considerable friction with regard to the management of the Company, and in the minds of some of the shareholders considerable dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Plaintiffs as Managing Agents. It is expedient that the matter should be ventilated, and it cannot be better ventilated than at a meeting of the shareholders. If the proposed resolution be not passed, the Plaintiffs will have no cause of complaint against the Company. If it be passed, it remains to be seen what will be its effect. If the Plaintiffs are thereby dismissed, they will have their remedy. If they are not, but they thereby suffer some other damage, they will also have their remedy. It was said by their Counsel that in this last case the damages would be too remote

N. C. SIRCAR & SONS v. THE BARABONI COAL CONCERN LD.

to support a claim in a suit for damages. If that be so, it is clear that I ought not to restrain by injunction an act which would have such a shadowy result.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the present application must fail. The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2485 OF 1911

WITH RULE No. 5356 OF 1911.

STEPHEN, J. RAJA RAGHUBUR SAHI, COXE, J. Defendant, Appellant,
v.

1911, MAHARAJA SRI PRATAP
29, November. UDOY NATH SAHI DEO,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Second appeal—Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908, B. C.), secs. 87, 264, sub-sec. (1), cl. (8)—Suit before settlement officer—Appeal to Judicial Commissioner—Second appeal to High Court, if excluded—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), sec. 100.

No second appeal lies from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi passed on appeal from a decision of a settlement officer in a suit under sec. 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, the operation of sec. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code being excluded in such cases by sec. 87 read with sec. 264, sub-sec. (1), cl. (8) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

Whether a jaigirdari tenure is of a hereditary nature or one for life is a matter which a settlement officer is competent to decide under sec. 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

RAJA RAGHUBUR SAHI v. MAHARAJA SRI PRATAP UDOY NATH SAHI DEO.

This was an appeal preferred on the 5th of September 1911, against the decree of Mr. D. H. Kingsford, Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur at Ranchi, dated the 13th of July 1911, reversing that of Babu Bhuban Mohun Chatterjee, Assistant Settlement Officer of Ranchi, dated the 31st of August 1909.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

Under orders of Government, Settlement Survey operations were commenced in Pergunnah Burway. Before the settlement authorities, the Defendant, Raja Raghubar Sahi Deo, claimed the said Pergunnah as his Jaagir descendible to children, generation after generation. The Plaintiff, Maharaja Pratap Udai Nath Sahi Deo, objected to this on the ground that it was merely a life-grant, resumable upon the death of the grantee. The Settlement Officer made an entry in the Khewat that the Jaagir was "Putra-putradik." In view of that decision the Maharaja instituted a suit in the Court of the Assistant Settlement Officer at Ranchi for correction of the entry made in the Khewat. The suit was, however, dismissed by the Settlement Officer, and an appeal was filed against it before the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur at Ranchi. The Maharaja succeeded in the appeal, whereupon the Defendant filed an appeal from the appellate decree before the High Court, and also made an application under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and sec. 15 of the Charter Act on the ground that, should it be held that there was no second appeal, the Court should interfere under its revisional powers. The gross annual collection of the estate was stated by the Defendant to be, according to the Road-cess papers, about Rs. 88,000.

Mitter, Surendra Madhub Mullik and Harihar Prosad Singh) for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri (with Babu Jogesh Chandra Dey), for the Respondent, took a preliminary objection that there was no appeal to the High Court, and there was no case made for the exercise of the revisional powers of the Court. Chapter XII of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was analogous to Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and was complete in itself. Sec. 87, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, corresponds to sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended in 1907. It provided in sub-cl. (2) that appeal lay in the prescribed manner and to the prescribed officer from decisions passed under sub-sec. (1). Sec. 264, cl. (viii), empowered the Local Government to prescribe the officer to whom, and the manner in which appeals should lie from orders or decisions passed under sec. 87. By Government Notification 786 T. R., dated the 21st May 1909 (See Part I, Calcutta Gazette, page 729), the Local Government prescribed that such appeals were to be heard by the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur. The expression "Judicial Commissioner" is defined in sec. 3 (vi) and means the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, a special officer. Second appeals are provided for only in cases which fall under Chapter XVI of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (see sec. 224). Sec. 109A (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, distinctly provides for second appeals to the High Court. In the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act the provision has been deliberately omitted.

Mr. B. C. Mitter contended that it was never intended that a Revenue Officer should determine difficult questions of title, and the scheme of the Act showed that he had no jurisdiction in such matters. The provisions of sec. 87 were similar to those of sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy

RAJA RAGHUBUR SAHI v. MAHARAJA SRI PRATAP UDOY NATH SAHI DEO.

Act, under which the High Court had ruled that a Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to decide disputes as to title to land [see Norendro Nath Chowdhury v. Srinath Sandel (2), Pandit Sirdar v. Mea Jan Mirdha (3), Padmanand Singh v. Bajo (4)]. In support of the proposition that unless the right of appeal had been expressly or by necessary implication, taken away the right remained, reliance was also placed upon Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1), Nilmoni Singh v. Bakranath (5), Ram Lochan v. Beni Prosad (6), Kamaraju v. Secretary of State for India (7).

Mr. Sinha contended that even if it should be held that there was no appeal, there was a sufficient case for interference under the revisional powers of the Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—This matter comes before us on appeal and also on a Rule. The appeal was from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur sitting on appeal from an order under sec. 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

A preliminary objection is taken by the Respondent that no second appeal lies in this case, and this contention, we think, must succeed. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 87 of the Act enacts that an appeal shall lie in the prescribed manner and to the prescribed officer from decisions passed under sub-sec. (1). By an order of the Local Government which has power to act in this matter, the prescribed officer is the Judicial Commissioner, and it is argued that an appeal lying to him from a decision of a Revenue Officer, there can be no second appeal. It is admitted that the provisions of sec. 100, C. P. C., must be excluded either expressly or by implication. There is no express exclusion in this Act; but we think on looking at the frame-work of this Act, that it is intended that no second appeal should lie to this Court. An appeal is provided for, as we have said, in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 87, and if there is to be a further appeal we must then look to the provisions of sec. 224 of the Act, which says, that "A second appeal shall lie to the High Court, under Chap. XLII of the Code of Civil Procedure, from any appellate decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner under this chapter, or from any order passed by him on appeal under sec. 215, sub-sec. (3)." We are of opinion that sec. 87 has been deliberately excluded from its scope. We are led further to this conclusion by a consideration of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act from which this Act has been very closely adapted. Reading sec. 87 with sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it seems to us that it is by implication provided that there shall be no second appeal in cases arising under that section.

We therefore hold that there is no second appeal in this case.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

COXE, J.—I agree. It appears to me that cl. (2), sec. 87 read with sec. 264, sub-sec. (1), cl. (8) is tantamount to an express provision of law within the meaning of sec. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure that these appeals should be heard by the prescribed officers and should not be heard by officers other than those. I only desire to state that in the case of Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1), to which we have been referred, there is nothing that in any way limits the scope of sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in so far as it relates to suits between landlord and tenant.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Rule No. 5356.—We have then to consider this Rule. The Rule was on the Opposite Party to show cause why the decision complained of should not be set aside. The decision arrived at was that the Petitioner was a tenant for life and not possessed of a tenancy of a hereditary nature. It is argued on his behalf that the Judicial Commissioner acted without jurisdiction in deciding this question. Under sec. 87, however, it is the duty of the Settlement Officer to decide the matters contained in sec. 81, para. (b). It, therefore, was clearly his duty to decide the question which he has decided and we cannot see that there is any room for the contention that he has acted without jurisdiction.

The Rule is discharged without costs.

Company, proprietors of zemindari forming into a, if opposed to public policy.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 8 (1907).

Where the proprietors of a zemindari having grown too numerous formed themselves into a limited liability company and the company was duly registered under the provisions of the Indian Companies Act,

Held—That such a course was likely to be beneficial not merely to the proprietors themselves but to all who may be compelled to have dealings with them, and there was nothing in the constitution of the company which was opposed to public policy.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th of April 1908, against the decree of Babu Purna Chandra Dey, Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 17th of February 1908.

The Plaintiff in the suits out of which the appeals arose was a company registered under the provisions of the Companies Act VI of 1882. The suits were instituted by the Plaintiff for the specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease alleged to have been entered into with the Plaintiff by the proprietors of a certain share in a zemindari called the Khororiah Borozilla of which the Appellant, Lal Gopal Dutt, was also a part-owner. It was alleged in the plaint that in breach of the aforesaid agreement the proprietors aforesaid had granted a lease in favour of the Appellant, Lal Gopal Dutt, and that the Appellant had full knowledge and notice of the agreement. The Appellant as well as his lessors were joined as Defendants in the suit. The Defendants set up various pleas in defence of which the only one material to this report was that the company was not constituted for a bonâ fide purpose and the suit could not lie at its instance. The Subordinate Judge found upon this point that the members of Company were the proprietors of a zemindari called the Khororiah Majozilla, that when the proprietors became too many in number and were unable to manage the property, some of them formed themselves into a limited company under Act VI of 1882, with a view to saving the estate from being wasted way, and its members, as stated by one of its directors, Bhupendra Kumar Dutt, intended to protect themselves from incurring liabilities in regard to the estate and to save themselves from criminal prosecution which might arise by reason of dissensions amongst themselves. The taking of putnis and other leases of zemindari properties was specified in the memorandum of association of the company as one of the objects for which it was constituted and the company started by taking a 99 years' lease of the Khororiah Majozilla zemindari itself. No outsiders appear to have been taken in as a shareholder and the shares taken by the members were in proportion to their interest in the zemindari. It was objected on behalf of the Defendants that the company was constituted for an unlawful object and that the lease having been virtually taken by the proprietors from themselves was an illusory transaction and conferred no title on the company, supposing it was lawfully constituted. The Subordinate Judge held that the company was in the eye of law a different person from the proprietors of the zemindari, [Farrar v. Farrars (1)], and that its object was not unlawful and its constitution was not opposed to public policy and that the suits were maintainable at its instance. On the merits the Subordinate Judge found in favour of the Plaintiff and decreed the suits.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT in so far as it dealt with the Appellant's objection regarding the constitution of the company was in the following terms :—

"Next it is argued that the suit is not maintainable because the company is a bogus company. This contention however is too intangible to be dealt with. It has not been shown to us that the constitution of the company offends against the provisions of the Companies Act, but it has been argued that the shareholders of the company being identical with the proprietors of the land its recognition would be contrary to public policy. The learned counsel for the Appellant however has been unable to show us how the existence of this company injures or endangers the rights of anybody. Indeed if the proprietors are numerous and their separate interests are minute the adoption of this means for the management of their property would seem to be beneficial not only to themselves but to all who may be compelled to have dealings with them."

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 253 (10)
—Partnership business carried on after death of partner on the assumption of representative continuing as partner—Widow of deceased, a purdannahin lady, not taking any part in business and not examining accounts—Accountability of working partners—Accounts to commence from beginning of partnership, if accounts not settled—Partnership money, diversion of—Accounting with interest or profits—Remuneration to working partner—Balancing of accounts, effect of.

Where on the death of a partner the business was carried on on the assumption that his widow was a partner.

Held—That the conduct of the parties showed that there must have been a contract between the original parties that the partnership would not be dissolved by the death of a partner within the meaning of cl. (10) of sec. 253 of the Indian Contract Act, but should be continued with the representative of the deceased as a partner.

The mere balancing of account in a book of account does not of itself constitute an account stated much less does it constitute an account settled which the parties cannot reopen.

In a general account of partnership dealings the time from which the account is to be, in is the commencement of the partnership unless some account has since that time been settled by the partners in which case the last settled account will be the point of departure.

Where one of the partners having the right to examine the partnership accounts did not for a long time exercise the right :

Held—That unless fraud was established purchases and sales in respect of the business by the working partners should not be challenged, but they were bound to account for sums withdrawn from the partnership business and applied for purposes unconnected therewith with the profits realised therefrom or with interest at the option of the partner demanding the account.

Where one of the partners wilfully leaves the others to carry on the partnership business unaided the Court may upon dissolution decree an allowance in favour of the partner who had carried on the business alone.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of May 1910, against the decree of E. P. Chapman, Esq, Additional District Judge of Zillah 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 18th of March 1910, modifying the decree of Babu Aghore Chandra Hazra, Subordinate Judge, first Court, of that district, dated the 19th of July 1909.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is directed against the preliminary decree in a suit for dissolution of a partnership business, for adjustment of accounts, and for incidental reliefs. The claim of the Plaintiff related to four firms in respect of which she alleged that her husband, and after his death, she herself, was partner with the Defendants. In the original Court, the suit was dismissed on the ground that all the partners had not been joined as Defendants. The District Judge, on appeal, reversed that decision, and gave the Plaintiff an opportunity for the proper constitution of the suit. Upon remand the Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiff was entitled to a decree for dissolution and gave directions as to the mode in which the business was to be dissolved and accounts taken. Upon appeal the learned District Judge has affirmed this decision with two important variations, namely, first, that the Plaintiff was entitled to a decree for dissolution in respect of one of the firms only, from the income of which the other firms appear to have been established by the Defendants, and, secondly, that the Plaintiff was not entitled to interest on sums overdrawn by the Defendants. The Defendants have appealed to this Court, and, on their behalf, the decree of the District Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the direction as to the mode in which the accounts are to be taken are unjust and erroneous, and, secondly, that the Defendants are entitled to remuneration on account of their services in the management of the firm. The Plaintiff has contested the validity of these arguments, and has further urged that she is entitled to claim interest on amounts overdrawn by the Defendants. We may add that when the appeal was first called on for hearing, it was argued on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants that the suit was not properly constituted as parties interested in the partnership had not been served with notice, either in the primary Court or in the Court of appeal below. Whereupon directed notices to be issued upon such persons. But they have not entered appearance in response to the notice; in other words, in spite of the best efforts of the Plaintiff, no one has come forward to claim an interest in the partnership transactions. We are satisfied that there is no substance whatever in the contention that the suit as framed is open to objection on the ground of defect of parties. We shall therefore proceed to consider the objections urged against the decree of the District Judge.

The first point taken on behalf of the Defendants is that the District Judge has not given proper directions as to the manner in which the accounts are to be taken. It has been suggested that the Plaintiff is not entitled to claim any account at all by reason of her laches. The partnership was commenced on the 19th November 1883 between the husband of the Plaintiff and the Defendants. The husband of the Plaintiff died in 1887. It has been found that since his death the business has been conducted on the assumption that the Plaintiff was a partner. Consequently, no question arises whether the partnership was or was not dissolved in 1887, under cl. (10) of sec. 253 of the Indian Contract Act. That section provides that in the absence of a contract to the contrary the relations of partners are determined by the death of any partner. There is no direct evidence to shew what was the contract between the parties in this respect at the inception of the partnership; but the Subordinate Judge has held—and his view does not appear to have been contested before the District Judge—that the conduct of the parties since 1887 shews that these must have been a contract between the original parties that the partnership would not be dissolved by the death of any partner. There is no room for the theory that after the death of the husband of the Plaintiff a new partnership was constituted between herself and the surviving partners. The true view is that the original partnership was continued by common consent with this difference that the Plaintiff replaced her husband and this condition of things can be explained only on the hypothesis that the contract between the founders of the partnership was that it was not to be dissolved by the death of any of the partners. The position since 1887 has consequently been that the Defendants have managed the business and kept the accounts. The Plaintiff as a pardanashin Hindu lady could hardly have been expected to take an active interest in the actual management of the trading concern. She might, no doubt, have employed an agent to examine the accounts from time to time. Indeed, the case for the Defendants is that the accounts were settled from year to year. This, however, has been negatived by the Courts below, and in our opinion very properly. It is well settled that the mere balancing of an account in a book of accounts does not of itself constitute an account stated, much less does it constitute an account settled such as the parties would not be entitled to re-open except on special grounds, Clancarty v. Latouche (1). The contention of the Defendants that there has been a settled account cannot therefore be sustained nor can the position be maintained that there has been such acquiescence on the part of the Plaintiff as to disentitle her to claim an account. No doubt, where an account has been rendered and has long been acquiesced in, unless fraud be proved, a Court will not re-open it, although the account may be shewn to be erroneous, and although no final settlement was ever made, Scott v. Milne (2). The same principle is acted on in taking accounts, for charges long improperly made and acquiesced in, or long omitted to be made and known so to be, are regarded, in the absence of fraud, as having been made or omitted by agreement, Thornton v. Proctor (3). This principle has obviously no application to the present case. The Defendants were fully aware that as they were in charge of the business and kept the accounts they were liable to render accounts to the Plaintiff who as a pardanashin Hindu lady could not herself take part in the management or control the accounts. As already explained, their case is that such accounts have been rendered. This defence has failed. They cannot now very well turn round and contend that they were under the impression that the accounts as entered by them in the books of the firm were accepted by the Plaintiff. But although the Plaintiff is not disentitled to claim an account, the question may very well arise as to the extent to which the accounts are to be taken. No question of limitation obviously arises. As the partnership had not been dissolved before suit, Art. 106 of the Limitation Act, 1877, would have no application, Harrison v. Delhi and London Bank (4); in other words, as put in Foster v. Hodgson (5), so long as a partnership continues, the statute of limitation does not apply at all as between the partners. Art. 120 would consequently govern the present suit. If therefore no question of limitation arises, the point requires consideration, what is the period for which the accounts have to be taken. There can be no question that the time from which the account is to begin in a general account of partnership dealings and transactions is the commencement of the partnership, unless some account has since that time been settled by the partners, in which case the last settled account will be the point of departure, Cook v. Collingridge (6). In the present case, there has been no such settled account; consequently, the accounts must be taken from the inception of the partnership. It is clear also that the accounts must be taken of all dealings and transactions up to the date of the dissolution, Beak v. Beak (7), Jones v. Noy (8). It has been contended, however, with considerable force by the learned Vakil for the Defendants-Appellants that, as the Plaintiff was entitled to exercise her right of examining the books and accounts of the firm by an agent appointed by her for that purpose, Beavan v. Webb (9), and as she has never chosen to exercise such right, it would be a great hardship upon the Defendants if they were called upon now to justify the purchases and sales on account of the firm at this distance of time, many years after the transactions have taken place. The learned Vakil for the Plaintiff-Respondent has appreciated the force of this contention and has stated that the Plaintiff is not anxious to require the Defendants to justify the ordinary items. Her grievance is that sums have been paid out in an obviously unauthorised manner, and that the Defendants ought to be called upon to account for such sums. The payments so made have been classified under four heads, namely, first, sums paid by way of remuneration to the Defendants, secondly, sums paid to Mohesh Chandra De, the nephew of the husband of the Plaintiff, or to creditors of Mohesh, thirdly, sums paid to Bindubashini, the widow of Mohesh Chandra, and, fourthly, sums paid to the Defendants which they have invested in very profitable business. In so far as payments of the first of these four classes are concerned, we shall deal with the matter when we consider the second ground urged by the Appellants. In so far as the second and third classes of payments are concerned, the Defendants are obviously liable to render an account. Their case throughout has been that Mohesh Chandra De was one of the partners of the firm, and that after his death, his widow also continued to be a partner. This defence has completely failed. The payments made to Mohesh or his creditors or to his widow cannot therefore be justified on the ground that they were payments made to a partner. But it has been suggested on behalf of the Defendants that Mohesh had rendered services to the firm, for which he was entitled to remuneration. That is a question which remains to be investigated; if it is established that Mohesh was entitled to remuneration for services rendered, a reasonable amount of remuneration may be set off against the sums paid out to him, his creditors or his widow. The remainder, however, must be deemed as unauthorised payments for which the Defendants are bound to render an account. In so far as payments of the fourth class are concerned, it is clear that the Defendants are liable to render an account. If it is established that they have withdrawn sums from the partnership business and applied them for purposes unconnected therewith they are bound to render an account for the sums so withdrawn. It follows, consequently, that the Defendants are liable to render an account from the commencement of the partnership business, that unless fraud is established, the ordinary items relating to purchases and sales in respect of the business are not to be challenged, but that the Defendants must render an account with regard to the four classes of payments just mentioned.

The second point taken on behalf of the Defendants is that they were entitled to remuneration on account of their services in the management of the firm. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded. It may be conceded as put by Lord Wynford in Thompson v. Williamson (10), under ordinary circumstances, the contract of partnership excludes any implied contract for payment of services rendered for the firm by any of its members; consequently in the absence of any agreement to that effect, one partner cannot charge his co-partners with any sum for compensation, whether in the shape of salary, commission or otherwise, on account of his own trouble in conducting the partnership business, and in this respect a managing partner is in no different position from any other partner, Hutcheson v. Smith (11). This doctrine has been applied even where the amount of the services rendered by the partners is exceedingly unequal. In such a case, a remuneration to be paid to either partner for personal labour exceeding that contributed by the other is considered as left to the honour of the other, and it has been said that where that principle is wanting a Court of Justice cannot supply it. [Webster v. Bray (12), where an allowance for trouble was made to the Defendant, because it was offered by the Plaintiff; Robinson v. Anderson (13), where no allowance was offered and none was given by the Court]. Where, however, it is the duty of each partner to attend to the partnership business and one partner in breach of his duty wilfully leaves the other to carry on the partnership business unaided, the Court may, upon dissolution of partnership, decree an allowance in favour of the partner who had carried on the business alone, Airey v. Borham (14). In the case before us, the circumstances are peculiar; the Plaintiff is a purdanashin lady and is unable, by reason of her station in life, to take an active interest in the management of the partnership business, the responsibility for the conduct of which has naturally been thrown upon the Defendants. In view of these facts, we expressed our opinion that it was just and equitable that some allowance should be made in favour of the Defendants. The Plaintiff thereupon offered remuneration at the rate of Rs. 150 a year. In our opinion, this is reasonable and we direct accordingly that when the accounts are taken, the Defendants be credited with remuneration at the rate of Rs. 150 a year from the time of the death of the husband of the Plaintiff. If the Defendants have credited themselves with any sum in excess of Rs. 150 a year, by way of remuneration, they must account for the difference.

The point urged on behalf of the Plaintiff against the decree of the District Judge, raises the question, whether the Defendants are liable to pay interest on sums withdrawn by them from the partnership business. The learned District Judge has disallowed the claim for interest, and the learned Vakil for the Defendants has sought to justify this view by reference to the case of Meymott v. Meymott (15). He has argued that except where there has been fraudulent retention, as in Hutcheson v. Smith (10), or an improper application, as in Evans v. Coventry (16), a partner ought not to be charged with interest on money of the firm in his hands, Webster v. Bray (12), Stevens v. Cook (17). It may be conceded that this is a sound rule, but in our opinion it is of no assistance to the Defendant's. The case for the Plaintiff is—and her allegation has been accepted by the Courts below—that the Defendants have, from time to time, withdrawn large sums of money from the partnership business, and applied them to establish other firms from which they have earned large profits. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to appreciate how the Defendants can resist the claim for interest. If the money had been retained and laid out judiciously or applied for the legitimate expansion of the business of the firm, the Plaintiff would have been entitled to the additional profit. This is clearly a case where some of the partners have, without the assent of the other partner wrongfully used in trade funds which were not their exclusive property. They are clearly liable to restore the property and to make the owner proper compensation. In our opinion, the Plaintiff under these circumstances would be entitled, at her option, either to take interest or the profits made by the use of the funds. Although she claimed the latter alternative in the original Court, she has not put forward any such claim before us; she has contented herself in this Court with a claim for interest. This is clearly unanswerable, Yates v. Finu (18), Booth v. Farkes (19), Docker v. Somes (20). When the accounts therefore come to be taken, not only must the Defendants account for all sums overdrawn by them and applied for purposes unconnected with the firm, but also pay interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum from the date when the sums were overdrawn to the date of the final decree of the lower Court.

The result is that the appeal and the cross-objections must both be allowed in part; the decree of the District Judge will be varied and the accounts will be taken in the manner explained in this judgment. Subject to the variation indicated, his decree will be affirmed. There will be no order as to the costs in this Court.

Appeal and cross objection allowed.
